REST AT LAST.

TOLSTOI IS DEAD.

End Comes Quietly to Great Russian.

Countess Is at Bedside When Noted Husband Breathes Last at Astapova.

Distinguished Philosopher Refuses Appeal of Church That Spurned Him.

Flight in Effort to Pass His Closing Days in Retirement Proves Fatal.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ASTAPOVA (Russia), Sunday, Nov. 20.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Count Leo Tolstoi, the greatest of Russia's philosophers and one of the greatest of her writers, died here quietly this morning.

Up to his last gasp the Count refused to return to the fold of the Russian Orthodox Church. To a final appeal he made the same answer that he gave many years ago when he was thought to be on his deathbed:

"Even in the valley of the shadow of death," he told those who pleaded with him, "two and two does not make six."

The end was not a surprise to the members of Count Tolstoi's family, most of whom were at his bedside. Since yesterday they have known that there was no hope for his recovery. The Count has only been kept alive by means of oxygen. The end came to him like a sleep. Gradually he drifted into semi-consciousness, then into unconsciousness and finally the worn-out heart ceased to beat.

Count Tolstoi passed out of life as a clock which has run down stops ticking. The failure of his vital powers began some time ago when the fact that he was a victim of senile debility became apparent to everyone. It was not until November 11, however, that old age attacked his brain. On that day word came from Tula that he had left his home at Yasnaia Poliana announcing that he intended to end his days in a monastery.

The young Countess Tolstoi, his daughter, frantic with grief, set out after him. She found him on the following day at the estate of Abrikosofs in the Mount Senaky district.

They started home again, but at the railway station at Astapova, eighty miles from Yasnaia Poliana, the Count was stricken with his final illness. The day following came a report of his death, but this proved to be unfounded. It was learned, however, that there was little hope of recovery.

At a a.m. today Dr. Berkenheim, with tears in his eyes, left the bedchamber. At that hour the doctors would express no definite opinion to the correspondents as to the outcome.

Countess Tolstoi and the other members of the family had been admitted to the sick room while the patient was sleeping.

Tolstoi suffered several serious attacks of heart failure during the night. In the early morning hours these followed each other in rapid succession, but were quickly relieved.

During one of the heart attacks Tolstoi was alone with his eldest daughter, Tatina. He suddenly clutched her hand and drew her to him. He seemed to be choking, but was able to whisper:

"Now the end has come; that is all."

WARNING IN BULLETIN.

The doctors in attendance upon Tolstoi issued the following bulletin at 5 a.m.:

"There has been a sharp deterioration in the activity of the heart. Condition extremely dangerous."

Between the first and second attack of heart failure the members of the family were admitted to the bedside. The attacks came in quick succession after that until the end.

Tolstoi's condition after each attack was what the attending physicians called, "deceptively encouraging."

The patient slept for a little while, seemingly breathing more comfortably than usual. Dr. Thichurovsky and Dr. Usoff, nevertheless, in a statement to Tolstoi's son, Michael, held out but slight hope and did not hesitate to predict a quick end under ordinary mortal circumstances.

When Tolstoi, alone with his daughter, suddenly clutched her hand and chokingly whispered, "Now the end has come; that is all," she was greatly frightened and tried to free herself so she might call the doctor, but her father would not release her.

She called loudly from where she sat. The physicians injected camphor, which had an almost immediate effect in relieving the pressure.

Tolstoi soon raised his head and then

Aged Man Who Weds Young Woman Avers She Snores Loud, Too.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PEORIA (Ill.) Nov. 19.—William Morris, aged 80, took a bride twenty years his junior and the couple commenced housekeeping in Peoria. That was two weeks ago. Today the bride swore out a warrant for her husband's arrest on a charge of desertion. He will be given a hearing Monday. The bridegroom says his wife had cold feet, snored loudly and was in many other ways an undesirable companion. He required the furniture company who had outfitted their home to take away the articles purchased.

UNCLE SAM WILL AID MEXICO IN SUPPRESSING FILIBUSTERS.

Anarchist Ringleader Who Started Puebla Battle in Which Hundred, at Least, Were Killed, Slain in Tunnel Where He Had Sought Refuge.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mexico and the United States have an understanding that any revolutionists or filibusters creating trouble on the border shall be promptly suppressed and if necessary wiped out. This was the word brought from the Mexican Embassy this afternoon by a resident of Mexico who had gone there for information.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 19.—Estimates of the number killed in the fight between soldiers and police on one side and revolutionists on the other at Puebla continued today to be placed at from 100 to 170. Dispatches from that city say it was certain over 100 had been killed in the conflict.

Aquiles Cerdan, whose house was the scene of the fight, was killed while resisting arrest in a tunnel where he had taken refuge. He fought to the last firing at the officers as soon as they found his hiding place.

According to late advices from Puebla there was no fear of further trouble, as the troops were in control of the situation. It was said that many factory employees were still talking in a revolutionary vein, but that there was no danger of another outbreak.

The fighting was confined to the vicinity of the Cerdan house, where many revolutionists had gathered to discuss plans for an uprising scheduled for tomorrow and where many guns had been concealed. Secret service men heard of the meeting, and the authorities ordered a squad of police to break it up.

MEET RESISTANCE.

When the officers approached the house they met with resistance from the opponents, who began to fire from the windows and balconies. Calls for reinforcements were sent to headquarters and later soldiers joined the police.

It was in the early stages of the fight that the daughter of Cerdan shot down the Chief of Police and from that time until the surrender probably two thousand shots were fired by both sides.

The fray lasted for three hours and during that time a constant fire from the besieged and besiegers was kept up. Many of the soldiers went to the tops of adjoining buildings, some to church towers, and from those points of vantage poured a steady stream of bullets into the home of Cerdan.

From within the dwelling the revolutionists returned the shots. Those who fell under the fire of the besieged lay in the street until the fray ended, which was only after the rebels had exhausted their ammunition.

FORTY CAPTURED.

Upon a slackening of fire from within the house the troops rushed it and captured some forty survivors.

Not a pane of glass remained in the window frames of the house, the doors were riddled and hundreds of bullets were embedded in the walls, while dead and wounded lay in the yard, rooms and halls.

Telegrams from Torreon in Northern Mexico say four men were arrested today when the police broke up a meeting of Maderistas.

Papers which are said to have revealed plans for an assault upon a bank as the first move in the proposed insurrection, were seized.

READY FOR UPRISING.

Notwithstanding prevalent rumors of a proposed uprising against the government tomorrow, the authorities appear to feel no uneasiness over the prospect. Various regiments are under arms tonight and will be ready for

SUFFRAGETTES EAGER FOR JAIL.

RELEASED IN COURT THEY "BOO" AND HISS AT DECISION.

One Hundred Sixteen Willing Martyrs to Votes for Women Cause, Arrested for Attempt to Force Audience With Asquith, Angry at Being Given Liberty.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All parties have now entered upon the election campaign in dead earnest and floodgates of hustling oratory have been thrown open.

The suffragettes are well provided with campaign funds but the public has lost interest in them.

To their chagrin the 116 arrested yesterday while trying to force an audience with Premier Asquith were discharged in the Bow Street Police Court today.

They were released on bail last night. When arraigned today the Crown attorney announced that Secretary Churchill had decided on the ground of public policy that no benefit would be gained by proceeding with the prosecution.

The willing martyrs to the cause of woman suffrage received this statement with hisses and boos.

PRINCESS AND KAISER IN TIFF OVER SUFFRAGE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] According to Berlin society gossip Princess Victoria has signalised her coming of age by having a serious tiff with the Kaiser, her father, over her enthusiastic support of the emancipation of women.

The Princess does not share her imperial father's enthusiasm for kitchen and domestic interests, and she argued with him at length about his famous speech against woman's suffrage recently.

The Kaiser, who is very anxious to keep the Princess in a state of girlhood as long as possible, was astonished by his daughter's obvious grasp of the latest emancipation arguments and horror struck by her obvious intention to use her influence to help girls to independence.

The Princess is said to have argued that the position of women in Germany is ridiculously mediaeval. The German idea of woman's mission is to catch an officer for a husband, using her dowry or pretty face as bait. The Princess said that, women being more and more compelled to enter the arena in the struggle for a livelihood, it was imperative that the Kaiser stop talking about woman's proper place being the nursery or the kitchen.

By way of giving public expression to her feelings, the Princess paid a long surprise visit to the Lette Society Institute for teaching young women how to earn a livelihood and independence.

The authorities of the institute hurriedly sent for quantities of roses to decorate the reception room.

MAKES FOOTBALL WORTH WHILE.

GRITTY BULLDOGS OF YALE HOLD HARVARD TO THE END.

Boasted Crimson Offense Melts Before Eli's Stonewall Defense, While Her Clever Backfield Goes to Pieces Under the Strain---Score a Tie.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) Nov. 19.—A drawn and scoreless battle was fought out on Yale field today between Yale and Harvard. To the adherents of the Blue it was a moral victory, for their team, which "came back" to defeat Princeton, proved too strong for the all-powerful Crimson, which came here confident of victory.

This is the third time that Yale has rallied at the eleventh hour to cheat Harvard of a victory, the others, in 1897 and 1899, being on Soldiers' Field and under conditions somewhat like those of this season. In those years Yale had a disastrous mid-season but recovered when the time came for the supreme test.

In the game today both teams were very strong on the defense, but the wonderful mechanism which Harvard has shown all through the season went to naught owing to costly fumbles.

Poor generalship also told its tale, for Harvard elected to rush, with downs to spare, instead of trying a field goal which seemed to promise success. The fumbles were the critical points in the game. The Harvard team had gone through the season with a clean record of handling the ball. It seemed to be one of her strong cards, but failure by two of the backs, Wigglesworth and Corbett, to cling to the pigskin in tight places, probably cost her the victory. Yale could not withstand the battering.

Once the Harvard rushes were for 33 yards, a first down each time, and in the last period Corbett had carried the ball to the 12-yard line when it went to Yale by bad judgment.

Harvard always was the aggressor, Yale made few consistent gains. The Minnesota shift used in several variations was worked for a gain on the first formation, but the next time almost invariably the play would be stopped by Harvard backs. Howe, the Yale quarter-back, supported the general idea of the Yale defense by constantly punting and he sent the ball high in the air, giving Kilpatrick and Brooks, the ends, time to get under it and tackle the runner. It was the wonderful work of the two ends and Field's tackling that shone in Yale's game.

The entire Yale team was quicker in action, its formations were thrown out and shifted over with great speed, and when the ball was put in play there was every evidence that the men had been trained in the fundamentals which for years have been the wonder of the football world.

The Yale line, in face of the boring of Wendell, who seemed to open up holes by sheer strength, was surprisingly compact. Daly was not used a great deal at plunging, owing, it is understood, to a weak knee. He was reserved until the latter part of the game, and his opportunity came just before the end, when he tried a drop kick from the 25-yard line, but it was deflected by the wind.

As to Harvard, the disappointment was the running of the team by Quarter-back Wigglesworth and the fumbling of the backs. Wigglesworth was taken out and Potter and Gardner were substituted, but the coaches pushed the little quarter-back into the game, and each time errors of judgment followed. The Harvard team as a whole was the same compact and well-drilled team of

ALL THERE SUNDAY.

All the Old and Favorite Features of "The Times" in Next Sunday's Issue.

With its new octuple press running, its fine sextuple color press once more in working order, and two other great perfecting presses agoing, The Times will be able to restore next Sunday every one of its popular features and departments.

The Times has printed for the past month the biggest Sunday newspaper on earth with the most advertising; but there have been some things lacking, on account of the injury to its equipment by the heartbreaking disaster of October 1.

Gradually, the equipment, typographical, dynamical, art, engraving, stereotyping, printing, and all, has been rehabilitated. The coming week will see The Times able to cope with any mechanical or journalistic emergency. Next Sunday's issue will be a Colossus and a beauty, with nothing worth while left out.

IN CONFERENCE.

RESENT LISSNER.

State Senators Not to Kowtow.

Say They Will Decline to Take Orders From the Officious Boss.

Turn Down His Scheme for Programming the Legislative Session.

Insurgents Unanimously Vote for Radical Changes in the Primary Law.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An attack on Meyer Lissner, chairman of the Republican State Committee, has been sounded. His strength has been with the insurgent element of his party and that very wing has decided to turn him down.

The fifteen or more State Senators who are holding a conference here with Governor-elect Johnson and Lieut.-Gov.-elect Wallace have unanimously agreed to repudiate the man who claims the lion's share for their victory in the late election.

Lissner stirred up a hornet's nest when he called a meeting of the State Committee a few days ago and appointed numerous committees of Senators and Assemblymen, at the same time directing them to carry out his pet schemes at the coming session of the Legislature.

A group of the insurgent Senators in the Hotel Potter tonight discussed the matter and when one of them exclaimed, "It was a high-handed piece of business and I do not intend to stand for it," the others nodded their approval. They declared they would not serve on the committees nor will they pay any [illegible] tions as laid down by Lissner.

"If we should heed Lissner we would lose our individuality," one said. "Each Senator has his own ideas on legislative matters and I am going to do as I please."

One of the most important matters taken up by the conference today was the direct primary law. They unanimously agreed to work for its amendment. The nominating petition feature is to be eliminated and an amendment made to the advisory vote provision. The holdover insurgent Senators fought the advisory vote for two weeks at the last Legislature and they are determined to either modify or kill it this time. Their reason for concerted action on this bill is its effect on the United States Senatorship. The Senators feel in duty bound to vote for the candidate endorsed by the voters of their districts at the primary election. If they do many of them will have to support A. G. Spalding although they are personally for Works and they do not propose to let such a condition be presented to them in the future.

Governor-elect Johnson arrived this morning. He will remain several days. However, the conference will end tomorrow with a luncheon at Shepard's Inn.

The following statement was issued by the Senators late tonight:

The informal gathering of a number of holdover Senators and Senators-elect considered merely in an advisory manner the following subjects:

First—The matter of enacting prompt legislation early in the coming session to meet the emergency caused by the passage of Constitutional Amendment No. 1 was discussed.

Second—Suggestions were made to so amend the rules of the Senate as to lengthen the working hours of the same and to enable the routine business to be transacted rapidly and efficiently.

Third—Various methods were discussed for amending the direct primary law to secure simplicity and a more direct reflection of the choice of the voters.

Fourth—The matter of devising means to elect and organize an able body of attaches with a view of decreasing their number and securing more efficient services was carefully considered.

Fifth—The details of the various matters of legislation set forth in the party platform were discussed, and the manner of carrying them through into proper legislative enactment. It was, of course, the sense of those present that the pledges of the party platform should be carried out in their entirety.

Sixth—The question of United States Senatorship was by unanimous agreement, not considered in any of its phases. The Governor-elect and Lieutenant-Governor-elect were present as the guests of Senator L. H. Roseberry to meet the various Senators and to join in the general discussions.

OUT OF JAIL, WILL WED.

Robin Cooper, Cleared of Charge of Carmack Murder, to Marry Railway President's Daughter.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The engagement of Robin Cooper, cleared of the charge of murdering Senator Edward Ward Carmack on the streets of Nashville, Tenn., November 9, 1908, only three days ago, to Miss Eva Lee Smith, daughter of Milton H. Smith, president of the Louisville and Nashville Railway, was announced by the family of the bride-to-be this afternoon. The date of the wedding has not yet been announced.

After two years of worry and notoriety, the other side of the life of Robin Cooper, which hitherto has been hidden from the prying glare of the limelight, has come into view. In college Cooper and Milton Smith, Jr., were fast chums and through the brother, it is said, young Cooper and Miss Smith met.

Great Russian Philosopher Meets Dramatic End.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

NOTABLE LIFE OF LEO TOLSTOI.

Erratic, Earnest, He Fought for Russian Peasants.

His Youth Was Wild; Sought Duel With Turgenieff.

Home Surroundings Ideal but Wife Saw Mistakes.

Count Tolstoi was born at Yasnaia, Poliana, on August 28, 1828. His father was Count Nikolai Ilyitch, who served in the Pavlograd Regiment of Hussars, being taken prisoner by the French in the campaign of 1812. He is pictured under the name of Rostof in "War and Peace." Tolstoi's mother was Princess Volkonskaya. She was descended from a Montenegrin family, and died when the famous author was 5 years old. By descent he was closely related to the Trubetskoi and the Gortchakof families.

As a child Tolstoi was frolicsome and lively. He described himself somewhat in his book, "Boyhood."

"I was modest by nature," he wrote, "but my modesty was still further increased by my conviction of my own ugliness. My appearance, I was convinced, was ungainly, and I could not even console myself with the usual compensating comfort. I could not say that I had an expressive, intelligent or aristocratic face. There was no expression in it at all—the most ordinary, coarse and homely features; small gray eyes, which, especially when I looked at the glass seemed stupid rather than intelligent.

HIS FACE SELF-MIRRORED.

"There was still less of anything manly. Notwithstanding the fact that I was not of short statue, and very strong for my years, all the features of my face were soft, flabby and unformed. There was nothing whatever about it that spoke of gentle birth. On the contrary, my face was exactly like a mushik's, and I had the same kind of big feet and hands, and this seemed to me at that time very disgraceful."

Count Tolstoi entered the University of Kazan, but in 1846 he suddenly left the school and returned home without taking his degree. It may be that the real secret of this action lay in the fact that he had become addicted to gambling. He took part in the Crimean War, and wrote the famous "Sevastopol" sketches, which, when he went to Petersburg, gave him rank among the literary lights of the capital. He was then about 26.

"During this time," he says in his "Confession," "I tried to perfect my will. I made rules for myself and tried to follow them. I perfected myself physically by all sorts of exercises, developing my strength and agility, and by all sorts of penance accustoming myself to patience and endurance. And all this I considered perfection when applied to myself.

TRIES TO BE BETTER.

"It was at first moral perfection, but it quickly changed into a desire to be better not only in my own eyes or before God, but to be better before other men. And quickly this endeavor to be better before men changed into a desire to be stronger than others.

"I am ashamed to think of this. Ambition for honor and power and wealth, pride, anger, vengeance—all these results of individual strength were prized by men, and I, manifesting these hideous passions, became like other grown-up men, and therefore gained their approbation."

At the time he went to Petersburg, mingling with the literary circles and for a time forgetting all his resolves to be better, he is described as being a beardless youth, dressed in a tight-fitting military coat with standing cloth collar. His forehead was broad, contracted over the nose, which was large and wide; his mouth was large but pleasant; he had a slight mustache, black hair, deep, cavernous eyes and a firm chin.

According to his own account, confirmed by those who knew him well, he was wild, reckless and overbearing. He is said not to have had much faith in the sincerity of his fellow men, and his piercing glance made more than one speaker tremble in his presence. He took delight in disturbing preconceived opinions and in exasperating his friends. This is illustrated by his famous quarrel with Turgenieff.

CHALLENGE TO TURGENIEFF.

He seems to have set himself to the task of irritating the great calm lion that Turgenieff was. When at last the quarrel was precipitated Tolstoi sent a challenge to Turgenieff to meet him early the next morning at a certain place, where they might cut each other's throats without witnesses. Turgenieff offered to fight the duel according to the usual regulations, but this Tolstoi refused, and declared he was not going to fight any more duels. Shortly after this Turgenieff wrote his friend Annenkof:

"I have come to a definite break with Lyof Tolstoi. Only a hair kept us from a duel. Thois time the hair did not break. The fault was mine, but it was only the result of an old hostility, of the antipathy between our two natures. I was certain that he disliked me and I could not understand why he kept insisting on making up with me. I was obliged to keep at a distance from him—it was a narrow escape that we did not face each other pistol in hand. I never liked him."

The dissipated, futile Petersburg life soon palled on the young count, and at last the idea germs that are found scattered all through his novels, even in the earliest, began to develop. He finally elaborated a system of life that proved satisfactory. He studied Greek and read the Tischedorf text of the New Testament, and made the discovery that the translations were complicated by interpolated words that altered the sense. The central command of his new faith was "Resist not evil." This simple, single restriction meant the abolition of courts and armies, of prisons and punishments.

SEES GOD REIGN ON EARTH

"Let all the world practice this doctrine of Jesus," said the Count, "and the reign of God on earth will come. If I alone practice it I shall do what I can to better my own condition and the condition of those about me."

In the same way Jesus' command "Judge not" meant to him the abolition of judicial institutions. "How can a man judge and condemn when his religion commands him to forgive all trespasses without exception?" Equally far-reaching was his reading of the Seventh Commandment and the question of personal immortality.

To this end he immediately began to organize his own life in accordance with his new theory. Man was a complex being with brute strength in back and muscles; therefore the Count plowed before breakfast and literally earned his bread in the sweat of his brow. Man had the faculty of delicate manipulation with his fingers and wrists; therefore the Count cobbled shoes. Man had a brain; therefore the Count exercised that organ by writing simple, direct stories for the masses. Man had capacities for social enjoyment; therefore the Count received his friends in the evening.

FOURFOLD LIFE OF MAN.

These in his judgment constituted the fourfold life of man, his happiness depending on the equal development of each side. He did not make him out to be a brute. He believed in art, but held that the art of the present day is designed only for the few and is incomprehensible by the masses. Such were the motives of the life of the strange Russian Socialist and reformer.

In 1856, at the close of the Crimean War Tolstoi resigned his commission and determined he would devote himself to letters. His first important work, "War and Peace," was published in 1860. This book is regarded as his masterpiece by the Russians, but the book most liked abroad and which has run through the most translations and the largest number of editions is "Anna Karenina," which appeared in 1876. Of this book Matthew Arnold, shortly before his death, spoke in the highest terms of praise, and George Meredith says Anna is the most perfectly depicted female in all the range of fiction.

With the publication of this work Tolstoi gave up all ambition to earn a reputation as a writer of novels, and began to develop a social philosophy which, in his opinion, could be used as a cure for the sorrows and sufferings of men. This philosophy is based on the literal interpretation of the words of Jesus and contemplates a life which shall carry into practical effect the maxims found in the Sermon on the Mount.

READY TO DIE IN 1890.

In 1890 Count Tolstoi published his "Kreutzer Sonata," with its odd theory of morals. About that time he began to prepare for his death. He made over to his wife and his children his entire fortune, and deposited his memoirs with the curator of the Rumyansoff Museum on condition that they should not be opened until ten years after his death. In 1893 appeared "The Kingdom of God Within Us," and in 1894 "Patriotism and Christianity," a critique of the Franco-Russian alliance.

In 1895 the Count wrote a powerful vindication of the Dukhobortsy sect which was suppressed by the Russian censor. He forwarded the matter to the London Times, which published it, and after that time he freely used the British press for the promulgation of his peculiar ideas.

COUNTESS IS BEATIFUL.

Countess Tolstoi is a beautiful and accomplished woman—one of the "unknown wives of great men," on whom so often devolve the heavy duties of raising a family under great disadvantages. In an interesting article in the Atlantic, entitled "Count Tolstoi at Home," Isabel F. Hapgood gives this account of the widow of the great Russian:

"Needless to say she never had on a low-bodiced gown, never went to the theater or a ball in all her fair young life, and to the loneliness of the country must be added the absolute loneliness during the absence of the count. When he got tired of his village school, of his experiments upon the infant peasant mind, of things in general, he could and did go away for rest. The countess did not. Decidedly the Countess Sophia Tolstoi is one of those truly feminine heroines who are cast into the shadow by a brilliant light close to them, but a heroine none the less, in more ways than need be mentioned.

TASK OF HIS WIFE.

"To her has fallen the task to rear nine healthy, handsome, well-bred children out of a much larger family which they have had; to bear the entire responsibility of the household and the business. There are few better informed women than she, few better business women, few women who are so clever and practical. It is solely from her the younger members of the family are receiving that education to fit them for the struggle with life which her husband bestowed on the elder members voluntarily."

It would seem that the countess was not in absolute sympathy with all of Count Tolstoi's theory. "All my husband's disciples," she frankly said, "are small, blond, sickly and homely, all as like one to another as a pair of old boots." And apropos of some inconsistency on his part, she remarked with equal candor that he changed his opinions every two years.

OPPOSES WAR WITH JAPAN.

Tolstoi strongly opposed the war with Japan, but, of course, his pronouncements had no effect. Toward the close of the conflict, when defeat after defeat had shown the Russian people how useless and expensive was the soldiery, how corruption ruled the camp, the government officers and the palace, and when the deep murmurs for reform became louder, Tolstoi wrote a remarkable letter to the Czar. This letter never reached the Winter Palace, but it was given a conspicuous place in European journals. The letter simply addressed the autocrat as "Dear Brother." It informed him that dissatisfaction was increasing, notwithstanding thirty years of barbarous repression.

"Brother Nicholas," wrote Tolstoi, "I will not deny that at present many regard you as one of their enemies and that they are ready to fight you to the death; and this deplorable condition is due solely to the fact that they hold you responsible for the negation of their sacred rights—liberty, education, freedom of worship. Believe me, Nicholas, that the majority of your advisers misrepresent the people, misrepresent existing conditions, and by tramping upon the people's rights commit grievous crimes against not only the people, but yourself.

"Brother Nicholas, your counselors neither deserve nor want constitutional government; they would not know what to do with it if it were granted. They tell you that orthodoxy and autocracy are essential for the people's welfare and that those forms of political and religious government must prevail in Russia till judgment day.

CZAR NOT NOW INVIOLABLE.

"Brother Nicholas, let me tell you that the times are past when the people regard the Czar as a mundane and inviolable god. The people know very well that rulers are creatures of accident, that there were good and bad Czars; yes, and indifferent Czars. If you value your crown and the happiness of your son, wife, children, relatives and people, stop the misery prevailing in Russia before it is too late. Give liberty to the working masses—political and economical liberty. Return to the people the land stolen from them. Give the peasants equal rights with the city dwellers, and make both independent of arbitrary, drunken and vile officials. Abolish the rule empowering governors to declare martial law and kill at their pleasure. Abolish every law and regulation opposed to reading, instruction and education, all class laws, and all laws interfering with worship. Forbid the punishment of persons who have deserted the orthodox church, and, above all, Brother Nicholas, listen to the voice of your people while it is respectfully expressed. If you do not, you may be forced to listen to it, under the most unfavorable circumstances."

Tolstoi closed his letter to the Czar as abruptly as he opened it. "Farewell, Nicholas," he wrote. "I have done my duty. Do yours."

It is significant that a short time after the publication of this letter the plans for the Duma were formulated.

TOLSTOI STUDIES DUMA.

But Tolstoi, who studied the curious evolution of that body with profound interest and the most anxious concern, was far from satisfied with the results which flowed from its deliberations. He was not blind to the fact that it seemed powerless to check the oppressions of the ruling class in Russia and that the discontent of the populace was growing daily more pronounced and more formidable.

This unrest was manifesting itself in acts of violence, amounting in the eyes of the Czar and his counsellors to sedition; revolutionary insurrections were matters of common occurrence, and the government resorted to summary retaliatory measures in an attempt to preserve its integrity. These outbursts were sporadic and unordered, but this only served to demonstrate how widespread was the disease; the very empire seemed crumbling to its fall.

CZAR AS "ARCHMURDERER."

Reports of military executions were printed almost daily in the news columns of the world. Peasants in the most remote provinces who had dared to steal a loaf of bread from their masters were strangled at a rope's end with political offenders and known revolutionaries. Tolstoi read of these official enormities until his mind sickened and then he penned a document without parallel in the political annals of modern times. That document, so simple, so fearless, so direct, written with all the fervor of a religious devotee and with all the humility of a great spirit profoundly stirred, was, in effect, a merciless arraignment of the Imperial government. Responsibility for the atrocities of that black period was laid upon the Czar himself, who was hailed by his subject as an "archmurderer."

Notwithstanding the position which Count Tolstoi occupied in the eyes of the civilized world, his friends feared that he had at last overstepped the bounds and gone too far; they feared that he had committed a political crime which the Czar would not overlook, and that he might have to pay with his life for his unexampled temerity. But his great fame saved him from molestation and the offense was condoned.

BEGINNING OF REBUKE.

"Seven death sentences," it was thus that terrible rebuke began, "two in St. Petersburg, one in Moscow, two in Penza and two in Riga. Four executions, two in Kherson, one in Vilna, one in Odessa.

"This is daily reported in every newspaer and continued, not for weeks, not for months, not for one year, but for years! And this is Russia, that same Russia where the people regard every criminal as a man to be pitied, and where till quite recently, capital puishment was not recognized by law! I remember how proud I used to be of that when talking to Western Europeans, but now for a second and even a third year we have executions, executions, executions, unceasingly.

"I take up today's paper.

"Today, the 9th of May, it is something awful. The paper contains these few words: 'Today in Kherson on the Strelbitsky field, twenty peasants were hanged for an attack made with intent to rob a landed proprietor's estate in the Elizabetgrad District.'

"Brother men! come to your senses! stop and think! consider what you are doing! who you are!

DEFENDS EXECUTED MEN.

"Twelve of those by whose labor we live, the very men whom we have depraved and are still depraving by every means in our power—from the poison of vodka to the terrible falsehood of a creed we do not ourselves believe in, but impose on them with all our might—twelve of these men strangled with cords by those whom they feed and clothe and house, and who have depraved and still continue to deprave them. Twelve husbands, fathers, sons, from among those on whose kindness, industry and simplicity alone rests the whole of Russian life were seized, imprisoned and shackled. Then their hands were tied behind their backs lest they should seize the ropes by which they would be hanged, and they were led to the gallows.

"Several peasants similar to those who are about to be hanged, but armed, dressed in clean soldiers' uniforms, with good boots on their feet, and with guns in their hands, accompany the condemned men. Beside them walks a long-haired man wearing a stole and vestments of gold or silver cloth and bearing a cross.

GENERAL HANGMEN BUSY.

"The procession stops. The manager of the whole business says something: the secretary reads a paper, and when the paper has been read the long-haired man, addressing those whom other people are about to strangle with cords, says something about God and Christ. Immediately after these words the hangman (there are several, for one man could not manage so complicated a business) dissolve some soap, and, having soaped the loops in the cords, that they may tighten better, seize the shackled men, put shrouds on them, lead them to a scaffold, and place the well-soaped nooses around their necks.

"And then, one after another, living men are pushed off the benches, which are drawn from under their feet, and by their own weight suddenly tighten the nooses around their necks and are painfully strangled. Men alive a minute before become corpses dangling from a rope, at first slowly swinging, and then resting motionless.

BLAMES UPPER CLASS.

"All this is carefully arranged and planned by learned and enlightened people of the upper class. They arrange to do these things secretly at daybreak so that no one should see them done, and they arrange that the responsibility for these iniquities shall be so subdivided among those who commit them that each may think and say that it is not he who is responsible for them. They arrange to seek out the most depraved and unfortunate of men, and, while obliging them to do this business, planned and approved by us, still keep up the appearance of abhorring those who do it."

After continuing in this strain for some thousands of words the document goes on:

"But you all, from the secretary of the court to the Premier and the Czar—you indirect participators in the iniquities perpetrated every day—do not seem to feel your guilt, nor the shame your participation in these horrors should evoke.

SEES CZAR OVER ALL.

"It is true, that, like the executioners, you fear men, and fear the more the greater your responsibility for the crimes; the public prosecutor more than the secretary is the president of the court; the general governor more than the president, the president of the council of ministers more still, and the czar most of all. You are all afraid, but unlike that executioner, you are afraid not because you know you are doing evil, but because you think other people do evil.

"Therefore I think that, low as that unfortunate watchman has fallen, he stands morally immeasurably higher than you, participators and past authors of these awful crimes; you who condemn others instead of yourselves and carry your heads so high.

"I know that men are but human, that we are all weak, that we all err, and that one cannot judge another. I have long struggled against the feeling that was and is aroused in me by those responsible for these awful crimes, and aroused the more the more higher they stand on the social ladder. But I neither can nor will struggle against this feeling any longer.

TOLSTOI INVITES DEATH.

"That is why I write this and will circulate it by all means in my power, both in Russia and abroad, that one of two things may happen—either that these inhuman deeds may be stopped, or that my connection with them may be snapped and I put in prison where I may be clearly conscious that these horrors are not committed on my behalf; or still better (so good that I dare not even dream of such happiness) they may put on me, as on those twenty or twelve peasants, a shroud and a cap and push me off a bench, so that by my own weight I may tighten the well-soaked noose around my old throat.

"To attain one of these two aims I address myself to all the participators in these terrible deeds, beginning with those who put on their brother men and women and children those caps and nooses—from the prison warders up to you, chief organizers and authorizers of these terrible crimes.

PUTS CZAR WITH HANGMEN.

"Before being hangmen, generals, public prosecutors, judges, premiers or czar are you not men? Today allowed a peep into God's world, tomorrow ceasing to be. (You hangmen of all grades in particular who have evoked and are evoking special hatred should remember this.) Is it possible that you, who have had this short glimpse of God's world (for even if you be not murdered death is always behind us all,) is it possible that in your lucid moments you do not see that your vocation in like cannot be to torment and kill men; yourselves trembling with fear of being killed, lying to yourselves, to others and to God, assuring yourselves and others that by participation in these things you are doing an important and grand work for the welfare of millions?

"Is it possible that when intoxicated by your surroundings, by flattery and by the customary sophistries, you do not each one of you know that all this is mere talk, only intended that while doing evil deeds you may still consider yourself a good man?

"You the feared as the hangman or a wild animal is feared. People flatter you because at heart they despise and hate you—and how they do hate you And you know it and you are afraid of men.

"Yes, consider it, all of you, from the highest to the lowest accomplices in murder; consider who you are and cease to do what you are doing. Cease not for your own sakes, not for the sake of your own personality, not for the sake of men, not that any of you may cease to be blamed, but for your soul's sake and for the God who lives within you."

RELIGIOUS VIEWS RADICAL.

On the question of religious liberty Tolstoi was extremely radical. He had suffered for his liberal views by having been excommunicated in 1901, at which time he even was threatened with exile, but powerful friends at court thwarted the scheme of the late M. Pobiedonostseff, then procurator of the Holy Synod, who had become enraged over the teachings of Tolstoi, and who desired that he be banished. Tolstoi was permitted to remain in Russia, but he was summarily cast out of the Orthodox church.

Until attacked with senile decay about seven years ago Tolstoi was a remarkable looking man. He had a bronzed and rugged countenance and a broad expanse of forehead. Shaggy eyebrows almost concealed his deep-set gray eyes, which were earnest yet kindly. He had high cheek bones, a large, almost flat nose and a generous mouth. His hair, which had whitened rapidly in the last few years, was plentiful, and he had a full gray beard. His face was of the Russian patriarchal type, but a face full of intelligence and hallowed with the light of genius.

While his family resented, in a measure, the number of callers at the Yasnaia Poliana homestead, still they were cordially welcomed by Tolstoi himself, whose "den" was a low, plainly furnished, carpetless room. About the walls, on rude shelves, were his books, and the plain deal table in the center of the room always was littered with volumes and pamphlets. Besides a chair or two, the only other article of furniture in the room was a lounge, and on this, half sitting, half reclining, Tolstoi was accustomed to do most of his reading.

His conversation was impressive without being emphatic. The certainty with which he rested upon his own convictions gave force to his words. Seldom if ever did he speak in uncertain terms; and the ring of genuineness in his declarations indicated that Tolstoi had no doubt of the way he had chosen. He spoke very good English though occasionally the German words came easiest to him. Clearness of thought and simplicity and directness of diction marked his utterances. It was only when the national church was being discussed that he displayed unwonted animation, indicating that his action against him rankled in his breast. The church was merely, Tolstoi used to declare, a priestly, heathen cult, and little else.

In his rugged, vigorous days, it was Tolstoi's custom to rise at 5 a.m., when he would dash his head, neck and breast with ice-cold water. Then he would draw on his clothes, which included only a blue-checked jumper of linen, a pair of trousers and heavy, ill-fitting peasant's boots. He seldom brushed his hair, simply combing it with the fingers of his left hand, and then he descended to breakfast. He was a vegetarian, holding to the belief that man has no right to kill and consume a living organism. Once when asked, "Is not a vegetable a living organism?" he answered, "Well, in time science may help us to such an extent that we shall not find it necessary to kill even a vegetable organism."

MOSCOW NEAREST BIG CITY.

Yasnaia Poliana, where Count Tolstoi was born, and where he lived the most of his life, is situated near the City of Tula, and is about 200 miles from Moscow. It comprises an estate of 3000 acres, which has been under cultivation for hundreds of years. Some fifty years ago the greater part of the estate was planted with birch trees, and these have yielded a large and constantly increasing revenue for firewood. The house is a large, rambling structure—with several detached wings. It stands on the summit of a small hill at the end of a long avenue shaded with the foliage of many trees. Courts, stables and other outhouses surround it, and on every side fields, woods and plantations stretch away to the edge of the horizon.

Count Tolstoi's family life was ideal. It has been said that Tolstoi's part at Yasnaia Poliana was rather that of a beloved and honored guest than of master of the household. His wife and children worshiped him and relieved him of all possible annoyance and care. A great thinker, ever occupied with the mightiest of life's problems, thousands admired the author and reformer, but the privileged few, who were intimate with his affectionate, trustful and childlike nature, loved and reverenced the man.

HOWELLS PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO TOLSTOI.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—William Dean Howells paid the following tribute to Count Tolstoi:

"I think he was a very great man and a very good man—perhaps the greatest and the best of his time. In a sense there is nothing to add to that, and moreover, I have written to what Tolstoi has meant to me in my "Literary Passions." The fact that he is dead now does not alter the significance of his work and of himself. And yet perhaps this dramatic, this painfully terrible dramatic end, may be call for something more than I have already said. It is true that Turgeniev once advised Tolstoi to stick to his writing and forget his theories of conduct, but it is a mistake to consider Tolstoi the man and the creative artist, as two separate entities that may be divorced from each other. Who attempts to divorce art and life, makes a grave error.

"Tolstoi was a realist in art and in life. It is, perhaps, difficult to estimate what his influence has been on contemporary humanity, but I should say it has been very great. He believed in taking the life of Christ for an example, for a precept, not the dogmas of the schools, and that seems to be the tendency of the younger christianity.

"In letters I cannot say that he left a cult, although it may be that three of his books—"Peace and War," "Anna Karenina" and "Resurrection"—will never be surpassed.

"But you know Shakespeare left no school, nor Milton, nor Shelley. Zola did. He was a tremendous fellow, Zola, but he is somewhat extinct now. And that's it; the lesser man has mannerisms or even a manner, and a manner can be caught, taken up, imitated, even absorbed; but a great personality is incommunicable.

"I do not pretend to try to explain Tolstoi's later days. I had never met him, never been in communication with him, but it seems to me that he believed what he lived and that he tried to live what he believed.

"It was unfortunate that his belief forced itself into such poignantly dramatic expression. There he sat at one end of the table in peasant's clothes, eating coarse food, while a footman stood at the other end of the table and served delicate viands to his family.

"There is this about such poverty as that—that it is imaginative in essence and dramatic in form rather than real. The man experienced poverty; he lived the life of the poor, wore their clothes and ate their food, but he could not feel the dread that is never lifted from the very poor—the dread of actual want tomorrow.

"It was impossible that he should actually want. We see that in the very circumstances of his death. Strive as he might, he did not die a peasant's death, unattended, cold, bare.

"Yet he was a very great and a very good man—perhaps as I have said, the greatest and best of his time."

A SURPASSING RECORD, DESPITE GREAT DISASTER.

For the month of October, the memorable month on whose first day the immense plant of The Times was blown up and burned, The Times made an unparalleled record in the volume of advertising printed in its columns.

For years, The Times has led the world in this race. Month after month it has maintained its position at the top of the list as the newspaper with the most advertising on the globe.

For the month of October, on account of the destruction of its equipment and the interruption of its business, The Times took second place—for once only in many years led by that great newspaper, the New York World. The wonderful New York daily heads the list for the month just passed. For the month of November, however, The Times expects to resume its leadership when the returns are tabulated.

Following is the record for The Times and for the large newspapers of leading cities, also for some of the other dailies of Los Angeles, giving the total number of columns of advertising published in October:

DEATH OF TOLSTOI.

drew himself up to a sitting position. When he had recovered his breath he said: "There are millions of people and many sufferers in the world. Why always anxious about me?"

Tolstoi was still putting up a hard fight against disease. The spread of inflammation of the lungs had been checked, but it had been necessary to resort to powerful stimulants frequently administered to keep the heart going.

The heart action had been very bad and late at night an attack of cardiac failure, more severe than several during the day, went far toward completing the patient's exhaustion. After the heart action had been strengthened the patient fell asleep.

Several important communications including that from Antonius the metropolitan of St. Petersburg, were not shown to him.

The condition of the Count was too grave to permit of his being agitated by written appeals to him to make his peace with the church.

HEART CEASES.

It was recognized long before that his case was hopeless and at 4 o'clock in the morning after the Countess had been summoned and other members of the family had gathered in an adjoining room the physicians issued a bulletin announcing that the activity of the heart had almost ceased, and that Tolstoi's condition was extremely dangerous.

Several of the physicians were greatly overcome by the approaching death of Russia's great writer.

Tolstoi, accompanied only by Dr. Makovetsky, left his home at Yasnaia Poliana with the purpose of ending his days in solitude to which he more and more inclined in his latter years.

His pilgrimage led him to the monastery at Shamardino, in the province of Kaluga, where he remained as the guest of his sister Marie, who is a nun in the cloister.

Learning that his retreat had been discovered, he insisted upon proceeding on his journey to the Caucasus, where he hoped to spend his last days close to the Tolstoian colony on the shores of the Black Sea.

OVERCOME BY EXHAUSTION.

But on the railroad journey he was overcome with exhaustion and the cold, and Dr. Makovetsky was compelled to have him transferred to the flag station at Astapovo, where he was made as comfortable as possible in the rude wooden building.

For five days he had lain there suffering first from bronchitis and later from inflammation of the lungs. Specialists were called from Moscow and other places, but notwithstanding their utmost efforts the heart of the great Russian responded but feebly to restoratives and stimulants administered.

On Saturday the attacks of heart failure increased alarmingly, and many hours prior to the end the physicians had given up all hope.

Countess Tolstoi was admitted to the sick room for the first time last night.

diture of $800,000 in widening and deepening the channel of the Sacramento River between these points. The delta regions would be greatly improved and the government plans provide for the damming of Three-Mile Slough which would protect this city from flood waters from the Sacramento River. Sacramento has just bonded for $75,000 for this fund.

MARRIAGE IS SHORT LIVED.

Wealthy San Jose Man Is Divorced From Mate He Alleges Was a Shrew.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN JOSE, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] J. H. Burkhart, a wealthy resident of this city, secured a divorce in the Superior Court today on the ground of cruelty. Burkhart was married in Oakland a year ago on short notice and repented with the month, he told the judge today. He said that a short time after his marriage he found that he had married a shrew and said that his wife had deserted him after accusing him of trying to "make a sacrifice to the God of Fire of her."

One evening, he said, the bed in their room was accidently fired and the woman accused him of having done it purposely with the intention of ending her life. The next day she deserted him.

He specified other instances of cruelty practised on him by his wife, and on the showing he made was given his divorce. Burkhart said in court that he had no knowledge of the present whereabouts of his wife; that he does not care where she may have gone.

STRUGGLING FOR GRUBSTAKE, HEARS OF INHERITANCE.

Young Day Laborer in Alaska Notified That He Is Sole Heir to Estate of Uncle Amounting to $20,000,000—Rushes to Australia to Claim Fortune.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] To receive a bequest of a fortune greater than the value of all Alaska's gold yield of the present year while fighting poverty in continuation of his struggle to strike it rich in the far North was the rare good fortune of Fred Young, who came to Puget Sound en route to Australia to claim a $20,000,000 fortune.

The bequest came entirely unexpectedly some months after the death of the youth's uncle, an immensely wealthy resident of Melbourne. Young had been separated from all members of his family for years and had not even considered being made an heir of the uncle.

Executors of the estate did not know how they could communicate with Young and it required many weeks of searching before he was located in a remote part of Alaska, not sufficiently settled to boast a town name, in the Susitna Valley.

When the Melbourne solicitors' advices finally reached him, Young was working as a common laborer. Prospecting had dwindled his small funds until he had been forced to seek employment at wages to get another "grubstake." The problem of getting back to Australia to claim his fortune had already been solved for him by the barristers, for the letter appraising him of his great luck contained a draft for $1000 and a request that he hurry home.

Young caught an Australian steamer from Vancouver ten days ago. He kept the secret to himself with the exception of informing some friends at Cordovia, en route south. One of these gave the matter publicity. By Northern friends Young is known as a clear-headed, sensible young man.

DELAYS POPULATION TOTAL.

Tacoma's Recount Prevents Announcement of United States Census Until December 1.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA (Wash.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A waiting world will be told the constitutional population of the United States about December 1, according to Chief Statistician William C. Hunt, chief population statistician of the Census Bureau, who is directing the Tacoma recount.

Originally it was the plan of the Census Bureau to announce the verified count of the entire country about November 15. But for the protest that went up when Director Durand gave out the alleged figures for Tacoma October 15 last, resulting in the present recount, the plan would probably have been carried out.

The population result of the twelfth census in 1900 was announced the night before Thanksgiving, but the thirteenth census started somewhat earlier in the year than the twelfth, and it was planned to have the result footed and verified earlier than that of ten years ago.

Before he left his office in Washington for Tacoma, Mr. Hunt completed final preparations for aggregating the long strings of figures that enter into the grand total, and turned the work over to his trusted assistants. It is possible the population of the United States will be announced before he reaches Washington. Tacoma's recount will hardly be finished before December 1.

WAS DEAD MAN MURDERER?

Napa Authorities Believe Mysterious Swede Who Died at Calistoga Is Slayer of Woman.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NAPA (Cal.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The mysterious man who died yesterday at Calistoga, this county, is believed to have been the notorious Pete Olson, the Swede, who killed Mrs. Lyon, in Wooden Valley about twenty years ago and who was never apprehended.

The man had lived the life of a hermit in a cabin on Howell Mountain, in Pope Valley, for years. In this cabin was found a trunk, in which safe-cracking tools were found.

In the past few years there has been numerous burglaries committed in Rutherford, not far from where the mysterious hermit had his cabin, and the burglar was never apprehended. These are attributed to the dead man.

Although James Mosher, a Port Washington politician, was accounted well-to-do by his neighbors, letters of administration filed at Mineola, N. Y., show that his estate will net his heirs less than $150 after all bills are paid. Mosher died from eating a peck of clams and drinking six glasses of whisky while celebrating the Democratic victory in Maine September 6 last.

MEXICAN SITUATION

service at a moment's notice throughout Sunday.

As a precautionary measure the customary Sunday bullfights have been prohibited. Speaking tonight of the situation here, Gov. Guillermo de Landa y Escandon of the Federal District said:

"There will be no uprising of the Maderistas tomorrow. The government is fully prepared to meet any demonstration whatever and to crush it in its incipiency. While we believe that the heralded twentieth of November will pass as quietly as did today, we also believe in being fully equipped and in readiness for any unexpected events."

He added that the entire republic was at peace today. The trouble which had been anticipated at Orizaba, Guanajuato, Guadalajara and Toluca had not materialized.

MEXICAN TROOPS ARE GUARDING FRONTIER.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BROWNSVILLE (Tex.) Nov. 19.—The Ninth Regiment of the Mexican army, which has been stationed at Matamoras for the last year, has been moved to Saltillo and the Fourteenth Regiment from Monterey has been sent there.

The Fourteenth is a much larger regiment than the Ninth, and it is said the sending of this large force to Matamoras is in keeping with the Mexican government's policy to better protect its northern boundary from the invasion of revolutionists and to better cope with any demonstration along the border against the Americans.

POLICE BUY ALL THE CARTRIDGES IN JUAREZ.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

EL PASO (Tex.) Nov. 19.—Following instructions from Mexico City, five police officials went through the town of Juarez, across the river from this city, in Mexico, and purchased all the gun cartridges which could be found.

It was stated that the government would hold them pending an abatement of the disturbances in Mexico and that no new supply would be allowed sent in.

An unconfirmed report is current tonight that all bullfights, theaters, keno games and saloons will be closed in Juarez tomorrow. The Chief of Police states that he is awaiting official orders to take such action.

Americans arriving here today from Chihuahua, Mexico, 300 miles south of here, report that the police force there has made over a hundred arrests of persons suspected of entertaining revolutionary sentiments. The jails of the city are said to be full of incommunicado prisoners. At the time the Americans left, the entire police force had been on duty continuously for seventy-two hours.

MADERO DISAPPEARS; ON WAY TO MEXICO.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

LAREDO (Tex.) Nov. 19.—Rumors that Francisco Madero, recently an aspirant for the Presidency of Mexico, has left San Antonio, were verified tonight on what is considered unimpeachable authority. It is said he arrived at Cotulla, Tex., where he was joined by several companions and after securing horses and a guide proceeded to some point in Mexico, in all probability his own lands in the State of Coahuila.

What the alleged move of Madero may mean is only a conjecture, but it may be the revolutionist party, of which he is alleged to be a leader, contemplates carrying out an arrangement to put into effect its fight against the present administration in Mexico.

From the same authority is learned the Mexican government has made demands upon the United States for the extradition of Madero, charging him with sedition and an endeavor to incite the revolution in Mexico.

It is stated furthermore the United States has granted the request of Mexico, and this, it is believed, is responsible for his departure from San Antonio.

The Mexican authorities have troops at points along the river from Laredo on the lookout for Madero, and to effect his capture.

No trouble is expected along the border. If any revolt occurs, it must necessarily be anti-government, and it will probably take place in some of the interior States of the Republic of Mexico.

CHIEF QUITS IN PIQUE.

BELLINGHAM MAYOR CRITICAL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BELLINGHAM (Wash.) Nov. 19.—Following criticism of his department by Mayor J. P. Demattos, who is absent in California, Chief of Police Hiram C. Cade today tendered his resignation to Acting Mayor John F. Miller, and demanded an investigation of both his conduct and that of the Mayor. Miller accepted the resignation and immediately appointed Cade desk sergeant—a position which he held under civil service rules prior to his appointment as Chief of Police. The Mayor left last week for San Diego on a fortnight's vacation. From San Francisco he sent his Chief a letter declaring he had learned that undesirable women were being allowed to remain in town and that gambling was permitted. He intimated that if such was the case he would demand Cade's removal on his return. Cade declares in his letter of resignation that if the city has not been kept clear of undesirables, the fault was with the Mayor, and not with his department. Cade's successor has not been named.

WIFE MAY COST SEAT.

PLIGHT OF AN ASSEMBLYMAN.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WOODLAND (Cal.) Nov. 19.—Because S. H. Wilson chooses to live with his wife, his election to the place of Assemblyman from the Sixteenth District may be contested, although his plurality was 327, and carried all but two precincts in the county. Wilson was recently married to Mrs. Taylor, who owns a ranch across the line in Solano county. Since then he has lived at the home in Solano county, though claiming Winters as his place of residence. He now has a house in course of erection in Winters. It is believed the Legislature would be forced to unseat Wilson if his opponent, G. W. Pierce, raises the point. Wilson defeated Pierce in his home county.

VIOLENT TALK.

MELTING POT FOR THE CROWN.

Labor Leader Repeats His Mischievous Threat.

Radical Extremists Mutter Against the King.

Events in England Marching Toward Crisis.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Events in the United Kingdom are marching fast toward what a prominent Tory organ calls a "stormy crisis" and what is described by an equally prominent radical Journal as "the most exciting and serious constitutional struggle of the last 200 years."

Laborites and Socialists, predicting a large increase in their delegations in the next House, are making a lot out of the allusion by the Daily News, the chief organ of the government, to "Monarchial revolution;" and Keir Hardie repeats the threat about crowns and melting pots.

Moderate Liberals deprecate this violent language; and the mutterings of Radical extremists against George V are likely to cause an answering outburst of loyalty in other quarters.

But the fact that the name of the King has been dragged into the controversy, on the assumption that he has acted in a partisian matter, shows the degree to which passion or suspicion has been aroused.

As an offset, however, attention is drawn to the improvement in the personal relations between the occupants of the two front benches at Westminster as the result of the meetings of the "Council of Eight." Apparently the close contact of the conference members has rendered their attitude in the House one of greater ease mutually.

Austin Chamberlain has crossed the floor to the treasury bench to speak with Mr. Asquith and Mr. Balfour has been detected whispering to Mr. Lloyd George. Such front-bench behavior is without precedent.

"If Lord Cawdor would be good enough to pass the time of day with Mr. Churchill," says a London paragrapher, "all might yet be well."

REDMOND SHOWS TACT.

John Redmond has risen to the situation with promptness and tact, modifying his tone as conditions have become more and more acute, but not abating one jot of his original demands. As, during his absence in the United States, a mistaken version of his utterances there led to considerable error here, he has redefined the position of Irish leaders.

What they want, what Ireland wants, he asserts, is not a Parliament on College Green having sovereign authority like the London Parliament of the day, but a Parliament in Dublin with at least as much authority over local affairs as is possessed by the Parliament of the South African commonwealth and by the legislature of every state in the German Empire.

He admits that his demand is somewhat less sweeping than Parnell's, but denies that he has yielded a foot of the ground occupied three years ago when, after full deliberation, the people of Ireland rejected the policy of "Devolution."

This definition of home rule by analogies, accompanied, as it is, by Redmond's promise that, if such a version of justice is given, there will be no part of the empire more loyal than Ireland to the Crown, the central authority and the imperial system strikes the mind of the ordinary Briton favorably; for the "Bloody Eighties" seem to him a long way back, and, apart from all other considerations, the ordinary Briton begins to think it would be worth while to give up a good deal to end the centuries of Irish discontent.

CHANGING.

NEW PARTY IS POTENT FACTOR.

FRENCH CANADIANS LINE UP AS NATIONALISTS.

Defeat of Sir Wilfrid Laurier Causes Alarm Among British Adherents and Sensational Developments Are Expected in Dominion Parliament.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTAWA (Ont.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A general election in Canada looms up. The third session of the Eleventh Parliament of the Dominion opened with the government smarting under the recent defeat of it own candidate. The session promises to be momentous, and some sensational developments are looked for. The Nationalist party of Quebec province, a new element in the politics of the Dominion, is essentially anti-British in its aims. It has gained such phenomenal strength among the French Canadian population that the government can no longer afford to ignore it. Sir Wilfrid Laurier suffered defeat in his own home county, which elected its candidate by a large majority and this incident more than any other is engrossing the attention of members on both side of the house.

There are those who have their faith to an early appeal to the country, after the work of the session is over, and there are signs that lend color to this feeling. The Premier's tour through the West last summer was evidently planned with a view of impressing the voters rather than of permitting Sir Wilfrid Laurier to have an opportunity of observing the development in that locality.

It is anticipated that a strong demand from the West will be made for an increase in its Senate representation to which it is entitled on the basis of such representation from other provinces. Popular opinion, however, is against any increase of Senators, as it is believed that the Canadian Senate, as at present constituted, is too large.

The crusade for economy in New York City's automobile bill is beginning to show results. Five city machines have been turned into the Comptroller by various departments as unnecessary, and will be sold at public auction this week.

MRS. BELMONT GETS A VOTE FOR STATE OFFICE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The New York County Board of Canvassers today found one vote for Mrs. Alva E. Belmont for Lieutenant-Governor, cast election day in the eleventh election district of the Twenty-seventh Assembly District. Mrs. Belmont was formerly Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, and is the widow of O. H. Belmont. Her maiden name was Alva E. Smith. The identity of the voter was not disclosed.

WOMEN WIN RIGHTS UNDER HOMESTEAD LAW.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA (Wash.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A married woman is no longer discriminated against by the homestead laws, according to a special circular which reached the North Yakima land office today from Washington.

Previous circulars have contained a clause excluding a married woman from entry except in those States which give women a right to acquire and hold a title to lands. In the new circular this clause is cut out entirely.

The law was felt to be unjust since it made it possible for married women in some States to acquire land, while women in those same circumstances in other States were denied. A married woman now has equal chance with her unmarried sister or her husband or borther for taking up government land provided she in other ways fulfills the homestead law conditions.

Another important change in the circular provides that fourteen months of "actual and substantially continuous residence" is necessary, instead of "actual and continuous residence and cultivation" as it was previously phrased.

SAVES BABY'S LIFE.

New-Born Infant Abandoned in Weeds Is Treated Surgically by Patrolman.

The youngest patient ever admitted to the Receiving Hospital was brought there last night. It was just two hours old and was found, unclothed, behind a billboard on West Jefferson street, scarcely a block from the University Police Station. Blue with cold the infant cried lustily as it lay in the hard weeds, attracting Patrolman Hulland. He thought it was a cat and gasped when his electric flashlight fell on the tiny bit of humanity.

Tearing off his coat, Hulland hurriedly wrapped up the baby and ran with it to the police station. There, with the assistance of Patrolman Hickok, Hulland gave it necessary surgical attention under the supervision of Sergeant Benedict. Then it was warmly wrapped in a police blanket.

Police Surgeon Kidder was amazed and delighted with the skill which had been exhibited by the policeman in taking care of the foundling. Surrounded by warm water bottles, it was soon comfortable and fell asleep.

Strangers, Attention.

To the strangers within our gates I have this message: Come and have what teeth need attention put in perfect order while you are near enough to a dentist who says,

"I NEVER HURT A BIT,"

COLONEL CALLS AT WHITE HOUSE

Roosevelt Meets Old Friends in Washington.

Views African Specimens at National Museum.

President Inspects Naval Base in Cuba.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Theodore Roosevelt returned to the White House today and there was no member of the family of its occupant, his successor as President, there to bid him welcome. President Taft was in Cuba, and Mrs. Taft in New York, on a shopping expedition.

However, the Colonel made himself at home, and although he remained but a short time, shook hands with all the clerks and attaches, most of whom were there when he departed nearly two years ago.

Altogther it was a strenuous day for the colonel. He had about two hundred callers at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who tendered a reception in honor of her father.

He had spent the morning at the National Museum inspecting the specimens made by his African expedition for the Smithsonian Institute, and had attended a luncheon given in his honor.

Tonight he was the guest of the Smithsonian Institute at a dinner given by Director Charles Walcott. Among those present were former Secretary of the Interior Garfield, M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador; Representative Longworth, Gen. Leonard Wood, Thomas Nelson Page, Gen. Oliver, assistant Secretary of War; and Beekman Winthrop, Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Col. Roosevelt visited the White House early in the day and left a card for Mrs. Taft. He motored from the executive offices to the National Museum, where he presented the American flag which always preceded the expedition in Africa. Col. Roosevelt will depart tomorrow morning for New York.

PRESIDENT IN CUBA.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

GUANTANTAMO (Cuba,) Nov. 19.—The first visit to Cuban soil of a President of the United States, was made today by President Taft, who arrived from Colon in the forenoon, inspected the United States naval station here and departed in the afternoon for Hampton roads.

The President arrived here at 11 o'clock this morning. As the cruisers steamed into the bay, the Tennessee leading, with the blue flag of the President at her foremast, the guns of the cruiser Newark, stationed at the naval station, boomed forth the salute of twenty-one guns.

As soon as the cruisers dropped anchor in the bay the officers of the naval station went on board the Tennessee and paid their respects. The Cuban Secretary of State, who had come from Havana to welcome the President in the name of President Gomez, also was received by Mr. Taft.

After the reception on board the Tennessee, the President and other members of his party went ashore and made an inspection of the rifle range and other works of the station. Their stay ashore was brief and the cruisers weighed anchor immediately upon their return aboard. They were under way at 3 o'clock this afternoon and headed eastward for the Windward Passage.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

Bank in Liquidation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Notice has been given by the Comptroller of the Treasury that the First National Bank of Orosi, Tulare county, was placed in voluntary liquidation November 10. A charter was issued yesterday to the First National Bank of Terra Bella, capital $25,000. The officers are G. A. Hart, president; Marco H. Hellman, vice-president; James Crichton, cashier.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Albert H. Cate has been appointed letter carrier at Los Angeles. Clarence Rendy of Carson City, has been appointed railway mail clerk.

PLANS ACCEPTED.

East Whittier Expects Soon to Have School to Replace Burned Building.

WHITTIER, Nov. 19.—At a meeting held in the East Whittier Woman's Clubhouse last night, plans for a $15,000 school building were accepted by the board of trustees. The building is to take the place of the one destroyed by fire a few weeks ago and will be built on the same site.

The plans accepted were submitted by Architect J. C. Smith of Los Angeles. The new building will be of mission style and constructed of fire proof material throughout. It is planned after the new High School at El Monte. Mark Keppel, County Superintendent of Schools, made a strong talk for a good and substantial building and gave valuable information along the line of school building. Trustees George L. Hazzard and J. M. Randall endorsed Mr. Keppel's suggestions. The trustees will ask for a $15,000 bond issue and notices calling for an election will be posted immediately.

Burglars broke into the Whittier Baseball Association Clubhouse at Los Nietos last night and took all the suits, masks and baseball paraphernalia and several boxes of cigars, kept there by the club to sell at the games.

G. F. Winans, station agent for the Santa Fe Railway Company at Los Nietos, notified the officers at Whittier of the robbery this morning but at yet the offenders have not been found.

IMPORTANT.

WESTERN EDUCATORS ORGANIZE TO BETTER SCHOOL CONDITIONS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SALT LAKE, Nov. 19.—The agitation among State school superintendents of the western States for a standard of proficiency for teachers crystallised this afternoon before the close of a three-days convention in a set of resolutions which provide for a permanent organization and closer co-operation with the National Bureau of Education. A committee was appointed to prepare constitution and by-laws for the State superintendents' conference. The conference will hold its first formal meeting at San Francisco next July, simultaneously with the convention of the National Educational Association.

Other resolutions adopted today define a "standard" college or university, stipulate for the recognition of their diplomas in the several States, and appraise the value of credits given after examination in different States.

A standard college or university must require a four years' secondary course above the Eighth grade for entrance and 120 semester hours for graduation, and meet specific requirements as to faculty, library, laboratory, endowment and curriculum.

Final adjournment was taken at the close of this afternoon's session.

PARALYTIC'S INGENIOUS SUICIDE.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Paralysis of his body from the armpits down did not limit the movements of Amiel Von Lakren, a Chicago tile setter, sufficiently to prevent his committing suicide. His back was broken on July 14 and above his cot in a hospital there had been arranged a frame with a rope and pulley with which he could alter his position when fatigued. He tied the rope around his neck and twisted himself about until he died of strangulation.

BALL STAR HOST AT FIRE.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Ed Reulbach, the Chicago National League pitcher, played host to half a dozen hysterical women and as many crying children last night. Seven families were driven into the streets and two sleeping infants rescued and carried from their cribs by their terrified mothers in a fire which attacked an apartment house, causing a loss of $20,000. Following the fire, the Ruelbach home, adjoining the damaged building, was turned into a small emergency hospital. Dr. Alice S. Conklin, who returned to her burning apartment to rescue two canaries, risked death from suffocation. Although slightly injured in escaping, she carried the birds to safety.

AGED COUPLE'S PREDICAMENT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SALISBURY, (Mo.) Nov. 19.—Two forest fire refugees from Minnesota, James Clapman and wife, both past 70, arrived here yesterday after a walk of about 500 miles, only to find that their children had moved away from this city. They came here from Sullivan, Minn., and were penniless when they arrived.

TOWN'S LONE BLOCK BURNS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

EAST ST. LOUIS (Ill.) Nov. 19.—A fire which destroyed the only business block in Edgemont, Ill., early this morning caused a loss estimated at $80,000. Six buildings were destroyed. All were of frame construction.

CHARITY HOSPITAL CLOSED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—The Chicago Charity Hospital was closed yesterday after a 20-years struggle for existence. The public refused to support it longer, and the building and equipment were sold to another hospital. It was the only free institution of its kind in the city. "We gave gave more for the money than any other charity in Chicago," asserted Marvin B. Pool, vice-president of the association. "The matrons received small salaries; the doctors charged practically nothing for operations. Our large expense was for food and meat. But the public never had the interest in it that has been shown for less worthy charities; it has been an effort to maintain the hospital ever since it opened. The directors have contributed large sums for years, but felt they could no longer bear the burden, in the face of the public indifference."

MOVING PICTURES FOR SCHOOL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—The many 5-cent theaters and moving picture shows of Chicago will face keen competition when the school "centers," which the Board of Education has established, are opened. The date of the opening of the "centers" probably will be set within a fortnight. There will be the best class of moving pictures," said John D. Shoop, assistant superintendent of schools. "Large phonographs will give our patriotic songs and other music. Then there will be gymnasium and singing classes, illustrated lectures, debates and lyceum programmes. The centers will be open three nights a week."

RAILROAD RECORD.

COLORADO CASE IS DISMISSED.

Commerce Commission Rules Against Traffic Men.

Nebraska and Kansas Coal Tariffs Involved.

Haul Ruling in Cedar Hill Case Is Cited.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Declaring that except for a charge of deviation from the long and short haul section, the case presented no question not previously disposed of in the Cedar Hill Coal and Coke Company case, the Interstate Commerce Commission dismissed today the complaint of the Colorado Commercial Traffic Association against the Colorado & Southern Railway and others.

The complaint like the ones of the individual members of the association which were dismissed, concerned the rates on bituminous coal from the Walsenburg district in Southern Colorado to Kansas and Nebraska. As to the long and short haul phase of the controversy, whatever the merit of the contention might be, the commission declined to make any order at this time.

The greater charge to intermediate stations than to the more distant stations over the same line in the same direction will become unlawful on the expiration of six months from August 17 last, unless the railroads meantime apply to the commission for authority to deviate from the prescribed rule, which the commission would promptly investigate.

BARS REDEMPTION LIMIT.

Commerce Commission Decides Holder of Exchange Scrip Book May Redeem Any Time.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Because of defects of the tariff under which so-called exchange scrip books were issued by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, the Interstate Commerce Commission today held that the provision in the tariff limiting the right of a purchaser to demand redemption of unused coupons to a period of eighteen months was not valid.

The commission awarded reparation to a complainant for the unused coupons, although presented for redemption after the period had expired. The commission passed over the question of legality of the use of such scrip books by interstate carriers.

These books, instead of entitling the holder to transportation, contain coupons valued at 5 cents each in the purchase of any passenger ticket over the Santa Fe and numerous other lines in the Mexico-Arizona-Texas territory.

In exchange for these tickets the roads detach enough coupons to make at their face value the amount of the regularly published tariff. When all the coupons are exhausted the railroad joint scrip bureau allows all travelers a cash refund, amounting to the difference between the book's price and actual transportation.

CHICAGOAN WRITES NOVEL "AD" AS LAST RESORT.

Husband, Who is Father of Three Children, Declares He is Unable to Secure Employment in Middle West City, Where "Every Man Seems to Have a Pull."

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "For sale—I desire to sell myself to whomever is willing to give me a chance to work and display my abilities in whatever line he may choose. I am of an inventive mind and am 29 years of age. Have a wife and three children and am willing to do any kind of work that will enable me to support them.

[Signed] "H. L. DUCHARM,
"5728 Normal avenue."

Weary and discouraged after a fruitless quest for employment, and unable to adequately support his family because of his inability to secure work, H. L. Ducharm offers himself for sale.

A pathetic story of struggles to obtain work, which has made him almost hopeless that there is anything worth living for was revealed by Ducharm's story.

"I have become so downhearted and discouraged with the struggles and strifes of obtaining employment that I have lost almost all hope and virtually believe that I have very little to live for if it were not for the responsibility I have upon my shoulders of supporting my wife and three children," he said.

"Since October 16, when I was let out from my position as conductor on the Pennsylvania Railroad because of an accident which occurred through no fault of mine, I have been striving in vain to get a position which would give me a chance to provide for my family. This disability to obtain a position without having a strong 'pull' in whatever line I applied for a job has led me to this course of offering my body for sale.

"If I had any hope whatsoever that I could make an honest living by labor I seem to have lost it because of my failure to land a job wherever I went. Every place I go it seems a man must have the 'pull' behind him."

WILL BUILD SMELTER LINK.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] G. T. Wiswell, a railroad civil engineer of New York, states officially this evening that his associates have decided to construct thirty-six miles of railroad to connect the mines of Lida and Hornsilver and Bonnie Clare with the Clark railroad and the Tonopah and Tidewater to secure direct outlet for a tonnage estimated at 2000 tons daily to Needles smelter. These properties are all of low grade but contain large bodies of ore that have not been available owing to the high cost of the wagon haul. They are regarded as good fluxing ores and are desirable from a smelting standpoint. The road will be standard in gauge and equipment, using seventy pound rails.

Traveling from Salt Lake City to Washington on a bicycle, Theodore Bashe, who says he is a veteran of the Spanish war, reached Grand Junction, Colo., yesterday. He is going to Washington to secure a pension, of which he alleges he was illegally deprived. He expects to get there in June.

SETTLES YOUR OUT-OF-ORDER STOMACH AND ENDS ALL INDIGESTION FIVE MINUTES LATER.

Heartburn, Stomach Gas, Dyspepsia and Headache Will Vanish Before You Realize It—Thousands of Readers of The Times Will Find a Permanent Cure for Stomach Trouble at a Very Nominal Cost.

The question as to how long you are going to continue a sufferer from Indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a re-enforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally and there will be no more Indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, no heartburn, sour risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

CALLS EXTRA SESSION.

Haskell Wants Legislature to Make Oklahoma City State's Capital. Big Fight Promised.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

GUTHRIE (Okla.) Nov. 19.—Gov. Haskell this afternoon issued a proclamation calling for a extra session of the Legislature to assemble November 28 at Oklahoma City.

But one subject is suggested for legislation—the location of a State Capitol. The Governor advised the adoption of a law that would embody the provisions included in the initial bill, which was declared void by the State Supreme Court.

Preparations are being made to resist the legality of the call in the courts, it being maintained that the seat of government, until changed by an act of the Legislature or a vote of the people, is in Guthrie, and that the special session of the Legislature cannot legally meet in another city.

Muskogee, Tulsa, Chickasha, Sapulpa, Enid, El Reno, McAlester, Purcell, Lawton and Ardmore, besides Guthrie and Oklahoma City, will contest for the Capitol. It will take a two-thirds vote of the Legislature to remove the seat of the State government from Guthrie.

STRIKE COSTS DEAR.

Member of Chicago Committee Estimates That City Is Losing $30,000 Per Day.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Chicago is losing $30,000 for every day the garment workers' strike continues. Dealers stocking up for the spring rush season will find Chicago, which is the second largest center and for the last few years has been rapidly gaining ground on New York, utterly without a proper assortment of spring clothing and will have to turn to other markets. Every day of the strike means added burdens to the already overtaxed charitable organizations of the city."

This from a member of the Citizens Committee who has made a personal investigation of the garment workers' strike, coupled with an unequivocal declaration in favor of the preferential shop plan as the only common ground in which a speedy settlement of the strike can be reached, outlined today the effort the Citizens Committee is to make to center the force of Chicago's public sentiment on bringing strikers and employers to an agreement.

With both sides still confident of victory, however, the Citizens Committee is finding it difficult to gain a hearing for its argument that the general welfare of the city demands an early settlement of the struggle.

Chicago Youth Who Inherits Fortune While Abroad Finds Ship "Different" on Return.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19.—When L. H. Vilas, a Chicago boy, left here recently on the liner Siberia for a trip around the world, he was traveling on a limited expense account provided by his widowed mother, and outward on the voyage he attracted no more attention than any other 17-year-old lad.

Summoned home from Yokohama, he found the return trip different. "It didn't seem like the same old ship," he said on landing in San Francisco yesterday. The cablegram young Vilas received at the Japanese port told of his mother's death, and it is said he had fallen heir to an estate valued at $7,000,000. The fact of his bereavement became known aboard ship, and the youth found himself the object of solicitous interest from many quarters.

The boy was met here by a representative of the estate and the two are now returning to Chicago.

Estate of Late Playwright, Which Includes Beautiful Home, Will Go to Parent.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WHITE PLAINS (N. Y.) Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Attorneys for the playwright Clyde Fitch, who died in France over a year ago, today filed a settlement of his estate in the Surrogate Court.

Mr. Fitch had a beautiful home at Katonah, a few miles above here. According to the schedule filed by the lawyers, the estate of the dead playwright is $212,727.89. This estate goes to William Goodwin Fitch, the father and only heir of Clyde Fitch.

Ten members of the Engineering Corps, graduating from the United States Military Academy during the present year, sailed from New Orleans yesterday for the Isthmus of Panama. They will remain in the canal zone studying conditions and engineering problems for a period of several months.

SHORT, SHARP, BITTER.

PARTIES LINED UP AND THEIR PROGRAMMES KNOWN FOR FIGHT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

LONDON, Nov. 19.—With the delivery of Premier Asquith's speech declaring the policy of the government, and Mr. Balfour's outlining of the Unionist policy earlier in the week, the two parties in the political contest have laid their cards on the table.

The fight will be short and sharp, and, from the attitude of the speakers who have already taken the platform, as bitter as it is short.

When the failure of the veto was announced, all signs favored the government candidates fresh from their successes in the by-elections. Good trade returns increase the popularity of free trade, while the Unionists, disorganized, had apparently lost heart, some of their newspapers even predicting their defeat, should an election ensue.

The approach of the dissolution of Parliament, however, restored their confidence and although a section of the party which a few weeks ago advocated Federal home rule is finding it awkward to recant, the ranks generally having been reformed.

The House of Lords naturally is the foremost question on which the election will be fought.

A plank of importance in the Unionist platform is opposition to home rule and "the use of American dollars to destroy the British Constitution." The latter cry has lost some force through the publication of a statement that only $75,000 was collected by the Irish leader, one-third of which came from Canada.

The Liberals are full of confidence in their policy for the abolition of the veto power of the House of Lords, free trade and the success of the government's social legislation. They have an awkward problem to face in seeking a solution of conditions arising from the Osborne judgment, which prohibits trade unions from using their funds to support the Labor party.

The Labor members of the House of Commons are demanding that legislation be enacted to overcome this judgment, and Mrs. Asquith has promised to announce the government's policy next week. The judgment has had the effect of reducing the number of Labor candidates, thus avoiding three-cornered contests in which the Liberals lost a dozen seats last January.

It is expected the elections will be concluded by December 18. The boroughs including London will pool between December 3 and 6; the district boroughs between December 7 and 17, and the counties between December 8 and 17. The peers in the coming election will have an advantage not accorded since the days of the "Long Parliament." The resolution declaring it to be an infringement on the liberties of the commons for a peer or a prelate to concern himself in the election of the members was not renewed at this Parliament.

The suffragettes are well provided with funds for the election, but the public has lost curiosity in their actions.

MRS. ARMOUR IN HOSPITAL.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. J. Ogden Armour is in St. Luke's Hospital undergoing treatment for nephritis. The society leader went to the institution from her new Lake Forest home a week ago and efforts to keep her presence secret were successful until today when the facts leaked out.

The Tax Department of New York announces the assessed valuation of taxable property in that city for the coming year will show an increase of more than $600,000,000, bringing the total up to nearly $8,000,000,000. This will mean an increase in the city's debt-incurring capacity of $60,000,000.

THIRD TIME.

TIED AGAIN AT THE END.

Pomona and U.S.C. Each Get Nine Points.

Clary Saves Sagebrushers From a Defeat.

Terrific Struggle in Last Game of Season.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CLAREMONT, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Pomona 9, U. S. C. 9.

The conference football championship remains undecided after one of the greatest gridiron battles ever seen in Southern California.

Three goals from placement for Pomona and one from placement for U. S. C. with a single touchdown made up the score. From start to finish the contest was anybody's game.

The most sensational moment of a game full of sensations was just before the end of the long struggle when in the gathering dark quarter-back Clary shot over the goal that tied the score for Pomona. The kick was made from the thirty-yard line.

Pomona began the scoring early in the first period with Clary's easy goal from the fifteen-yard line directly between the posts. Then in the fourth quarter U. S. C. sent over a touchdown after a beautifully executed delayed pass on a cross buck that allowed Hall to make twenty yards for U. S. C. taking the ball close to the posts.

After the intermission between the halves Pomona came back fresher than the University team and rushed the Methodists off their feet going close to the goal twice and finally putting across a field goal.

U. S. C. took the lead again a few minutes later. Paulin broke through a big hole in the Pomona line for forty yards and landed the oval almost on the line. The Methodists could not buck the leather over but Paulin was good for three points from placement.

CLARY TO RESCUE.

Then in the last quarter after a terrific struggle that zigzagged over the entire field Clary got in his last kick that again evened the score.

The game was played under ideal conditions. Weather and field were perfect for fast football. The biggest crowd that ever watched a game in Clearmont was on hand.

The clean score of both teams through the earlier games of the season, the tied score between the rivals when they began playing football against each other, and the reputed strength of the two elevens has combined to raise the enthusiasm above even the ordinary undergraduate pitch. The overflow from the bright-colored bleachers went clear around Alumni Filed, flanking and strengthening the big auto bleachers.

The teams were all that they were cracked up to be and more. They knew the game as well if not better than any two elevens that the two institutions ever put in the field before. Both teams were light and fast.

U. S. C. had a slight advantage in the line and a few pounds weight to the man in her favor.

The blue and white aggregation made up for this by getting the jump on their opponents by slight fractions of seconds. The Claremonters seemed to be in better physical condition than their antagonists.

Behind the line each squad had a quartette of backs that defied individual mention. Their work was so good they showed that the old-fashioned line bucks did not go out of commission with new rules, and they formed beautiful interference on well executed end runs.

LUND NEW STAR.

At ends and in the kicking department Pomona, with Clary, had a shade the advantage. Lund, the little freshman left half on the U. S. C. team, was one of the surprises of the day. He did not know as much football as some of his team-mates, but was right there when it came to running. He all but won the contest for the Methodists late in the game, when, with successive dashes, he brought the ball within striking distance of the Pomona line almost unaided.

But a fifteen yard penalty imposed for holding sent U. S. C. back from the three-yard line that time, and Paulin's try for goal went wide. A moment later the ball was at the other end of the field, with Pomona playing desperately for her tie.

Both Right Half Hall and Fullback Paulin starred in the general field excellence. For Pomona the team work was even more in evidence than the red and gold side. Shutt, against a stronger team than a week ago, did not shine quite as brightly as heretofore, but nevertheless put up a fine exhibition of football.

The line-up:

U. S. C.	Position.	Pomona.

Soldiers Win Battle.

WEST POINT (N. Y.) Nov. 19.—West Point defeated Trinity at football today, 17 to 0. It was the armys final game before the one next Saturday with the navy at Philadephia and was a hard fought contest. The scores were all made in the first half.

Pomona High Victorious.

POMONA, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Pomona High School rugby won the championship of the Citrus Belt League by defeating the team from Riverside High School 19 to 0 on the High School campus here this afternoon. McKim, Teague, Davis, Heath, Parker and Pums, played good ball for Pomona, although the game throughout was ragged. Riverside did good work in the scrum. Pomona must now play Los Angeles High for the interscholastic championship of Southern California, both of these teams having played two tie games.

AUTO SPOUTS FIRE.

Three quarts of gasoline and lubricating oil aflame called out the fire department and caused no end of excitement at Second and Broadway about 11 o'clock last night. An automobile standing at the curb took fire, the burning oil, dropping on the asphalt pavement, was soon extinguished with a chemical jet. The license number was originally registered under the name of Dr. Lang. The machine is now the property of Lawyer C. L. Bagley, a former member of the fire department.

RAH FOR MICHIGAN.

Alumni Association Cheer Victory on Gridiron at Smoker in New Club Quarters.

The University of Michigan Alumni Association of Southern California held a jollification and smoker last night at the new quarters of the University Club, in the Consolidated Realty building, to celebrate the victory of the Michigan football team over the Minnesota eleven in the afternoon.

Doctors, lawyers, engineers and business men laid aside their reserve to cheer for their alma mater and the "great" Yost who coached the Michigan cohorts to victory.

In the absence of Judge McKinley, president of the association, who was late at the gathering, Judge Conrey acted as chairman, and introduced Dr. Andrew S. Lobingier as the first speaker. When the latter spoke of Michigan as having the champion team of the West he was assailed with deafening applause, and when he attempted to resume pandemonium broke loose, Walter Rheinchilds, the former Michigan tackle, leading in the yells.

Kimball Fletcher told of the Michigan jug that was stolen from the campus at Ann Arbor in 1900 by Minnesota students. Walter Rheinchilds was introduced as the prophet, for he foretold the score at the regular luncheon of the association last Tuesday.

The programme was concluded with the hundred men present drinking to the health of Michigan's president emeritus, James Burrell Angell, who labored for more than a score of years to give the university the standing it has.

HITS ARE LUCKY.

BLACK CHAMPS ARE TRIMMED.

LOSE TO VERNONS BECAUSE OF LIGHT HITTING.

Cravath and Moore Slam Out Long Home Runs—Reiger Proves Too Good for the Giants, While Williams Is Soused Hard at Times. Fine Fielding Makes Up for Errors.

Vernons, 4; Leland Giants, 1.

Well, the famous Chocolate Champions "have came," as classical Dan Burns once remarked, and they are still here, for the picked Vernon team trounced them yesterday on the Vernon grounds in the first game of the Winter League season. The victory was a comparatively easy one, for Cravath happened to get two men on bases ahead of him in the fifth inning, and hit the ball so far over the left fence that they haven't found it yet. These three runs were enough.

The greatest crowd of the year at Vernon saw the performance, for there were about 1700 fans present, a large percentage of the colored population being there as a matter of course. They tore off loud acclaims when the colored men did something good, and when the dark runs went across the plate, but were correspondingly mute and inglorious when Cravath ended the game in the fifth inning with that mighty swat.

The fans saw some real good ball on the whole, although there were five errors to mar the play. Reiger and Williams were about equally effective when it came to fans and passes, but Reiger did far the better work, for he held the Giants to three hits. Two of these were powerful pokes by Winston and Moore, and they scored the only run the Giants made.

Winston opened the fourth inning with a long fly to the right field fence which Tonneson did not back up far enough for and the hit was good for a three-bagger. Winston easily scored after the catch of Moore's sacrifice to left. With two men out in the sixth, Moore hit a long fly to the top of the sign near the clubhouse and the ball bounded over the fence for a home run. Before and after these swats the Giants did not surprise themselves or their friends with a hit except in the first inning when Moore singled to center. Lane, Seldon and Green fanned in succession in the seventh. The Vernons found Williams rather easy at times and he was inclined to be wild.

In the fourth Winston muffed Tennant's fly back of third base and Tennant scored on Gill's sacrifice and Tonneson's hit to right. Ellis and Mohler singled to left in the fifth and were scored by Cravath's homer.

There were a number of beautiful plays to set off the errors, and the fans had enough to excite them all afternoon. With Reiger on third and Ellis on second in the third, from an error and Ellis's double, Mohler hit a liner into Williams's hands and he at once shot the ball to Lane at third, and Reiger was doubled out. McClelland made a peach of a left-handed jump catch of Winston's high liner in the ninth, and Tennant did equally as well with Johnson's high liner in the eighth, and by stepping on first base made an unassisted double play on Pettus, who had reached first when Gill juggled his grounder.

Pettus, the black first baseman who fought Jim Flynn in Colorado, played a fine first base and saved the shortstop several errors by reaching for wide throws.

The Giants are good ones and well worth seeing, but they could not win yesterday on account of Reiger's fine pitching. The same teams are to play two games at the Vernon grounds today. The score:

STILL AN OUTLAW.

SPEED CHAMP WOULD RACE.

Oldfield Not Reinstated by Contest Board.

Barney Wants to Drive His Benz on Motordrome.

Chairman S. M. Butler States His Side of Case.

There is a possibility that the debate in the Contest Board of the A.A.A. regarding the suspension of Oldfield may not be settled until the latter part of December. Barney Oldfield is not content to remain out of the Motordrome races and is anxious to bring the matter to a conclusion. He could only compete on the board track as an outlaw. This would mean that the meet would not be sanctioned by the Automobile Association of America.

S. M. Butler, chairman of the Contest Board of the A.A.A., has sanctioned the meet with the understanding that Oldfield is not to compete. A special effort is to be made to call a meeting of the Contest Board this week. The question of the reinstatement of Oldfield is to be put up to the officials. In case Barney is turned down the speed champion may then decide to remain an outlaw.

F. E. Moskovics, who champions Oldfield's cause, is to present the matter to the A.A.A. officials. Chairman Butler, who is in New York, had the following to say yesterday to a representative of The Times in New York:

"The A.A.A. board will meet in December. We have no idea it will do anything before that meeting regarding Oldfield's case. Therefore, being indefinitely suspended, Oldfield cannot participate in the Los Angeles races.

"If Oldfield should try the same arbitrary methods he employed at Atlanta it would hopelessly involve him and his chances of reinstatement into the association would be practically impossible. However, we believe Oldfield will submit to the rulings of the association and not attempt to enter any regular race until his case has been finally passed upon."

It was pointed out by promoters today that an acute situation might arise in case Oldfield insisted upon entering the race. The drivers in good standing would either be forced to strike, or go into the race at the risk of being outlawed themselves, even though Oldfield succeeded in invoking the aid of the courts.

NERVOUS COLLAPSE.

JOHNSON IS HYSTERICAL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Commenting on the report that Jack Johnson is in a state of nervous collapse, in Massachusetts, Lou Houseman said tonight:

"Two hours after the race I visited Johnson at his hotel on a matter of business. I found him hysterical and his whole body shaking like an aspen leaf blown by a wind. He could not talk intelligently on any subject, but kept crying that Oldfield had purposely crowded him towards the fence on the turns and that he narrowly escaped crashing through the inside rails several times.

"Jack said that Oldfield had boasted to his friends before the race that he would cause him to be impaled on the fence rail and that the automobile champion made no effort to keep in front of him during the second heat but kept at his side and cut him off every time the two went into the turns. The moving pictures of the race bear out Johnson's assertions, but Oldfield denied that he had any idea of fouling Jack.

"A week ago Johnson told me his mind was a blank at times and that he had not slept more than an hour a night since the race. His manager told me over the long distance telephone tonight that Jack was a raving bug and absolutely a nervous wreck.

"Johnson is on his way to his home here in charge of a nurse."

EASY FOR WISCONSIN.

CHICAGO AN EASY VICTIM.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

MADISON (Wis.) Nov. 19.—The Wisconsin football team astonished even its most enthusiastic supporters this afternoon by defeating the University of Chicago, 10 to 0, in a game replete with spectacular features.

The Badgers won by strictly old line football methods, while the Maroon warriors tried everything in the calendar, failing signally to gain on plays of a trick nature.

The Wisconsin goal was in danger only twice and the ball was in Chicago's territory most of the time.

The lineup:

What Would You Do?

Let us suppose that you had invented a complete system of much value to humanity, and that by advertising it, you could benefit thousands of people, add to your own reputation, and, as an agreeable incident, amplify your worldly possessions—would you retire upon the center of your conscious resources, assume an air of dignity and refuse to let the people know what you could do; or would you advertise, increase the business, take in associates and do more work in less time?

That is my position, and I have taken the latter course. I invented a system for painlessly filling, crowning, treating and extracting human teeth. It was and is the greatest success known to dentistry; it brought more work than I could do even if I should live to the age of a Methusaleh, so I associated bright, clever dentists with me, opened offices in various cities, and the result is that I do the largest business in my line in the world, and have the best organization and equipment for handling it.

My proposition is simply this: If you wish high class dentistry at moderate prices, performed absolutely without pain, it is up to you to call at my office and investigate my claims. Let me examine your mouth, tell you what should be done, how I would do it—all of which will cost you nothing, and may mean everything to you. You can not do better than accept my invitation now. Obey that Insistent Impulse! See Painless Parker first. Closed Sundays. Not open evenings.

SYMPATHY WASTED.

Eight-Year-Old Youngster Turns Out Regular Bad 'Un and Is Pinched.

Talbot Linnastruth, the 8 year old little boy who won so much sympathy at the Police Station recently when he was brought in, cold and hungry, complaining that his parents had "done gone away and left him," is back again in Los Angeles. But this time he was brought in as a prisoner and sent over to the Detention Home, charged with petty larceny.

Talbot committed the thefts in jail, robbing both police matrons. It seems that when he was a baby, he was taken from an asylum and adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Linnastruth of Strawberry Park. Last Tuesday he ran away from home, after stealing forty cents from his fostermother's pocket book. He made his way to Los Angeles where he had a great time all day, eating candy and popcorn and staring at the brilliant shop windows.

But when night came, Talbot was pinched with hunger and the cold was getting him by the little bare toes. He wandered disconsolately up and down under the electric lights, and late in the night was only too glad when a big policeman picked him up as a lost boy and took him to the Police Station where it was nice and warm.

The boy could not remember where he lived. At least, he said he could not. He thought his people were in Redondo, and he cried when he recited a dramatic little story about how they had "done gone and left him alone on the street."

Early Wednesday a telephone message from Mr. and Mrs. Linnastruth was received at police headquarters, asking that the boy be returned home. Talbot was given carfare to Strawberry Park and put on a car by the police. Instead of getting off at his home, he rode to Redondo, where he proceeded to indulge further his love for popcorn and candy. He was having a regular popcorn spree when Patrolman Marden found him on the waterfront.

After the boy's departure from the Police Station, Police Matron Gilbert, discovered that her handbag had been robbed. Mrs. McPeet, the other matron, made a similar discovery. There had been no one in the room but the boy, and suspicion fell on him.

NO WONDER HE SCORES.

Representative of Dairymen Before the Club Women Former Colorado County Attorney.

Christopher W. Stephenson, who, as representative of the Gardena and Artesia Dairymen's Association, made the strongest address delivered before the recent convention of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs, is a former Denver criminal lawyer of marked ability and ex-county attorney, who was driven from his profession and to milder climate by failing health.

Those of his auditors who looked upon him as an ordinary ranchman, without experience in other fields, will be less surprised by the force, wit and logic of his remarks when they learn these facts about his career. He showed that he understands dairying, farming and kindred subjects as well as the law.

Classified Liners.

Times Classified Rates: The rate for inserting Want ads. in The Daily Times is 1c per word for each insertion; in the Sunday issue 1½c per word each insertion; minimum charge, 15c; except under following classifications, the rate for which is 2c per word, minimum charge 20 cents: "Society Meetings," "Personals," "Special Notices," "Church Notices," "Miscellaneous" and "Baths and Massage."

"Liner" (classified) advertisements for Sunday insertion received over the counter or by telephone after 11:30 o'clock Saturday nights will be inserted under heading "Too Late to Classify."

Sunday real estate advertisements, to be classified properly, must be in The Times office before 10:30 o'clock Saturday night. Rates 1½c per word.

The Sunday circulation of The Times exceeds 80,000 copies, and more "liners" are regularly printed in its columns than in the five other Los Angeles newspapers combined.

Telephone your want advertisements. Ring up "The Times" any time of day or night and secure prompt and careful attention.

The Times cannot guarantee accuracy or assume responsibility for errors of any kind occurring in telephoned advertisements.

THE TIMES will not be responsible for more than one incorrect insertion of any advertisement ordered for more than one time.

Advertisers should retain receipts given by The Times in payment for "liners," as no mistakes can be rectified without them.

ONE-TIME NOTICES—

[This classification is especially intended to cover announcements wherein the ELEMENT OF TIMELINESS is an essential feature, such as urgent notices of all kinds, assessment, dividend and company-meeting notices, fraternal-society notices (funeral notices excepted,) special bargain offers, with notices calling attention to advertisements in some other part of the paper, and all events to occur on any certain early date named. No standing advertisement accepted for this classification.]

PERSONAL—
PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
NOTED ASTROLOGER AND PALMIST.
303½ S. SPRING, NEAR THIRD ST.

A resident of Los Angeles 27 years.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is an experienced practitioner in the science of modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE—calculated from the PLANETS at your birth, will show what a powerful influence they have in all affairs of life. It shows diseases, deaths, domestic affairs, financial affairs, your talents; your environments; tells about children; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when in danger of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles, etc., etc., also your good periods coming—GIVING DATES OF THESE EVENTS FOR THE FUTURE, in fact, the HOROSCOPE GIVES ACCURATE AND RELIABLE information on ALL AFFAIRS OF LIFE. No important changes of ventures of ANY kind should be made except at such a time when the planets in YOUR horoscope are favorable. PREDICTIONS for the FUTURE—made by the trained judgment of Prof. Althouse, will stagger the senses. PROF. ALTHOUSE read E. H. Sothern, Nat Goodwin, Virginia Harned, Gadski, Admiral Schley, David Starr Jordan, ex-Gov. Pardee, ex-Senator Clark, Gen. Chaffee, Edison, Sousa, Modjeska, Annie Besant, Frederick Warde, Louis James, Lillian Russell, Calve, Admiral Evans, Baron Rothschild, H. E. Huntington, Julia Marlowe, Anna Held, Joaquin Miller Capt. Hobson Jefferson, etc. These are a few of the more NOTED PUBLIC PERSONS—and for this reason only are they here mentioned—ALL positively read by PROF. ALTHOUSE besides hundreds of the best people of Los Angeles, with whom all his readings are strictly CONFIDENTAL.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is an expert PALMIST, and WITH EACH PALM READING GIVES ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S skilled work must in no wise be classed with that of other readers.

Therefore, do not waste your money on the idiotic advice and warning of HUMBUG astrologers, palmists, psychics—ignorant charlatans—styling themselves Hindu readers, Men of Mystery, etc., but who were never in India, and those jealous of Prof. Althouse's work and success.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in the casting of horoscopes and hand reading has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

HIGHEST GRADE OF WORK that skill and experience can produce; therefore, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

Daily and evening. Sunday, 10 to 2.
STUDIO PARLORS, 303½ S. SPRING ST.

PERSONAL—
MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (over Owl Drug Store) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigation along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT information.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information o fconsiderably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions, and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sundays, 9 to 5.)

Positively the oldest established and largest concern handling second-hand cars exclusively on the Pacific Coast.

WE HAVE ENLARGED OUR QUARTERS, and now occupy
NOS. 713-715-717 SO. SPRING.
With the additional room we are prepared to handle more cars in a saleable condition.
SEND THEM ALONG.

Notice: All parties having cars for sale will do better, and save much time and annoyance by sending them direct to us, as we have more ready cash buyers than we can supply with machines in good repair.
AND AS WE HAVE DEMONSTRATED OUR ABILITY in the past by LEADING AND SELL WHEN ALL OTHERS FAIL.

Remember, we are the originators of the Automobile Brokerage Business in Los Angeles and dictate prices.

We have the largest and strongest force of buyers and salesmen to be found in any one brokerage establishment on the Pacific Coast and can offer you better cars for less money than you can find in any other house.

Machines bought outright or handled on commission.

FOR SALE—IN DIFFERENT COLUMN UNder this classification you will see many cars advertised as being the cheapest and best bargins to be had, you will also see new methods of selling second-hand cars, blind adds, etc. But really there is only one sure way to buy a second-hand car and that is to see them all, and then if you see one that suits your purpose (whether it is in our place or some one else), if you are mechanic all well and good, if you are not then get one upon who you can rely on absolutely and have him try the car out thoroughly and if there is the slightest question as to condition have the car turn down, and any fair minded dealer will afford you this privilege. We certainly will if others won't. We have the following new and second-hand cars to show you:
1910 Mercer Pony tonneau, fully equipped, $1600.
1910 Locomobile "30" Pony tonneau, just painted and overhauled, $2800.
Three new Marathons, guaranteed for life. Regular price $1650. This week $1200.
45-60-7 passenger Locomobile in dandy shape, $2000.
'08 Ford, a bargain at $350.
1910 Brush runabout and delivery car with double rumble, has only been run 300 miles, $450.
All the above cars are open for inspection, or any test which you may wish to put them to. We are open till 7:30 p.m. every evening and all day Sunday.

MR. BUYER—MR SELLER—

This should interest both of you.
Cars sold on 3 per cent. commission, $25 minimum. No more—no less.

TO THE SELLER.

Bring your auto, we mark it with your price and do not ask a buyer hundreds of dollars profit as others do.

TO THE BUYER.

Select your car, take a demonstration and when satisfied pay us $25, balance to owner and thereby know you are not being done for big profits. No other dealer will give you such a square deal. Therefore, buy of us. Every make to select from. If not in stock we can get what you want.

Why pay rent for an automobile when you can buy any car in our stock for $25 profit—use it as long as you like and have it resold on same terms.
BROADWAY AUTO EXCHANGE,
N.W. Cor. Main and 10th sts.

FOR SALE—
We are making a grand clearance sale of second-hand cars that we have taken in trade, all of which are thoroughly overhauled, and in every way in first-class condition, and like the day they went out of the factory new. With buying a car from a reliable firm, it is different from buying from the ordinary second-hand store, where they don't know what they are selling. Every car we offer for sale is thoroughly overhauled in our own factory and absolutely as we say.
Model "S" Tourist, 40 horsepower, 4-cylinder with top, speedometer, glass front, extra tire, cost $2750, run 4 months, $900.
40 horsepower Cadillac, like new, top, speedometer, 2 extra tires, $900.
24 horsepower Auburn with top, glass front, speedometer, rear platform springs, all in first-class condition. $500.
24 horsepower Tourist with top, absolutely like new, $500.
We have a few other bargains that are in good condition, ranging from $250 to $450. Don't buy until you see our stock.
W. J. BURT MOTOR CAR CO.

OIL PROPERTY—

OIL SYNDICATE.
$100.00 per unit, all cash, or $20.00 per month as money is needed to drill well. The syndicate limited to 300 units, or a total capitalization of $30,000. The syndicate has under option 520 acres of oil land in the Devil's Den District, with two complete drilling rigs. There was a well brought in on this property of 33 gravity oil, but the casing was lost and the well plugged. It will take less than six months to bring in a well on this property, and if you only invest $100.00 you have a real part of the whole, you don't own $100.00 worth of stock in a one or two million dollar corporation, but in a $30,000 syndicate, with no assessments, as there is a responsible oil man who guarantees to furnish all excess money required above $30,000.

This is a chance of a lifetime to get in right and have an equal voice with the rest in spending your money. You will be on the inside with your $100.00, one of the promoters, not one of the PROMOTED. If there is any money made you are bound to get your share. Do a little figuring for yourself. 520 acres of proven land with a good well.

For full particulars call 627 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., D. L. Peters.

Since writing the above ad the well has been started and is drilling night and day.

FOR SALE—AN ESTABLISHED OIL COMpany with less than 200,000 shares of stock issued and owning patented ground with producing wells in the Kern River field, has acquired 1000 acres of proven light oil ground in Santa Paula Canyon, Ventura county. The oil sands lie at approximately 1200 feet from the surface, and are more than 1000 feet in thickness; this assures inexpensive wells of great productiveness and long life; for the purpose of developing this property the company will offer 100,000 shares of its treasury stock at 50 cents per share, which will prove a safe and exceedingly profitable investment. See me for further particulars.

JAMES G. CORTELYOU,

KNABE REPRESENTATIVES.
FITZGERALD MUSIC COMPANY,
523 S. Broadway,
Los Angeles, Cal.

THE CREDITORS' LOSS IS YOUR GAIN. When the sheriff of Los Angeles closed the Angelus Music it made it possible for us to sell that splendid stock of pianos at 50c on the dollar. You positively never witnessed such a sacrifice of high pianos before, never in all your born days. Did you see pianos of such sterling quality sacrificed at such amazing and sensational prices? Don't fail to investigate the following: Emerson upright, splendid tone, $124; Gilbert & Co. upright, $65; Weber, mahogany case, $215; Mason Hamlin, magnificent tone, late model, $287; another, $190; Fischer, surely worth $350, now $160; Steinway, upright, $165; Cramer, mahogany case, $165; Knabe, splendid condition, $175; A. B. Chase, thoroughly guaranteed, $140; Sherwood, circassian walnut case, beautiful tone, $207; also a Vose, a Steinway and a Shuman & Sons that has been left with us by families moving away. These are to be sold for what they will bring. See them, make an offer, cash or payments. Be assured that you will find here a better piano for the money than obtainable elsewhere.

FOR SALE—
APARTMENT HOUSE.
BEST BUY IN THE CITY.
[illegible] rooms, large number of private baths, steam heat, hot water heater, with hot and cold water in all rooms and apartments. First-class elevator, large sun parlor, fine roof garden, fine lobby and parlors, location the best. Furnished very fine, and all in the best of condition. Profits run from $[illegible] to $[illegible] per year. The rent, considering the location, the fine rooms the house contains, and the conveniences, I believe is the lowest in the city, being only $[illegible] per month. It is in the very cream of condition, running absolutely full. During the summer past it not only ran full, but every few weeks we had a "waiting list" of from two to six. The furnishings cost more than the price we are asking. Price $[illegible], not less than half cash, balance terms. Might consider some trade here at its actual CASH value, possibly up to $[illegible], balance cash. Address OWNER, D, box 2[illegible], TIMES OFFICE.

FOR SALE—
Country Property.

ONTARIO, THE CITY THAT CHARMS. [illegible] miles east of Los Angeles, on three transcontinental railroads — Salt Lake, Southern Pacific and Santa Fe. The Pacific Electric R. R. now under construction, and soon to connect with Los Angeles. The ideal home spot of California.

5 acres—Valencias and Washington navels. These trees are full grown and have a heavy crop; located near Ontario, one mile to electric car line, high school and packing house. Well fertilized and fumigated this year. The soil is proven rich, as the grove has been a money maker. An ideal home grove. Five shares of water stock. Price, $[illegible]; $[illegible] down, balance in five years.

5 acres—Washington navels; well located and near Euclid ave. Has a good crop, and has had the best of care. Well fertilized and fumigated. Good, rich soil; 5 shares of water stock. Price, $[illegible]; mtg. $[illegible]. Will take good auto as part payment.

10 acres—Model Valencia and navel orange grove home. Trees [illegible] years old, uniform and in perfect condition. Fertilized and fumigated up to the minute. Crop now on the trees estimated by experts to be at least 7[illegible] boxes. Large 10-room modern house; elegant bath, electric lights and electric cooking, furnace, etc. Garage, stable, chicken corrals and other outbuildings. This grove is half mile from the business part of Ontario, on the main road from Los Angeles to Riverside. Considering the beautiful mountain view, fine soil, trees and other features you would find it dificult to find its equal. The grove is irrigated from underground pipe line, with hydrants for each row of trees. Private domestic water from mountains. An abundance of all kinds of fruits and berries. The price asked for this grove will allow big returns on the investment.

10 acres—Washington navels, [illegible] years old trees. Well fertilized and fumigated this season, and is in the pink of condition. Located near Euclid ave. and close to the mountains. Good soil of sandy loam nature; 10 shares of San Antonio water stock. No smudging on this place, as it is located in frostless district. Estimate crop this year is [illegible] boxes; may run a little over six. Nice 6-room hard finish house, bath, electric lights. Price $10,000; half down, with terms.

10 acres—5 acres in Eureka lemons, 4 acres in Washington navels; [illegible] trees, [illegible] years old. This place is well fertilized and just been fumigated. Lemons produced last year over $[illegible], oranges $1,[illegible], with a larger crop this year. Located near Euclid ave., in proven frostless district; finest of soil, being sandy loam; 10 shares of San Antonio water stock; house of 5 rooms, good outbuildings. The price at $[illegible], half down, time on the balance, figures big interest on the investment.

10 acres—4 acre in Valencias, 4 acres Eureka lemons, 2 acres in Washington navels; 1½ acres of the 2 in this spring buds. Well located in Ontario, in the northwest district. This grove has been well cared for, with plenty of fertilizer; also well fumigated; finest of soil. Good crop this year now on the trees; 10 shares of San Antonio water stock. Price for a short time $12,000; mortgage $[illegible] at [illegible] per cent; one-half down.

10 acres—Washington navels; heavily fertilized this year and given the best of care and attention. Trees 7 or 8 years old, except 3 rows on the east side, 15 years old. Estimate crop for this year [illegible] boxes, which is a fine showing for such a young grove. Finest of soil; 10 shares water stock; small house. This grove is near Euclid ave. and the high school. For a short time $[illegible],000, one-half down, terms to suit.

[illegible] acres—Washington navel and Valencia grove. This gilt-edge property is so laid out that we can subdivide into 10-acre pieces or more at prices from $[illegible] per acre to $[illegible]. You can here select a ten-acre grove, half navels and half Valencias, or double the amount, at will of each variety of fruit. The trees; 10 shares of San Antonio will appeal to any critical buyer.

YALE—HARVARD.

the whole season, but it lacked at critical times a master hand.

The punting was disappointing as a whole, although in the first period it gave promise of being a feature. Howe did not get distance, and Felton only was able to get telling distance.

In the game Harvard punted fifteen times for 620 yards, and Howe booted the ball twenty times for 810 yards. From the spectators' point of view, the features of the game were the variety of plays used and the more interesting fact that the ball could always be seen. The forward pass was used by Harvard five times.

Three tries were failures, and of the other two only one made a gain—and that only of eight yards. Yale did not use the play. Daly's drop kick was matched by one made by Lewis, which was a similar failure.

The superiority of Harvard over Yale was shown in the rushing, for ten times the Crimson got first down, and her work in this style, tried fifty-five times, brought gains of 201 yards, while Yale, following first down six times, tried rushing thirty-seven times for 111 yards.

Yale discarded the on-side kick entirely, while Harvard used it four times as an effective ground gainer.

The game was short, lasting less than an hour and three-quarters. The scene, which had for its setting a patch of green turf with banks of humanity on all four sides, scintillated with color in the sun as it slowly crept down the horizon. The singing was effective and one of the striking color effects was when the Harvard cheering section in the west stand outlined a great "H" in crimson, with pennants waving them to a college air.

The line-up:

Yale.		Harvard.
Kilpatrick	L. E.	Felton-Lewis
Scully	L. T.	McKay
Fuller-Childs	L. G.	Minot

Field judge—J. B. Pendleton, Bowdoin.

Head linesman—W. N. Morice, Pennsylvania.

Time—15-minute periods.

STORY OF GAME.

HARVARD HAS CHOICE.

Harvard won the toss and took the north goal field and the wind, giving Yale the kick-off.

Howe kicked off to Corbett on Harvard's 5-yard line, and the half-back dashed back fifteen yards before he was thrown. After Frothingham had made five yards through center, Felton kicked to Yale's 50-yard line. There was a Yale fumble, but the Blue kept the ball. Yale tried Harvard's center for no gain, and then Howe kicked to Corbett, who ran the ball back thirty-five yards to the center of the field before he was thrown.

Leslie tore through the Yale center for fifteen yards and then Felton kicked over the line. Yale lost five yards on the first down after the ball had been brought out and kicked to the center of the field. Corbett made twelve yards outside of tackle, and Leslie followed by planting the ball on Yale's 42-yard line.

YALE GETS BALL.

Wigglesworth made an on-side kick which rolled outside of Yale's 7-yard line. Yale kicked on the first down and Wigglesworth fumbled it on Yale's 45-yard line, the ball going to Yale. Field made four yards through center and then Yale tried a wing shift which Harvard stopped after a gain of one yard. Howe kicked out of bounds on Harvard's 40-yard line. Frothingham made five yards inside of a tackle; then Felton kicked to Yale's 30-yard line where there was another Yale fumble, but the Blue kept the ball. Field was slightly hurt, but resumed play. Yale tried another wing shift but there came a penalty which sent the Blue back fifteen yards. Howe kicked from behind his own goal line to the 50-yard line and Wigglesworth fumbled but managed to fall on the ball.

HARVARD PENALIZED.

On the first down, Harvard was sent back fifteen yards for holding. Felton kicked to Howe on the 60-yard line and the quarter-back ran it back seven yards. Then came a tackles-back play for Yale which gained only a yard. Howe kicked to Frothingham on Harvard's 65-yard line. Leslie failed to gain and Harvard lost five yards for off-side play. Felton kicked to Howe on Yale's 20-yard line and the little quarter-back ran it back fifteen yards by marvelous dodging.

Field made five yards, and then came a kick to Wigglesworth on Harvard's 33-yard line. Wigglesworth made seven yards on a quarter-back run. Leslie plunged through center and put the ball on Harvard's 54-yard line for a first down.

Corbett made a yard and then Felton kicked over the line. The ball was brought out to the 25-yard line and Yale by one of her wing shifts gained eight yards on a fine dash by Field. Howe by a quarter-back run made it first down on the 35-yard line. Howe then kicked to Corbett on Harvard's 38-yard line. Frothingham made three yards through center. Score, first period: Harvard, 0; Yale, 0. The period ended with the ball in Harvard's possession on her 45-yard line.

PLAY VERY EVEN.

In the second period Harvard reached Yale's 42-yard line but Yale was never nearer than fifty-four yards to the Crimson goal.

The teams changed sides for the second period, Yale having the benefit of the breeze. It was Harvard's ball on her 47-yard line and Felton kicked to Howe on the 50-yard line, the ball being run back seven yards. Howe kicked to Wigglesworth on Harvard's 46-yard line. Corbett made a fine dash through center but dropped the ball and it was Yale's ball in the center of the field. Then came a Yale penalty of fifteen yards for holding. Field dashed around Harvard's right end for twenty-five yards and planted the ball on Harvard's 46-yard line for a first down. Daly could not gain and it was Harvard's ball.

FROTHINGHAM OUT.

Wendall took Frothingham's place and plunged through the Yale team for eight yards. Wendall was given the ball again and made it first down on Yale's 52-yard line. Once more Wendall was given the ball for a five yard gain. For a fifth time he made the run, this time for a first down on Yale's 38-yard line. Corbett made five yards outside of tackle and Wendall made fifteen yards but the ball was brought back to the 45-yard line on a Harvard holding penalty.

Wendall made three yards. Then Wigglesworth made an on-side kick to Yale's 14-yard line, where Howe was thrown without gain. Haine kicked to Wigglesworth on Harvard's 38-yard line. Corbett, on a fake kick, made two yards around left end. A forward pass to the center of the field failed, and the ball went to Yale. Howe punted to Corbett on Harvard's 20-yard line. A Harvard man was nailed without gain. Corbett made a yard through center. Then Wendall, on a fake kick, plunged through to the 30-yard line for a first down. Corbett made two yards outside of tackle, and Wendall was called on for another of his wiggling plunges, and planted the ball on the 38-yard line. Minot was called on and made an on-side kick, which Smith of Harvard recovered on Yale's 48-yard line.

WIGGLESWORTH QUITS.

Potter went in for Wigglesworth. Corbett squeezed through, and was not thrown until he was on Yale's 28-yard line for a first down, the nearest up to that time that either team had reached either goal. On a fake kick Wendall was thrown, and then came a beautiful forward pass back to the 28-yard line. Harvard had to kick, and Howe got the ball on the 5-yard line. He kicked on the first down to Yale's 45-yard line, where an uncompleted forward pass lost Harvard five yards. Potter kicked to Yale's 28-yard line, and Howe on a quarter-back run around right end, made five yards. Howe punted to Potter on Harvard's 48-yard line. Potter tried an on-side kick, but the ball rolled out of bounds on Yale's 40-yard line. Score, end second period: Harvard, 0; Yale, 0.

MORE LINE-UP CHANGES.

In the third period Wigglesworth went back to quarter for Harvard, and Childs took Fuller's place for Yale. Wendall kicked off to 35-yard line. After Corbett had made three yards he kicked to Yale's 37-yard line. Kilpatrick made twelve yards through center on Yale's favorite tackles-back play. Kistler made three more on the same play, and Daly made another seven yards through Yale's 47-yard line.

After a short gain Harvard was off-side and it was Yale's ball for a first down on Harvard's 53-yard line. Then came a Yale fumble of the ball which went to Harvard on her 44-yard line. Corbett could not gain around left end. Morrison took Leslie's place at full-back for Harvard. Corbett kicked for first down to Yale's 25-yard line. Daly through center made several yards on another of Yale's favorite tackle plays but on the next down Field was thrown back for a loss of five yards and Howe kicked to Corbett on Harvard's 45-yard line and the Crimson half-back dashed back to Yale's 43-yard line before he was donwed. Wendall made three yards through center and then seven yards more and it was Harvard's ball on Yale's 32-yard line for a first down. Morrison made two yards and Wendall one. The ball was in Harvard's possession on Yale's 28-yard line. Wigglesworth tried a forward pass, the ball going to Yale on her 15-yard line.

Daly was thrown back for a loss of two yards. Field could not gain on the third down and Howe kicked to Wigglesworth on the 45-yard line and the ball was run back to Yale's 38-yard line. Graustein took Corbett's place. Wendall made five yards through center and then Leads dropped back for a try at goal from the field but it was a poor attempt and Howe caught the ball on his 10-yard line and ran back eight yards. Harvard lost five yards for penalty and it was Yale's ball on the 25-yard line. Daly made eight yards through the center. Field made it a first down on Yale's 40-yard line. Kistler could not gain on a wing shift around right end but Daly made two yards. Howe kicked to Harvard's 50-yard line. Wendall, who caught the ball, ran it back ten yards. Then came a Harvard penalty which took the ball back to the center of the field. The period ended with the ball in Harvard's possession on Harvard's 53-yard line.

Just as the period ended there was excitement in the Yale stand through some of the woodwork catching fire, but a chemical engine on the ground soon put it out. Score: Third period—Harvard, 0; Yale, 0.

The fourth period began with Harvard having the ball just over the center line. Corbett took Graustein's place and made five yards on a double pass. Wendall made six more and a first down on Yale's 42-yard line. Corbett made two yards and Wendall four yards around left end.

Wigglesworth kicked to Howe on his 2-yard line. Howe kicked out of bounds on his own 28-yard line where Harvard got the ball. Wendall made five yards and then gathered in two more, but Harvard was off-side and was sent back to the 28-yard line. Wendall staggered through to Yale's 20-yard line. In a moment he made a first down on Yale's 15-yard line. He made two yards on the next play with the Yale team fighting like demons.

CORBETT FUMBLES.

Just as Harvard was aiming for Yale's goal Corbett fumbled on Yale's 12-yard line and the Yale stands went wild when a Blue-legged player fell on the ball. Field was hurt and a short delay ensued. Yale kicked on the first down to her 40-yard line. Wendall made four yards and then Corbett made a fumble, but recovered the ball. It was still Harvard's ball on Yale's 40-yard line. Corbett went in for Field in Yale's back field. Wigglesworth muffed a passed back ball and it was Yale's ball in the center of the field on downs.

Daly could not gain and was thrown back for a loss of six yards. He then kicked to Wigglesworth who ran the ball back to Harvard's 30-yard line. Wendall made four yards through tackle. Then on a beautiful forward pass Smith carried the ball to the center of the field. On a double pass Corbett made two yards. Wigglesworth tried a quarterback run for no gain. An on-side kick gave the ball to Yale on her 30-yard line. Corey made three yards around right end. Vaughn took Brooks's place. Smith took Perkins's place in Harvard line.

Daly kicked to Wigglesworth, who ran the ball back to the 50-yard line but on the next play a forward pass was attempted and Harvard lost six yards. Then Wigglesworth kicked out of bounds on Yale's 40-yard line. Howe punted out of bounds on Harvard's 25-yard line on the second down. On a fake kick Corbett was thrown back for a loss of five yards. He was compelled to kick from the 18-yard line. Gardner took Wigglesworth's place at quarter. Minot kicked out of bounds on Harvard's 35-yard line, where Daly tried a goal from the field, the ball going wild.

Corbett made ten yards. There the game ended in a scoreless tie.

YOU MONSTER!

"OH, YOU JACKIE," CRY PARISIENNES

Uncle Sam's Sailormen Make Gay Capital Gape.

Four Hundred From Squadron Take in Sights.

Brawny Figures and Shaven Faces Excite Comment.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] For two days Paris has been staring its eyes out at over 400 United States bluejackets and marines who have come to town from the vessels of the Atlantic squadron lying at Brest and Cherbourg. The blase French capital, thoroughly accustomed to the graceful robes and turbans of Bedouin Arabs, the skirted men of East India, the trousered women of China, Turkish fezes and savage-looking Cossacks in brown overcoats, is now suddenly wild with curiosity over the blue caps and peajackets of Uncle Sam's seamen.

"Their stature disconcerts us and we are struck by the fact that all their faces are carefully shaved," writes Ludovic Nadau in Le Journal. Consequently everywhere the tars wander they find themselves surrounded by gaping Parisians.

Half the city's shop girls have learned to say "Hello, Jack" in English as they take their airing at the noon hour. The usual answer is a sheepish grin on the part of the sailorman, who does not speak French. Practically every one of them is lost, being unable to ask for directions and unable to understand the answers.

Several of the sailors wished to try the French absinthe, and took away the breaths of the Parisians when, instead of mixing it with water and sugar and sipping it in two hours, they drank it straight in one gulp.

The American contingents are establishing a record for orderliness.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

President of San Pedro Improvement Association Tells of Urgent Needs for City's Gates.

Capt. Louis Hanson, president of the San Pedro Improvement Association, addressed a meeting of about eighty citizens last night in Symphony Hall on the improvements needed in Los Angeles Harbor.

He drew a parallel between the great harbors of Hamburg and Bremen and Los Angeles. He said that there was every prospect of Los Angeles harbor becoming equally great. He spoke of the Panama Canal being completed in three years and of how the great vessels of the Atlantic would steam into the Pacific. He said that there would have to be a depth of forty feet provided to receive these vessels as they drew between thirty-five and forty feet when loaded.

Capt. Hanson urged the need of the erection of great warehouses at San Pedro which would be owned by Los Angeles city, and also said that it was highly important that a municipal road be constructed between Los Angeles and San Pedro.

He spoke for two hours and cited many instances where harbors with less original advantages than San Pedro had by careful and judicious work been brought to a state of proficiency unmatched in the world.

Mayor Alexander was on the platform with Captain Hanson and spoke briefly, indorsing all that had been said as to the needs at San Pedro.

The Home Doctor.

Noted Doctor's Best Prescriptions Will Save Much Suffering and Money—Keep Them.

Cures a Cough or Cold in a Day.

A cold should never be permitted to linger; it is extremely dangerous; pneumonia, consumption and other dread diseases follow neglected colds. The following is one of the best and quickest cough and cold cures known to the medicine profession. "Two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine. Add these to half a pint of good whisky and shake them well. Use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours." Smaller doses to children, according to age. Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will get them from his wholesale house. Any one can easily mix them, but be sure you get the real Concentrated Pine. It comes in half-ounce vials, packed in tin-top air-tight cases.

Best Rheumatism Prescription.

The following will be found to work wonders in promptly relieving rheumatism and lame back. This was published here last winter, and thousands were cured by its use. "One ounce syrup of Sarsaparilla compound and one ounce of Toris compound. Add these to half a pint good whisky or sherry wine if it is preferred.) Take a tablespoonful of this mixture before each meal and at bed time." Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will quickly get them from his wholesale house. Any one can easily mix them. The good effects of this treatment are usually felt after the first few doses.

A well-known physician gives the formula for a wonderful digestion mixture, which quickly relieves distress after eating, headaches, belching, sour stomach, dizziness, etc., and, if used for sufficient time, will completely cure the worst case of dyspepsia.

"Two ounces essence of Pepsin, three ounces syrup of Ginger, one ounce Catandir compound. These to be mixed in a six-ounce bottle, shaken well, and used in doses of from one to two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bedtime.

The Catandir is a comparatively recent preparation and may not be kept in stock by some of the smaller druggists, but he can get it very promptly from his wholesale house. This mixture is not expensive, and is surely worth trying by any one with stomach trouble. In hospital work it has been very successful.

Restores Rosy Complexion.

The following prescription is contributed as being one of the most remarkable known for bringing back the rosy tint of youth to the skin:

Two ounces Rose Water, one ounce Spirits of Cologne (or pure grain alcohol,) four ounces Sartoin. Put the Sartoin into a pint of hot water (not boiling,) and when dissolved and cooled add the Rose Water and Spirits of Cologne (or alcohol) and strain through a fine cloth. Any large bottle will serve as a receptacle if it can be closed air-tight.

Any druggist has these ingredients in stock or will get them in a few hours from his wholesale house. They are easily mixed at home. This preparation should be applied once a day after washing. It is said the results become apparent after the first few applications, but the treatment should be continued until the rose tint complexion becomes permanent.

The Herpicide Girl is Thankful

At this season of thanksgiving I know of nothing that I need to be more thankful for than Newbro's Herpicide. Thousands of ladies not only in the United States but all over the world feel the same way about it. To this wonderful scalp and hair remedy they owe their soft, long, beautiful hair.

Mary J. Terry of Lovejoy, Ill., writes:

"My hair came out until there was just a scanty cover for the scalp. I tried everything I ever heard of or read about until I finally used Herpicide. There is nothing like it. My head is now covered with new hair. I shall forever praise Herpicide."

Most hair troubles come from dandruff. Newbro's Herpicide removes this dandruff by killing the germ which causes it. It also stimulates a flow of blood which nourishes the follicles. The scalp being healthy, the hair does not come out and the new hair is allowed to grow.

There are other preparations which they say are "just as good" as Herpicide. It is not advisable to try them. Instead of doing any good they may do positive harm.

No one is ever disappointed in Newbro's Herpicide. The results are always the same, always satisfactory as is indicated by the fact that Herpicide has been sold for years and has thousands of satisfied friends. It is the only genuine, original dandruff germ destroyer. There is nothing "just as good."

One Dollar Bottles are sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

Kidney and Liver Trouble Quickly Cured

The case of Mrs. Lizzie Brown, who resides at 1529 Broadway, Indianapolis, Ind., is a striking example of how an aggravated case of diseased kidneys and liver can be quickly relieved by Warner's Safe Cure, the world-renowned cure for kidney, liver and bladder diseases.

Mrs. Brown was so ill that she had intense suffering all the time and lost 17 pounds in two weeks. In a recent letter she said: "After suffering for fifteen years with kidney and liver trouble, I gave your remedy, Warner's Safe Cure, a trial. I had suffered so intensely that I did not believe there was any relief for me as I had used many other remedies without getting any help. There was blood, also sand deposits, in the urine, and I lost 17 pounds in two weeks. Now I find myself so much improved, after the use of Warner's Safe Cure, that I shall continue its use until cured."

If you have pains in the back or other symptoms, or if any of your family has been troubled with kidney disease, you should lose no time in getting a bottle of Warner's Safe Cure, and begin taking it as prescribed.

Warner's Safe Cure is made from the fresh juices of plants and medicinal roots, gathered at the proper season in various quarters of the globe. It is prepared by men skilled in pharmacy and chemistry; is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the most sensitive stomach. It is put up in 50c and $1.00 sizes, and sold by druggists everywhere.

For constipation and biliousness take Warner's Safe Pills, purely vegetable, absolutely free from injurious substances, a perfect laxative. They do not gripe or leave any bad after effects. 25c a box.

If you have never tried WARNER'S SAFE CURE, send us your name and address. We will send you sample bottle, together with sample box of WARNER'S SAFE PILLS, free of charge. All we ask is that you mention the name of this paper when writing. WARNER'S SAFE CURE CO., Rochester, New York.

Navy Endorses and Uses Distilled Water.

On Practically All United States Battleships the Drinking Water Is Distilled Water. Authorities State It Has a Beneficial Effect On the Health of the Men.

Did you know that distilled water is used throughout the navy? Such is the case. J. F. Urie, of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, U. S. Navy, writes:

"The use of distilled water in the navy is considered one of the principal factors in the high standard of health maintained in the navy of today."

That distilled water is best for drinking purposes has long been recognized by those in a position to know. Here in Los Angeles hundreds of physicians use and indorse Puritas Distilled Water. Thousands of patrons all over Southern California drink Puritas regularly. They have given it the test of years. They know how pure and wholesome and healthful it is.

Most natural waters hereabouts contain considerable amounts of minerals. These are harmful—cannot be assimilated by the body—are a fertile cause of rheumatic and kidney troubles.

There is no successful method of removing minerals dissolved in water, except by distillation. Our process of distillation is perfect. It distills the water twice, producing an absolutely "soft," pure water. To make the distilled water sparkling and pleasant to drink, we aerate it with pure ozone, securing this by passing a current of electricity through filtered air. Puritas is bottled in clean glass demijohns so carefully that it reaches you with all its wholesome purity intact.

If you are not now using Puritas, you can see that it is a matter of common sense to do so. The expense is trifling. Five gallons cost but 40c, delivered within the old city boundary lines.

At outside points the cost is a trifle more, owing to the long haul. Regular Puritas customers purchase Coupon Books, thus securing the pure water at a discount. When you telephone, ask us about these. Home 10053; Sunset, Main 8191.

Puritas is obtainable at most towns in Southern California. If you are unable to find it readily, accept no substitute. Just write us, and we will see that you are supplied.

The vast number of patients whose mouths were possibly in a worse condition than yours will tell you of the wonders of our claims. Best of all, what is promised you, you get, for our reputation has been founded on fair dealing. Ask your neighbor, who possibly has been one of our patients, if these facts are true.

Now for the other side. If what has been said is true, then we want your patronage. We want to show you what can be done where others have discouraged you. We want to show you what this Alveolar method will do for your individual case. We want you to know that after the work is done you will have comfort in eating anything you wish. We want to cure your mouth of Pyorrhea, thereby saving you from losing your natural teeth.

If by fair dealing and honest treatment we can induce you to let us examine your mouth and advise you, then we know in the future we will number you among our long list of satisfied patients.

There is no charge for examination and advice, so you are out nothing by calling. Make up your mind today. Delays are dangerous. Send for our free book. It contains information that will be of value to you.

ARRIOLA HAS HIS OWN IDEAS.

Boy Pianist Gives Theory of "Times" Disaster.

Knows How to Fix Punctured Automobile Tire.

Native of Spain, Talks German, Adopts America.

Pepito Arriola is not a boy phenomenon. Neither is he a foreigner. He is a normal boy with a wonderful talent for music, a native of Spain, a German by education and an American by his own adoption. The fun he is having in Los Angeles resembles that of any other American boy, except that he has a little more trouble in dodging dinner parties, afternoon teas and other things that are supposed to appeal to great artists as proper expressions of interest.

Pepito didn't know yesterday who he would play at this afternoon's concert. He had nothing to say about and Liszt. When he came mfwypp his preferences as between Chopin and Liszt. When it came to automobiles, moving picture shows, and the question of who dynamited The Times Building he was an exhaustive fountain of conversation. He is 12 years old in his enthusiasm and about 42 in the maturity of his ideas.

"Why don't they catch the men who blew up The Times Building?" he asked. "That was 'furchtbar'. (Fearful, which is English for the same thing, is not as expressive.) Two things are very clear to me. I think the man who really put the bomb in its place was not the guilty one. Someone must have paid him to do it. A crank would not be so deliberate and calculating. The American police are usually very clever, and I think they should find out who furnished the money.

"I think there was someone who knew all about The Times Building. He must have been there before. Cannot the police find out who was spying on the place before it was destroyed?"

NOT ALL IN HIS FINGERS.

When a boy pianist of 12 who has been in the city but a week, and who speaks the English language little, comes out with arguments like this, it appears that he has some remarkable talents that are not in his fingers. Pepito has no exaggerated notions of his importance. He quite understands that when there is no piano about he has nothing but his wits to rely on like any other boy. Just now he is more delighted over his ability to run an automobile than his fingering of a rhapsody.

"I can mend a tire all right," he said, "and if any little thing goes wrong with an engine I could fix it. As for driving, that is simple enough. You have the brake and the throttle under your feet and the steering wheel in your hand. Then you reach down at the side when you want to change your speed. I think I shall buy a large American touring car. In fact, I should very much like to return from San Francisco to New York by automobile."

"But we couldn't take the piano," protested his manager.

The answer to this little pleasantry was a quick uppercut to the jaw which stopped just short of the jolt and ended in a tweak of the ear. Pepito is as fond of having some one around to take a little good natured pummeling as any other boy.

His philosophy, for one of his years, is to smile. He said something about going up the mountain and was asked if he would like a long walk.

"Why should one walk?" he queried. "I understand the electric cars go all the way up?"

"Some people walk up for the exercise and the fun of it," was suggested.

"That is all very well," he continued, "but the electric car and the automobile were invented to make it unnecessary to walk so far. The automobile is so much quicker that I do not think it pays to walk more than four or five blocks. Otherwise call an automobile and you will be there quickly.

SIMPLE AND EARNEST.

"Of course when it is necessary it is quite different. We were in a little village one time and it was necessary to have fresh, warm milk. There was no automobile and I ran two miles to fetch it. But one does not regret meeting a necessity."

Pepito has the simple, earnest style of a Goethe or a Heinrich Heine in his conversation. A new idea is a great pleasure to him and his mind runs on ahead of his tongue with lightning swiftness. He is as full of current information as the average newspaper reader and as eager to gather more as if he had landed in America yesterday. He absorbs everything from a railway folder to a census report and can rattle off the distance from Kansas City to Louisville or the population of Detroit without hesitation. He does all his mathematics in his head and how he keeps all these things separated from the realms of difficult music that he plays from memory is a mystery.

Yet he is not what people usually mean by a boy phenomenon. He doesn't seem to overbalance in any direction and if you should meet him on his return from a moving picture show or an automobile trip you wouldn't know that anything else had ever passed through his head.

MAY WIN TITLE.

Mrs. Fitz-George Here for the Winter, Hopes Son May Have Dukedom Restored.

Mrs. R. Baring-Fitz-George of London and Hampshire is a guest at the Angelus.

She will make her home here this winter and will be one of the most prized additions to the annual English traveling colony that congregates here for the season.

Mrs. Fitz-George is a daughter of the famous banker of that name whose firm was Baring-Rothschild. The husband of Mrs. Fitz-George was the eldest of three sons of the Duke of Cambridge, who, having contracted a morganatic marriage, lost for his heirs the title which he bore.

It is the fondest wish and hope of Mrs. Fitz-George that her son, who is now in the British Navy, shall become the Duke of Cambridge.

"Why shouldn't he?" she queried yesterday while telling of her hopes and desires. "His Royal Highness, King George, is a cousin of my husband, and, having been very fond of the navy and knowing my son, he may give back to him the title."

The distinguished English woman is here for pleasure. "I came despite the fact that my traveling companion was taken sick while we were in the East and could proceed no farther," she said. "I have always wanted to see this part of the world and now I am here, I expect to enjoy it."

She is rather a striking woman, well preserved and an excellent conversationalist.

DAUGHTER IS MISSING.

Ranchman Asks Police to Find Girl Who Had Just Received Large Sum.

S. P. Lee, a ranchman living near Tecopah, this State, has asked the local police to aid him in finding his daughter, Clara, a half-breed Indian girl, who worked in Ocean Park last August. Lee says in his letter to the Chief of Police that he placed $1250 in a local bank for his daughter when she came to Southern California last summer. He declares he has not heard from her for several weeks.

Lee is a Forty-niner. He came to California during the gold craze, and after seeking his fortune in the mines, determined to try ranching. He married a Piute squaw and took land near Tecopah.

He lived happily with his wife. Their daughter was sent to the Sherman Indian School at Riverside and proved an apt pupil. She graduated and worked in Riverside for a time. Later she went to Ocean Park.

Lee is about 70 years old and his wife is also well advanced in years, but the daughter is only about 20 years of age. The mother finds comfort in the girl. She speaks only the Piute language, and looks upon the girl as a very superior person.

PRIZE SINGERS.

Five Societies Will Be Heard in Famous Selections at Turner Hall This Afternoon.

The United Saenger-Bund of Southern California will give a great concert at Turner Hall at two o'clock this afternoon. Five societies of German singers from this part of the State, the same that won the world's prize at the San Francisco singing tournament, will be heard under the direction of Director F. Hagen.

Among the numbers which will be sung are "Lorelei" of Silcher, and "Lindenbaum" of Schubert. The Fidelia Maennerchor will sing the "Abendfeier" and the Concordia chorus will give "My Turtle Dove." The Arion and the Turnverein Mennerchor will sing "Heimkehr" and "Woodland Night" under the direction respectively of F. Reiser and L. Thomas. The Viennese Orchestra, directed by Adolph Tandler, will play selections. Mrs. Hermann Vetter will act as soloist in two of the songs. Mayer's Orchestra will play the accompaniments.

LINE TO COUNTRY CLUB.

Huntington to Stay Within the City Limits and Los Angeles Pacific May Extend.

Residents of Santa Monica and members of the Country Club are wondering what is to become of the talked-of extension of the Vineyard line of the Los Angeles Pacific railway, or the building out of one of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation lines to reach the club and the beach town. It is probable that the Los Angeles Pacific will extend its line to the Country Club, but any extension to Santa Monica is not included in any immediate plans for the future. The Vineyard line is now within a quarter of a mile of the Country Club.

There is no probability of an extension of any of the lines of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. Under the agreement between H. E. Huntington, the city lines, now all controlled by him, cannot be extended beyond the city limits, and the interurban lines, which are all now under Southern Pacific control, cannot invade the city.

BACK ON HIS JOB.

Engineer Leeds in Charge of River and Harbor Work, Recovers From Illness.

Capt. Leeds, engineer officer in charge of river and harbor work at San Pedro, having recovered during his stay at Fort Bayard, where he was sent last July for treatment, has been ordered to return to this city where, in the estimation of the War Department, he was doing excellent work up to the time it became necessary to send him to the army sanatorium.

Capt. Stickey, his relief here, has been ordered back to San Francisco, where he will resume his duties as assistant to Capt. Jackson, engineer officer in charge of that district.

"Your honeymoon was a great success, was it not?"

"Simply unparalleled. Why, we came back home with money—and we still love each other."—[Life.

"Are you going to your card club this afternoon?"

"No, it's my turn to stay away and be talked about."—[Detroit Free Press.

acid purchased five years ago, when he cut his finger in some manner while killing gophers on the lawn. Since that time the little bottle of poison had been stowed away in the bathroom, where the old man found it while the members of the family were busy in other parts of the house.

"My father-in-law was very despondent yesterday forenoon at about 10 o'clock," said Price last night. "He was feeling his age, and the fact that the cold with which he suffered was more than usually hard to shake off made him despondent. When I went to his room then he complained that he was very sick. I tried to cheer him by telling him that the doctor had found him much better, and that he had no fever, but he refused to be comforted. I had to leave him then, as I had an important engagement downtown."

The police report, made to the University Station, recites that Miller left a note to the effect that he was tired of living with his children and would rather be dead.

SPLIT EVEN.

OFFICE PLUMS ARE DIVIDED.

TULARE COUNTY PICKS PLACES FOR ITS CITIZENS.

Party Lines Apparently Not Drawn in Selection of Officers. Fence Pops Up During the Night. Raisin Growers Form Pool—Buck Creates Sensation.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

VISALIA, Nov. 19.—Attention of the politicians is now being centered upon the appointments to be made by the successful county officers for their deputies and other office assistants. This year Tulare county, for the first time in its history, is to be governed by a set of officers comprising as many Republicans as Democrats. Ever since the organization of the county, Tulare has been safely and completely in the hands of the Bourbons.

A. M. Coburn, the new county clerk has selected as his deputy, Arthur T. Bond, who was defeated for county auditor. Bryon O. Lovelace, Republican county surveyor, has appointed Elmer Sibley, of Dinuba, deputy. Mr. Sibley, is a graduate of the technical department of the State University and for several years the engineer of the Alta District Irrigation Company.

Sheriff Collins against whom there was led a bitter and vituperative fight, chiefly upon the score of his deputies, has announced that he will retain Dave Douglass as under-Sheriff, with all those who served last year as deputies.

FENCE POPS UP.

In order to bring to an issue the old contention that a portion of Goshen avenue has never been properly deeded to the city, a fence was erected at midnight. This morning the residents of the 700 block on the street awoke to find that the south half of the street for a considerable portion of the block, was fenced off with barbed wire.

It is the contention of property owners of the south half of the block that there never has been a transfer of this portion of the street to the city for use as a highway, and that they propose to make the city pay for the right of way.

City Attorney Miller stated this evening that the contestants have no legal rights under the law. He advised the police to tear down the fences and, in case any attempt is made to rebuild them, to have the offenders arrested.

RAISIN POOL.

GROWERS CONSOLIDATE CROPS.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

DINUBA, Nov. 19.—Fifty growers of the Oleander vineyard district took the first concerted action toward the proposed consolidation of the raisin producers when they met last night at the Farmers' Union warehouse near Oleander, and pledged their 1910 crop to a pool which shall be held until better prices and more encouraging market conditions prevail.

It is roughly proposed that each grower have careful inspection of his crop made at the time of storing, that the tonnage of his crop be ascertained, and when the pool has been completed, warehouse certificates may be negotiated against the pool. It is understood that local and other banks have agreed to handle such certificates during the coming year.

C. M. A. Thiele acted as the chairman of the meeting, and stated as a preliminary to signing the pledges that similar action is to be taken throughout the raisin district. It was definitely decided that the pool be placed in the hands of A. Sorenson, the president of the Farmers' Union, for selling. The move is not properly speaking a Union affair, as independents have been encouraged to enter the pool.

No details of the tonnage represented could be ascertained, although at the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Sorenson stated, with a satisfied smile, that it was "considerable."

As is the case with Union movements, no price has been decided upon, and the pool may be broken at any time when the figure from the buyers appears satisfactory.

ERROR IN PAVING.

SURVEYORS FIND NO LEVELS.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

PORTERVILLE, Nov. 19.—Preliminary surveys ordered of the city engineering department by the Council, has resulted in the discovery that when the present paving in the business district was laid, no attention was paid to datum planes or engineering standards, and the repaving of the streets to make it a part of the large plan for the city improvement will be difficult and costly.

It has been ascertained from running levels on Main street, for instance, that no four corners of street intersections are upon the same level and in some instances, the difference between opposite sides of the street are as much as nine inches.

City Engineer Althouse is now engaged in the problem of resurvey to accomplish the improvement work, if possible, without relaying several miles of sidewalks.

Rain of the past four days has seriously hampered orange picking, and the average for the week has reached consignments of fourteen cars each twenty-four hours.

ADMIRED PLUCK.

BUCK CHASED THROUGH TOWN.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

DAUNT, Nov. 19.—Residents of the upper portion of this village were startled yesterday by the appearance upon the streets of an exceptionally fine buck which, hard pressed by a pack of dogs, ran through the residence portion of town.

Audaciousness saved the animal, for although seen by dozens of residents and one party of hunters, no attempt was made to shoot it. In fact, in running through town, the bystanders were so impressed with the gallant appearance of the deer that the dogs were chased from the pursuit. The last seen of the buck it was bounding through the foothills toward the heavy timber to the north of the town.

SAVE THE YOUTHS.

Jailer Makes Suggestion Which Would Prevent Lads Mingling With Criminals in County Jail.

Apparently there is a steady increase in the number of youths under 18 years of age arrested by the police and confined in the County Jail to await trial before the Juvenile Court.

At present there are about ten boys in prison cells charged with minor crimes, and held without bail. Several have been under arrest before, but the majority are without police records.

While awaiting trial, the boys mingle with older prisoners. They breathe in the same prison atmosphere as the others, which tends to warp them.

According to Jailer Gallagher, conditions could be bettered if the boys' folks were informed immediately after their arrest. The parents could then vouch for their appearance before the Juvenile Court at any date set by the officers.

"I believe that the police should notify the parents of every boy arrested, and instead of locking him up, pending their arrival at police headquarters, detain the lads in the captain's office," said Gallagher. "The boy gains no good by rubbing his nose against the criminal influences that one finds about a jail. I have known of many cases where boys have been obliged to quit school, because it had become known that they had spent a night or two in the County Jail. Scores of boys have been turned loose by Sheriff Hammel, Judge Wilbur and myself, merely on their promise to be present in court the next day."

No More Tired Feet, No More Aching Feet---TIZ Does it

Try the New Wonder. Makes Well--Sore Feet, Swollen Feet, Sweaty Feet, Smelly Feet, Corns, Callicuses and Bunions--Quick

Feel Tired? TIZ Will Make Your Feet Feel Like a June Morning

Still the good work goes on. Pretty soon there won't be any sore feet in Los Angeles. Try this marvel—TIZ, the surprise of the tender-footed—is making the sore feet, the sweaty feet, the swollen feet, the aching feet, the feet with corns, callouses or bunions well again and doing it right off quick.

If you haven't tried it yet, get into the band wagon and do it today. Remember TIZ is not a foot powder. It is not like anything you ever heard of, but it's a wonder just the same.

No matter what ails your feet or what under heaven you have used without getting relief, just use TIZ. It acts right off. It cures sore feet to stay cured. It's the only foot remedy ever made which acts on the principle of drawing out all the poisonous exudations which cause sore feet. Powders and other remedies merely clog up the pores. TIZ cleans them out and keeps them clean. You will feel better the first time it's used. Use it a week and you can forget you ever had sore feet. There is nothing on earth that can compare with it. TIZ is for sale at all druggists—at 25c per box. Made by Walter Luther Dodge & Co., Chicago, Ill.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

PASADENA.

NO BRIDGE YET, FUNDS TOO LOW.

ARROYO SECO STRUCTURE MUST WAIT AWHILE.

Board of Trade Committee Will Make Another Effort to Induce the Supervisors to Act—Expert Florists to Act as Judges of Entries in Rose Tournament Parade.

(Office of The Times, 26 S. Raymond Ave.)

PASADENA, Nov. 19.—The much-talked-of Arroyo Seco bridge to span that turbulent stream at the foot of West Colorado street and connect Pasadena with Eagle Rock, Annandale, Glendale and the San Fernando Valley, has but little prospect of being built for a year or two, at least, according to County Supervisor Manning, who states that the funds at the present time are very low for additional bridges.

The Board of Trade Committee which was to have called on the Supervisors did not make the trip yesterday, because it found that Supervisor Manning, to whom it had been pinning faith, would not be in the courthouse, therefore the trip was given up until the first of the week.

The tentative plans for the bridge, a sketch of which was presented to County Surveyor Noble some two months ago at the suggestion of Manning, are not lost, but are still in the hands of the surveyor. However, that official gave Manning his figures on the proposed bridge within a week after they were presented, but Supervisor Manning stated last night that it had been so long ago that he had forgotten all about it. Surveyor Noble said yesterday that he advised Mr. Manning that the sketch submitted by the Pasadena Board of Trade provides for a bridge which cannot be built for less than from $185,000 to $200,000; that Williams & Nishkian, the Pasadena engineers, did not figure enough for proper foundations for the piers when they estimated the bridge would cost but $150,000. Mr. Noble states that further than that he knows nothing, but has been holding himself in readiness for further orders from the Board of Supervisors.

In the meantime Bridge Engineer Rothenburg of the County Surveyor's office has taken a personal interest in the matter, and during his evenings and holidays has been making sketches for a bridge over the Arroyo Seco according to his own ideas. His tentative plans provide for a slightly different bridge from the Williams & Nishkian proposition. Rothenburg's would have a bridge the same height above the arroyo, but 122 feet shorter, on which account it will not cost so much money. Instead of making the reverse curve over the Scoville orange grove, he would have the approach commence at the corner of West Colorado street and Grand avenue. It would run straight until it reaches a point directly over the present Arroyo drive, when it would make a long turn southwest, following the Arroyo drive to the bank of the arroyo, when it would make another long curve directly across the arroyo. In addition to making a saving in the length of the bridge and having long turns, there would be a great saving in right-of-way, inasmuch as the only land to be condemned would be a strip sixty feet wide from Colorado and Grand to Arroyo drive, some 800 feet long.

It is quite likely that Rothenburg's plans will be very interesting to the Pasadena people who want the bridge built and they will receive due consideration if the time ever comes when money will be provided.

Surveyor Noble stated yesterday that, under any consideration, it will take approximately $200,000 to built a good and substantial bridge such as would become Pasadena but that amount will not admit of much in the way of ornamentation. Inasmuch as the bridge is absolutely necessary as a connecting link in the foot-hill boulevard system now being constructed by the Highway Commission, it is generally believed that with the assistance of that body and a strong demand from Pasadena the Supervisors can be made to see things in a different light, and that active operations can be gotten under way during the present winter.

OCTOGENARIAN WINS COW.

Otto Fleischner, 84 years of age, hale and hearty, a native of Germany, a resident for sixty years of Keokuk, Iowa, and a winter sojourner in Southern California, won a brindle Jersey cow yesterday by walking to the summit of Mt. Wilson and back again between sun-up and sun-down. Fleischner has a friend living near Sierra Madre who was for many years a resident of Keokuk. The other day they met and the friend commenced to tell Fleischner about the deceptiveness of Southern California and that while the tops of the mountains look to be only a short distance away that in reality the distance is great. The old German could not be convinced therefore a wager was made that Fleischner could not make the round trip to the Carnegie Solar Observatory and back between suns. Yesterday morning at sunrise Fleischner, with coat off and pants rolled up to the his shoe tops, reported for the journey and made the trip alone returning while the sun was over half an hour high, and thus won the cow.

EXPERT FLORISTS AS JUDGES.

President Hogan of the Tournament of Roses announced yesterday that the rule will be changed this year, and that all judging of floats and other decorations in the great rose parade will be done by experts who live outside of Pasadena and who are practically unacquainted with any of the contestants. In this way Hogan hopes to avoid any opportunity of complaint on account of prejudice in awarding prizes. An effort will be made to get Paul de Longpre, the famous artist of Hollywood, to be chairman of the committee who will judge the decorated carriages.

A large number of votes was polled yesterday in the "Rose Queen" contest with the result that Miss Ruth Palmer reached the high mark with 5300, Mrs. W. W. Gurlach, 5000; Miss Grosse, 4400, and Miss Stockley, 1200.

W. W. Spinks, secretary of the Hotel Maryland Company, sold his beautiful residence in Oak Knoll yesterday to W. Ward of Los Angeles, consideration $25,000. The property is located on Hillcrest avenue and the lot is 152 feet on that avenue with a depth of 475 feet, improved with a beautiful Swiss chalet residence. The sale was made by the William R. Staats Company.

At a meeting of the members of the Firt Universalist Church last night the Pulpit Committee announced that it was unable to secure Rev. Dr. A. R. Tillinghast of Minneapolis as pastor on account of the National Board of the church being unable to get anyone to take his place as superintendent of Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota. The committee was authorized to extend a call to Rev. Carl Henry of Bangor, Me.

CHURCH NOTICES.

Rev. Dr. Matt S. Hughes will deliver the closing address of the Y. M. C. A. week of prayer at the regular Sunday men's meeting at the First Baptist Church. His subject will be "Patriotism."

Dr. Robert J. Burdette will occupy the pulpit of the Pasadena Presbyterian Church at this morning's services.

A series of revival services which will last for two weeks will be begun at the First Christian Church this morning under the direction of Rev. Dr. H. O. Breeder, who is a well-known revivalist of the Christian Church. The music will be under the direction of Prof. W. F. Lintt and brother, Robert Lintt. A special choir of 150 voices will assist in the music.

Mrs. Olive Niles, 54 years of age, wife of C. S. Niles, died yesterday at her home, No. 191 South Catalina avenue. She came to Pasadena eleven years ago from Vermont. Besides a husband deceased leaves two sons, Herman and Porter Miles. The funeral will be held at the chapel of Ives, Warren & Salisbury Company, Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock; interment at Mountain View Cemetery.

A pretty affair of yesterday afternoon was the luncheon given by Miss Estelle Leach at her home, No. 60 South El Molino avenue. Following the luncheon Miss Leach and her guests attended the musical recital given by Miss Alice Coleman at the Shakespeare Club.

An interesting affair of last night was the entertainment given by the fifty children of the Children's Training School assisted by their teachers. The rooms were beautifully decorated with chrysanthemums and roses. Sixty guests were present.

Mrs. A. J. Casebeer of No. 283 South Catalina avenue entertained yesterday afternoon with a handsomely appointed luncheon in honor of several guests from Denver and Colorado Springs.

Miss Jessie McCament entertained a number of her girl friends yesterday afternoon at her home, No. 201 South Marengo avenue, with a thimble party. Tea was served.

Ladies' Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale Gets the City Trustees to Act.

GLENDALE, Nov. 19.—Principally through the efforts of the Ladies' Tuesday Afternoon Club and the W. C. T. U. of the valley an ordinance has been established in this city dealing with smoking on the street cars running through Glendale. At recent meetings of the City Trustees lengthy discussions were held on this subject. The measure was not adopted until the ordinance which was prepared by former City Attorney Baker was amended until it read similar to the one on this matter now in force in Los Angeles.

The matter of calling an election for the voting of bonds for the purchase of a site and improvements for a free public library has been laid on the shelf by the Trustees. This step was decided upon after the presenting of petitions by those favoring and those opposing the move. For the past few weeks this matter of voting bonds has taken up a great part of the trustees' meeting and in order to have more time for other matters the board decided to put it out of the way for the present. About a month ago two lots on the corner of Fourth and Jackson streets were chosen by the Trustees for the library site, but there were so many complaints heard against the selection that it is believed that some other location will later be adopted. It was the object of those favoring the move to vote bonds, then when the site had been secured to ask Mr. Carnegie to erect a library in this city. The Tuesday Afternoon Club and other women's organizations were backing the move and through their efforts the matter was brought to an issue.

It is expected that at the meeting of the Trustees Monday evening a petition will be filed asking that body to call an election on the matter of annexation of adjacent territory into the City of Glendale. The matter was being held up until the contract for the improvement of Central avenue was awarded by the Highway Commission. Now that this has taken place it is believed the committee from the Glendale Valley Improvement Association, which has the work of presenting this petition in charge, will act at once. There is little doubt that the Trustees will consider the petition favorably.

The annual union Thanksgiving service will be held this year in the First Methodist Church on Third street next Wednesday evening, at 7:30 o'clock. The pastors of all the churches of the valley are expected to be on the platform and assist in the services, while Rev. Haines, of the Baptist Church, will deliver the sermon.

WILLOWBROOK.

WILLOWBROOK, Nov. 19.—The regular meeting of the Parent-Teachers' Association of Willowbrook was held in the Congregational Church last Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Soyster. After a brief educational address by the president, the speaker of the evening, J. Samuel Lacy of the Special School of Los Angeles was introduced. The subject of the evening was "The Training of Boys," and was ably treated by the speaker whose work is along this line. After the lecture, light refreshments were served. The meeting was well attended.

The older pupils of the Willowbrook school have decided to form a glee club. They hope to take up part music and sing in public, soon. They had their first regular meeting last Monday evening with their principal, Miss Mae A. Goetz, and practiced for Thanksgiving.

There will be a Thanksgiving programme given at the Willowbrook public school Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock, by the children of Mrs. Belle Jenks' room and of Miss Mae A. Goetz's room. The public is invited.

Mrs. Hammond of Los Angeles visited her daughter, Mrs. Soyster, last week.

BODY IDENTIFIED.

SAN PEDRO, Nov. 19.—The body of a man found in a canyon north of the city limits on Thursday night, has been identified as that of Walter J. Bingham, aged 53 years, of Phoenix, Ariz. The identification was made by Mrs. E. C. Stone, of Artesia, Cal., a sister of the deceased. There is little doubt but that Bingham committed suicide, as a revolver, with two bullets fired, was found near the body. Mrs. Stone stated today that her brother arrived from Arizona several weeks ago, was morose and in poor health and threatened suicide. He formerly owned a smelter in Arizona and leaves a widow and four children in the Territory.

OBJECT.

UNFAIR FARE, SAY CITIZENS.

RESIDENTS ON OUTSKIRTS ASK COUNCIL TO ASK.

People Living Toward End of Pacific Electric's East Seventh Street Line at Long Beach Remonstrate at Having to Pay Ten Cents Within City Limits.

LONG BEACH, Nov. 19.—Complaints made to the Council by citizens in the outskirts of the city that they are not being treated fairly by the Pacific Electric in the way of 5-cent fare within the city limits, has led that body to appoint the Mayor and city attorney a committee to visit the officials and insist upon a 5-cent fare within the city limits. If this is not successful, the Council will attempt to regulate the company's charges by ordinance which under its charter it has the right to do. The principal complaint comes from East Seventh street, on the new line opened last week. The road was constructed after the territory had become a part of the city, but on a franchise granted by the county. With the line in operation the Pacific Electric fixed the city limits at Obispo street and charges an extra fare for the remaining two blocks of the line although all the territory is within the city.

WHO KNOCKED?

It developed today that the adverse report of the Board of Engineers on the extending of government aid to the inner harbor project of Long Beach was not in conformity with the report forwarded to Washington by the local board of engineers. Capt. Stokey's report was to the effect that it was so important and so far advanced that he could recommend it as worthy of government aid. The Chamber of Commerce will endeavor to ascertain who handed Long Beach the knock which influenced the adverse report. One very peculiar thing about the matter is that although the Board is adverse to the harbor, the War Department is insisting upon the observance of maritime regulations in the way of lights on all boats anchored within the harbor, indicating that it is considered as a navigable waterway.

Miss Hazel Coburn, aged 20 years, a popular High School student, died this morning at the home of her parents on Pine avenue. She was a native of Iowa and had lived here five years.

FOREMEN BANQUET.

The second banquet of the road foremen of this district was held last night at Hotel Virginia. The foremen were accompanied by their wives and covers were placed for fifty-two. Among those who made short talks after the banquet were County Supervisors Nellis, McCabe and Eldridge, Highway Commissioner George H. Bixby, and Foreman McPherson of Santa Monica. The announcement that the Long Beach-Los Angeles boulevard would be open to Compton, December 1, was received with cheers.

William Carpenter is accused of assaulting a police officer last night while the latter was arresting Tom Fay for drunkenness. Carpenter was this morning sent to the County Jail to await a preliminary hearing. When Fay was released this morning he discovered that some one had stolen his motorcycle from the curb where he had left it when going to San Pedro to get his jag.

Los Angeles lumber and brick companies secured contracts for material for the polytechnic high school, underbidding local concerns. The contracts will be $20,000 for lumber alone.

The Commission Government Club, which has for its object the advocacy of the commission plan for Long Beach, has effected a temporary organization by the election of George A. Mohrenstecher as chairman and R. C. Swaffield as secretary.

FOR NEW HOSPITAL.

The Seaside Hospital Association has plans drawn for a three-story building at Bishop and Esperanza streets which will contain twenty-five rooms for patients. There will be separate wards for males and females and fourteen private rooms. The kitchen, dining room, furnace and storage department will be in the basement. Work will begin in thirty days.

Bids for the proposed new clubhouse of El Rodeo, on the Los Cerritos rancho, have been opened but no award made as all were slightly in excess of what was expected.

The third annual circus of the Y. M. C. A. was given at the auditorium last night and was a success artistically and financially. The performance was repeated tonight to a large audience.

High School students have started a taboo on linen collars and Monday morning nearly fifty of the boys will appear at assembly wearing soft blue woolen shirts with collars attached and set off with black four-in-hand ties. The fad is expected to extend to the gentler sex also.

PROGRAMME ATTRACTS.

An Address, Singing and Club Swinging Interest Students at South Pasadena.

SOUTH PASADENA, Nov. 19.—The student body programme at the high school yesterday, was varied and interesting. M. P. Villanueve gave an address on "Our Student Body Organization." Miss Payne, a reader, entertained with "How Ruben Played," the third was a musical number, a trio by Misses Farrell, Payne and Hamm, and the last number by Miss Marjorie Woodruff who performed many difficult feats in club swinging.

The preliminaries which were held last Wednesday, in preparation for the coming debate with Burbank, resulted in Palmer Ritchie winning first place and Barrett Kiesling second. The debate will be held in the local high school auditorium the evening of December 9, when the South Pasadena High School will take the negative side on "Resolved, that suffrage should be restricted by educational qualification."

The South Pasadena High School boys beat the Occidental freshmen in basketball, Wednesday afternoon on the Occidental courts, with a score of 32 to 34. Hoover landed eleven free throws, Laywer seven and Dunlap one.

Mrs. J. Harvey Deere, No. 1716 Mission street, attended the annual meeting of the Santa Ana Valley Association of the Baptist Churches, in Redlands.

Dr. Alice Anderson, No. 1124 Fremont street, has rented her home for the winter season to a family from Minneapolis.

Dr. Whiting, health officer, reported to the Board of Trustees that the dairies need more frequent inspection, as several are in questionable condition. He wants the city to make it more feasible for him to make his inspections. The Marshal, William Johnston, agreed to take the health officer, when requested, and the dairies will now be inspected regularly.

"An Old Folks' Service" in honor of Christian Old Age and Thanksgiving, will be held at the morning service of the Methodist Church, Sunday. All "old-folks" and "shut-ins" whose names are handed in will be called for and returned home by auto.

SUCCESSFUL SUGAR SEASON.

During Run at Chino Fifteen Thousand Tons Are Produced—Pomona News Notes.

POMONA, Nov. 19.—During the run of 111 days at the Chino Beet Sugar Company's factory, 88,000 tons of beets were sliced and made into sugar. This represents 3000 carloads of about thirty tons each. The factory was kept open continuously day and night, two shifts of men being kept at work. The beet tonnage sliced, allowing a sugar content of 17 per cent., has made a total of about 300,000 sacks, or 15,000 tons.

Bah Gee, the old upholsterer Chinaman who has been a familiar figure about the streets here for years, was run down by a Southern Pacific switch engine here yesterday, having his foot cut off and hip dislocated. Gee was taken in W. B. Todd's ambulance to the depot, and on instructions from the railroad sent to a hospital in Los Angeles.

John M. Reed, who has had a printing business here, has purchased the Lordsburg Leader and removed to the foothill town, where there is considerable activity noticeable in business and realty circles.

Mrs. Sarah A. Bailey, mother of Mrs. E. A. Brink, of No. 610 West Fifth avenue, the most active old person living in these parts, will celebrate her 91st birthday on December 11. Mrs. Bailey is the widow of Rev. Dr. S. G. Bailey, for years a prominent Baptist clergyman.

George L. Draper of Ware, Mass., who has passed the last twenty winters in Southern California, most of them here, has arrived at the Pomona Tavern for his annual stay.

Prof. William Bailey, geologist, of San Francisco is visiting at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. A. Brink.

OCEAN PARK.

OCEAN PARK, Nov. 19.—The Santa Monica Library Board is considering the matter of establishing a branch reading-room and book delivery station in the vicinity of Pier avenue, for the benefit of the residents of the southern end of the city. The Chamber of Commerce has offered to co-operate in securing suitable quarters.

Subscriptions are now being received under a pledge of six months for the support of the Donatelli Italian band during the winter season. The sum required is still many dollars short and unless there is prompt action the daily free concerts by the sea will be abandoned and the band will give up its organization.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup Will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes a pint—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with half pint of warm water, and stir two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50c worth) in a pint bottle, and add the sugar syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

Proof That Catarrhal Deafness Can be Cured

Here Are Sincere Words From a Retired Railroad Conductor of Binghampton, N. Y., that can't be Contradicted.

F. C. Vanaman is a highly respected citizen of Binghampton, N. Y., and what he voluntarily says should be given grave consideration by all who suffer from catarrhal distress in the head or throat.

A very large percentage of the cases of deafness is caused by catarrh. There are two tubes running from the nose to the ears called the Eustacian tubes, and when catarrh germs infect these tubes deafness will probably follow if prompt action is not taken.

Ringing noises in the ears is good proof that catarrh is going to affect your hearing. Here is the proof that HYOMEI (pronounce it HIGH-O-ME) will do more than it is advertised to do.

"During the Fall of 1909 I found it necessary to consult two local specialists for a catarrhal affection that caused me considerable annoyance and which finally developed into a serious trouble in my ears, resulting in deafness with almost continual buzzing in ears. Despairing from receiving benefit or relief from the physicians, I determined to try the HYOMEI which I had seen advertised. All inflammation, soreness and buzzing being overcome with an entire restoration of my hearing and general benefit to nasal and throat troubles. I have no hesitancy in recommending this remedy to all who are similarly afflicted with catarrhal troubes." F. C. Vananman, Binghamton, N. Y., March 22, 1910.

No stomach dosing with HYOMEI—just breathe it; that's all. It is guaranteed by druggists everywhere to cure catarrh, coughs, colds, sore throat, croup and asthma, or money back.

Complete outfit $1.00. This consists of a bottle of HYOMEI, a hard rubber vest pocket inhaler and instructions for use. Extra bottles of HYOMEI, if afterward needed, cost but 50 cents. Mail orders filled, charges prepaid, by Booth's Hyomei Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Asthma and Catarrh

Drs. Shores & Shores,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sirs:—I heartily recommend your professional practice in both Asthma and Catarrh. I have been troubled with Asthma and Catarrh for over 20 years in the very worst forms. Change of climate gave me only temporary relief, while medicine had no effect, especially the asthma troubles. I could not get relief when attacked, which was every night. On account of the asthma I was forced to sit in a rocker in night time. It was out of the question to try to lie down in bed.

I have been under your treatments for a little more than a week, and must say that I am not troubled with asthma, can sleep like "a log" at night. Don't need the rocker to sleep in any more. I have gained five pounds in weight since beginning your treatments. I feel better than I have ever felt in my life previously to your treatment.

I cannot too highly recommend your services to all sufferers, and thanking you for the benefits received, I am,

Respectfully yours,
MILES C. PRIDDY,
724 Solano Avenue,
Los Angeles, Cal.

STRICTLY RELIABLE

If you suffer from CATARRH or CHRONIC disease, just as sure as you read these lines just so sure will DRS. SHORES & SHORES cure you IF YOU ONLY TRY (except, of course, you by neglect or improper treatment, have allowed your disease to become incurable). DRS. SHORES are experts in treatment and cure of Deafness, Catarrh and all forms of Nervous, Private and Complicated Chronic [illegible] tation and advice always free.

DO YOU HAVE C

READ THESE SYMPTOMS

MANY FOLKS HAVE CATARRH AND

CATARRH OF THE HEAD AND THROAT.

This form of catarrh is most common—resulting from neglected colds—quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is your nose stopped up?"
"Does your nose discharge?"
"Is your nose sore and tender?"
"Is there pain in the front of the head?"
"Do you hawk to clear the throat?"
"Do you sleep with your mouth open?"

You can be easily cured now—don't let it run into complications.

THE BRONCHIAL TUBES.

When catarrh of the head or throat is neglected or wrongfully treated, it extends down the windpipe into the bronchial tubes, and after a while attacks the lungs. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Have you a cough?"
"Have you a pain in the side?"
"Do you raise frothy material?"
"Do you spit up little cheesy lumps?"
"Do you feel you are growing weaker?"

Don't risk neglecting these warnings—stop the disease before it reaches the lungs.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

Catarrh of the stomach is usually caused by swallowing poisonous mucus, which drops from the head and throat at night. Quickly cured at little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is there nausea?"
"Do you belch up gas?"
"Are you constipated?"
"Do you bloat up after eating?"
"Is there constant bad taste in the mouth?"

Now is the time to be permanently cured. Drs. Shores are curing hundreds every year.

Drs. Shores & Shores' Low Fee Deals a Death Blow to the Medical Grafter who tries to imitate their treatment. Los Angeles has long been an alluring spot for medical pretenders who resort to every trick known to the fake advertiser, offering all sorts of baits, such as fake "Free Treatment," "Pay When Cured," Electric Belts, Oriental Grafts and similar schemes simply to lure the sick to their offices to rob them.

erected at Simi. The property owned by L. M. Lloyd, on the main street and facing the depot, is to be cleared for the erection of the new building.

The new Southern Pacific depot has been completed, and is ready for business. The building is large and substantial, and will be found a great convenience for the people of the growing section.

Preparations for the next county teachers' institute have been completed. The session will begin on December 19 and last a week. Among the prominent educators booked to be present are Allison Ware of the Chico Normal and Dr. Boone of the faculty of Berkeley.

The Trustees of Santa Paula have accepted plans and specifications for the new sewer system of that city, and bids for construction will be opened December 5.

The Ventura County Sunday School Convention has been in session in this city for two days, seventy-five delegates, representing all sections of the county, being in attendance.

DIRECTORS MEET AND ORGANIZE.

IRRIGATION COMPANY'S BOARD MEETS AT ORANGE.

Policy of Santa Ana Valley Co-operative Concern Will Be to Develop Water as Rapidly as Funds Allow—Detention Home Ready for Juveniles.

SANTA ANA, Nov. 19.—The Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company's new Board of Directors met at the office at Orange this morning and organized for the year by re-electing George Dierker, president, O. E. Manser secretary, and J. A. Smith, superintendent. George Dierker and A. G. Finley were elected on the Litigation Committee; L. E. Smith and E. M. Nealley on the Finance Committee; Fred Rohrs and Smith on the Zanja Committee; Rohrs and Nealley on the Water Development Committee. The policy of the board will be to develop water as rapidly as funds allow. The company is co-operative, and irrigates 17,500 acres of land in the Santa Ana Valley.

Furniture has been placed in the county's Juvenile Detention Home recently completed on Grand avenue, and within two or three days the place will be ready to receive any delinquent or criminal children that Probation Officer J. H. Scott or Juvenile Court Judge Z. B. West may send there. The home will be in charge of L. H. Hill and his wife as superintendent and matron. There are beds for twelve children.

RECEIVER GIVES BOND.

A. J. Crookshank today gave a $3000 bond as receiver in the maintenance action of Mrs. Minnie N. Taylor against Charles D. Taylor, millionaire mining man. Crookshank will take charge of $50,000 worth of real estate in this city, alleged by Mrs. Taylor to have been transferred by her husband to Russel T. Joy, a wealthy mining man, in order to prevent Mrs. Taylor from securing anything upon which to live. Mrs. Taylor in her complaint asks the court to award her $2500 a month maintenance. Taylor disappeared at the time he deserted his wife in Munich, Germany, several months ago.

Charles Twist, implement dealer, paid a fine of $10 for speeding his automobile on North Main street.

The Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church of Anaheim today petitioned the Superior Court for permission to sell its real estate at Anaheim, it being the intention of the church to disband as a corporation.

The Santa Ana High School girls' basketball team this morning defeated the Anaheim Union High School girls by a score of 13 to 7 in a clean, hard-fought game.

REPORTS ON RESOURCES.

County Statistician Enumerates Possessions of Santa Barbara County. Curious Testimony.

SANTA BARBARA, Nov. 19.—A report prepared by County Statistician Fred H. Schauer enumerating the resources of Santa Barbara county shows this district to be rich in most all of California products. The report is official and is to be forwarded to the State Board of Agriculture. Here are some of the most important features:

Area, 2630 square miles or 1,316,865 surveyed acres, estimated number of farms, 1460; value of country real estate, $11,386,740; total value of all property, $27,856,077; expended on good roads last fiscal year, $156,642.27; number of miles of public roads, 1000; value of county buildings and land, $2,000,000; assessed value of railroads—steam, $3,263,818; electric, $28,000; value of wheat crop, $15,000; barley, $475,000; oats, $126,000; corn, $15,000; alfalfa, $4000; grain hay, $500,000; fruit trees, $228,325; fruits and vegetables, $1,731,250; dairy industry, $305,500; live stock industry, $2,217,500.

The divorce suit brought by Mrs. E. G. McCaleb against W. B. McCaleb is furnishing some interesting testimony in the Superior Court. Many witnesses have been subpoenaed and it is thought the trial will not be concluded for several days. Mrs. McCaleb said on the witness stand she wanted a divorce because her husband "was intolerable." She introduced a woman neighbor to help her substantiate the claim. The neighbor was Mrs. Salina McNutt, who said: "Mr. McCaleb told me people just go to dances to be hugged and I told him that was not so for 'I go to dances' and I don't go to be hugged either."

Word has been received that the Pacific fleet will arrive here on the 25th inst. and will remain two weeks. Great preparations are being made for entertaining the officers and men.

PERRIS.

PERRIS, Nov. 19.—The Sharpless buildings which have been in the course of construction the past five months are now finished. The space in each was spoken for before the buildings were complete, and all will be occupied soon. The Masonic Hall occupies the entire upper story of one building.

The schools closed yesterday afternoon for a week's vacation during which time the teachers will attend the institute.

A union Thanksgiving service will be held Thursday morning at the Congregational church. Rev. A. H. Ore will preach the sermon.

A. A. Reed, who visited for several days with Mr. and Mrs. James Coburn has left for his home in Palisade, Colo.

The Perris ball team will give a dance Thanksgiving Night.

Nils Anderson spent the past week in Los Angeles.

GATHER COTTON CROP SLOWLY.

IMPERIAL VALLEY LACKING IN EXPERIENCED PICKERS.

Because of Sag in Eastern Market Only Few Bales Were Sold Last Week—Directors of County Fair Busy in Carrying Out Important Plans.

EL CENTRO, Nov. 19.—Imperial Valley's cotton crop is being gathered slowly, because of lack of experienced pickers. Up to November 17, 1191 bales had been turned out from the gins at El Centro, Holtville and Calexico, and these gins have easily cared for the cotton as it is delivered. Because of a sag in the eastern cotton market but few bales were sold by Imperial Valley growers during the week just closed. Seth Cravey holds the cotton picking record in this new district. On the ranch of Harold Bell Wright, an author, at Meloland, Cravey picked 502 pounds of cotton in seven and a half hours. Texas cotton pickers here say that the Wright cotton field is the best they ever saw.

The frame for the mammoth cotton seed oil mill is now ready for its enclosure of pressed steel, and the second gin at El Centro is about in readiness for operation. As soon as this is started the old gin will be removed to Heber.

IMPERIAL COUNTY FAIR.

Directors of Agricultural District No. 48, under whose auspices the Imperial County Fair will be held hereafter, are busy in carrying out many important plans for this event, which is to take place for this event, which cluster. The directors have given their sanction to the proposed automobile race from Los Angeles to El Centro, with a finish of a five-mile race on the new track here. In a few hours County Assessor Fred Fuller raised $300 in El Centro as a starter for the $1500 fund which it is proposed to use for prize money. The automobile run will be from Los Angeles to San Diego, and thence by way of Devil's Canon to Imperial Valley and El Centro.

ALAMO CANAL INSPECTED.

Col. Holabird, receiver for the California Development Company, accompanied by Capt. Allen Kelly, editor of the Imperial Valley Press, and Engineer C. K. Clarke and Foreman William Best, made the trip by boat down the Alamo channel from Hanlon heading, this week, examining the canal and making careful note of its carrying capacity. They found that the canal is now carrying about 1400 second feet of water; that where the canal has been dredged it is confined between high banks and it would be possible to carry more water than is now coming down; but that there are many miles of low natural banks now only a few inches above the water surface and any considerable increase of flow would overtop the banks and flood large areas on both sides of the canal.

Because of continuous deposits of silt the bed of the Alamo River has been materially raised, thus decreasing its carrying capacity. It was discovered on this trip that Mexican squatters are cutting the banks at various places and taking water for their lands without asking permission. Col. Holabird, on his return from this inspection trip, said:

"The canal evidently is carrying very nearly its full capacity now, and it will not be possible to meet a demand twenty per cent., or any per cent. in excess of last year's demands of the Mutual Water Companies. The revenues, therefore, must be less than the estimate and will not enable me to carry on any work that is not absolutely necessary to maintain the canal."

BUILDING AN AIRSHIP.

Much interest is manifested here in the monoplane of the Antoinette type which is being constructed by H. R. Young, and which he hopes to have advanced sufficiently to exhibit at the Imperial County Fair. Young has worked with Walsh, who made successful airship flights at San Diego, and has himself made voyages in air. He is an experienced balloonist, having made 100 parachute leaps. He believes that the greater density of the air of Imperial Valley, because of it being below sea level, will be a decided advantage in making flights.

HELP THEMSELVES.

ENTOMBED MEN AID RESCUERS.

FIVE CAUGHT IN MINE WHEN TUNNEL COLLAPSES.

Start Frantic Effort for Release as Soon as Roof Ceases to Crumble—Timbering Catches Fire and Presence of Box of Powder Adds to Their Terror.

SAN BERNARDINO, Nov. 19.—The collapse of a tunnel on the Frisco mining group of the Holiday Mining Company, ten miles west of Doble, Wednesday, imprisoned Shaft Foreman Stokes and his crew of four men for five hours, their rescue being made by Supt. Peters and a large force of miners, aided by the entombed men themselves, who commenced the frantic effort for their release as soon as the roof ceased crumbling.

The cave-in set fire to the timbering, as the result of a lantern exploding, and this feature of the accident was further aggravated by the presence under the mass of timbers, rock and earth of a box of black powder, which the entombed men at first thought was directly under the burning timbers.

The cave-in was caused by a section of weakened timber at the mouth of the tunnel giving away under the strain of the earth above, which had become soaked by recent rains. Last summer all but this section of timber, some fifty feet long, was replaced. The entombed men were rescued uninjured after five hours, a lack of fresh air being the most serious phase of their imprisonment.

WILL IT STAND TEST?

State Senator H. M. Willis, who was chairman of the Senate committee which had charge of Constitutional Amendment No. 1 at the last special session of the Legislature, called to correct an error in the bill, is of the opinion that the amendment will not stand a test of the Supreme Court.

He declares that the Legislature, though specially called to consider the necessary amendment to this amendment, considered other amendments as well, and therefore jeopardized the bill. The question of the Legislature's power to so consider other amendments was at the time discussed, the Senate committee taking a contrary view, but finally waived the objections in order to prevent a deadlock.

It is expected that a contest will be originated here, this city and county losing heavily if Amendment No. 1 is exercised.

SETTLEMENT EFFECTED.

A settlement of the findings of Judge Oster in the suit of the Cucamonga Vineyard Company and others against the San Antonio Water Company and others was formally effected in the Superior Court this morning. The suit involved the domestic water supply of Ontario, and affected all the ranch interests in the Cucamonga and Ontario sections. By these findings the water rights in Cucamonga Springs and the Red Hill district are apportioned among the various water corporations and ranchers.

Francisco Olivas was taken to San Quentin today to serve seven years for killing J. J. Williams, a Tonopah-Tidewater section foreman at Silverlake, last July. When his cell was searched the officers found a message in Spanish which he had secreted where the next occupant of the cell could find it. The message gives the information that his own countrymen testified against him. It is taken by the officers as evidence that Olivas and his faction will seek revenge.

UPLAND GETS FACTORY.

Manufacturers' Committee of Chamber of Commerce Succeeds in Efforts to Get Shoe Plant.

UPLAND, Nov. 19.—Through the untiring efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, and especially of the Manufacturers' Committee, Upland has landed the Brennan Elkide shoe factory, for several years conducted successfully at Wilmington by J. M. Brennan. The company is to be incorporated, with a capital stock of $100,000, of which one-half, or $50,000, will be paid up. At a meeting to be held Monday evening, the real organization of the company will be effected, and a site determined upon by the Board of Directors who will be chosen. This is an important step in the history of Upland, as it is expected the new factory will employ a considerable number of people from the start, and that some 250 pairs of shoes will be turned out daily. The Manufacturing Committee is said to be busy already upon plans which will probably soon locate a second concern of a manufacturing nature here. Upland is becoming alive to the necessity for reaching out for manufactories, as are so many of the thriving towns of Southern California.

A union Thanksgiving church service is to be held at the Presbyterian Church here at 10 o'clock Thursday morning. The sermon will be delivered by Rev. S. S. Sampson, pastor of the Methodist Church, while the special music is to be furnished by a chorus choir of the Presbyterian Church.

Petitions are being circulated, and quite generally signed here, looking to the closing of the Upland postoffice all Sunday. It is said the churches in many of the cities of Southern California are engaged in an effort for a like result, and it seems probable this city will be in line for the closing, though there is objection on the part of a considerable number of the patrons, who desire a Sunday mail.

Clerk H. C. Kennedy of the Board of Trustees of the Upland school district, is circulating a petition asking that an election be called looking to the authorizing of a bond issue, for the purpose of building a modern polytechnic high school in this city. According to laws governing such matters, the assessed valuation would warrant the expenditure of $75,000 for such purpose, and it is thought a splendid school of the type named could be had for a figure well within that sum.

The ladies of St. Mark's Church held a most successful bazaar and social at Magnolia Rink, last evening, and a snug sum was realized for the building fund of the new house of worship, soon to be built at the corner of F street and Euclid avenue, Upland.

Messrs. Hanson & Searss, one of the independent fruit shipping agencies of Upland, have contracted to pack the fruit of the Upland Mutual Orange Growers' Association, a new body of growers formed here, and the packing-house of the former is being greatly enlarged.

B. P. Buck, formerly a quiet and hard-working chap of this city, was found guilty by a jury in the Superior Court at San Bernardino, a few days ago, on a charge of contributing to the dependancy of a minor child, a young girl named Sproul, residing in Upland, the offense having taken place last May. Buck skipped, but was apprehended in Oregon, and brought back several months ago, he having been in jail in the meantime. He will receive sentence next Monday.

CLASS AFFAIR.

The roof of the Polytechnic High School building was the scene of a very enjoyable affair Friday afternoon, when the girls of the class of Winter '11 entertained in honor of the class football team which defeated the Senior B team last Tuesday. The scene was a burlesque track-meet and many amusing stunts were required of the four competing teams. Later a unique banquet was served. The lunch room was appropriately decorated with chrysanthemums in the class colors, gold and white, and with pennants of the local and eastern schools. After the banquet, speeches were made by the principal, Prof. Dunn, Profs. Locke and Miller, and by Clair Flett.

F. H. Shafer, a real estate agent living at No. 2081 Ocean View avenue, lost a fine touring car valued at about $2000 yesterday morning when fire broke out in the garage in the rear of his home, and reduced it to ashes in a few minutes. The origin of the fire was not determined.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, But Safe and Effectual Cure For It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs and difficult breathing, headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlanson, the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet, composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. R. S. Workman, Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure, but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, billiousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

SUFFERED FOR YEARS
OWE HEALTH TO PE-RU-NA.

Many a matron has lengthened the days of her comely appearance by taking Peruna. To be beautiful, the body must be kept clean internally as well as externally. Peruna produces clean mucous membranes, the basis of facial symmetry, and a clear, healthy complexion.

MISS NETTIE E. BOGARDUS

MRS. GEO. C. WORSTELL

MRS. O. D. ROBINSON

Internal Catarrh.

Mrs. George C. Worstell, 11 River Road, Clarksburg, W. Va., writes: "I can truly say I have been much benefited by the use of Peruna. I feel better than I have for two years. It is the best medicine that I know for internal catarrh. When I began taking Peruna I could see that before I had finished taking the first bottle it was doing me good."

Sick Headache.

Miss Nettie E. Bogardus, R. F. D. 21, Westfield, N. Y., writes: "I have been a great sufferer from sick headaches, but am now entirely free from that trouble. I have not felt so well in ten years as I do now.

"I would recommend Peruna and Manalin to all sufferers."

Gained Appetite and Strength.

Miss Julia Butler, Appleton, Wis., writes: "My sister advised me to try Peruna. I took your treatment and my appetite returned speedily. I gained strength and flesh and am in perfect health."

Mrs. O. D. Robinson, 36 St. Felix Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I have taken Peruna and it did me more good than all my two years' treatment by special physicians. I can really say that I feel like another person. No more swollen feet and limbs. No more bloating of the abdomen. No more shortness of breath. No more stiff and sore joints. You have no idea what your treatment has done for me. It certainly has prolonged my life and made a new woman of me."

BREVITIES.

One of the principal necessities of a hat is that it is becoming. Perfect order work makes this; you get exactly what you want, besides you only pay for what you get. Long personal practical experience is, however, absolutely necessary to make perfect order work, and as Mrs. Kruseman, the milliner, 1302 Pico, corner Rich, has this, her splendid work finds the greatest appreciation with a great number of prominent ladies who consider it a pleasure to recommend her. Mrs. Kruseman gives the same careful attention to retrimming.

STILL BUSY.

BEAT GROCER WHO RESISTS.

CALLS FOR HELP SILENCED BY BRUTAL BLOWS.

Earlier in the Evening Two Footpads Decoy Engineer to Them by New Trick and Relieve Him of Cash and Diamond in a Vacant Lot.

Two robberies, both the work of professionals, apparently, were reported to the police last night. F. W. Buebler, a grocer of No. 852 Calhoun street, was brutally beaten and then robbed of $40 in his store, and John Vallely lost $40 in cash and a $50 diamond stick pin at the hands of footpads at Los Angeles and Winston streets.

Buebler was alone in his store at 7:30 o'clock when two men entered, one asking for candy. He met the supposed customers near the door, and as he turned to go to the candy box, one of the men caught him from behind and held him fast while the other looted the cash drawer.

Buebler, a fairly strong man, put up a lusty resistance and might have attracted attention by his calls for help, but two more robbers ran in from the street and effectively silenced him by clamping a heavy hand across his mouth. This done, the three who were holding the helpless grocer beat him unmercifully about the head and body.

Buebler was taken to the Receiving Hospital, his face and head shockingly cut up.

It was earlier in the evening that Vallely was held up. On his way home from the Van Nuys, where he is employed as an engineer, Vallely passed the corner of Los Angeles and Winston streets, where he noticed two men crossing a vacant lot. One was helping the other, who seemed so ill that he was scarcely able to walk.

"Hey, Mister, please come and help me; he's awful sick," called one of the men in a coaxing voice.

Vallely suspected nothing and hurried over. As he reached the men, he found himself staring into the muzzle of a revolver, and was ordered to throw up his hands.

The armed robber leisurely rifled Vallely's pockets of his money and stickpin. These were passed to the fellow who had just had such a lightning convalescence, and this worthy raced down Los Angeles street. The other kept Vallely covered with the revolver, ordering him away while he backed slowly off in the direction taken by his pal.

CAR SMASHES WAGON.

W. C. Gast, of No. 1633 West Twenty-first street, received injuries to the back and legs last night when the wagon he was driving was run down at the corner of Adams and Hoover streets by University car No. 361, the approach of which he had failed to hear. His wagon was badly damaged.

SUPERB CATHEDRAL WILL COST MILLION.

Plans Accepted for One of Finest Churches in America Here---Bishop Conaty May Determine to Build it Immediately---His Celebration.

NEXT Thursday Bishop Conaty of Monterey and Los Angeles will doubtless join with his fellow New Englanders in an old-time celebration of Thanksgiving Day. But, as it happens, he will also celebrate another event which has meant more to him than any other thing that has taken place in his life. The day will mark the ninth anniversary of his consecration as a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church. The day may, in addition, mark Bishop Conaty's determination to proceed with the erection of the $1,000,000 cathedral in this city, the plans of which have just been approved and accepted.

The days of Bishop Conaty's priesthood were spent in Massachusetts, where the Pope raised him to the dignity of the rank of monsignor. Later he was appointed rector of the Catholic University, the great school of Catholic learning on the American continent. It was while rector of the university that he received word from Rome of his appointment as titular Bishop of Samos. That was in 1901. Concluding his term of office at the university, he was chosen to preside over this diocese, arriving here to enter upon his duties in June, 1903.

The bishop's fame as a scholar, an educator, a temperance worker and leader and a man of affairs preceded him, and he was welcomed by the community without regard to class or creed. During the seven years of his charge here he has not only met but exceeded the great expectations with which he came heralded.

RECORD OF PROGRESS.

Bishop Conaty is essentially a progressive man. Immediately upon becoming a part of the life of Southern California, he entered into the tremendous spirit of the commercial as well as the spiritual advancement he found rife on every hand. Builders and contractors, architects and bankers at once learned that the acquaintance of the new bishop was worth acquiring. It was soon seen that there was to be a good many new churches built between San Diego's harbor of the sun and the green way to Monterey—the southern and northern confines, respectively, of the bishop's jurisdiction.

The population of Los Angeles has trebled within the past ten years, to the astonishment of the entire world. Bishop Conaty's achievements have kept sharp pace with that wonderful record. When he came the entire Catholic population between here and San Diego did not exceed 60,000. Now the Catholic population of this city alone is close to 70,000. During the seven years in which he has been in direction of the diocese fifteen churches of his denomination have been built within the city and forty-two outside, representing investments of many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

To do all these things required genius in finance, but the bishop appears to have easily met the requirements. In financial circles he is regarded as a very strong figure, and a man whose advice is often sought. In addition to the strain which his business life entails, his duties as a churchman are even a greater drain on his strength. But he shows no sign of weakening. He laughingly declares that the climate of Los Angeles enables a man to do three men's work and to grow young while he is doing it.

CHARITY AND EDUCATION.

To meet the needs of a diocese growing like magic and calling unto itself rich and poor alike, as well as the peoples of all nationalities, the bishop has had to do a good deal of strenuous skirmishing for priests and members of religious orders to care for the needy and teach the young. The magnificent house of the Little Sisters of the Poor on Boyle Heights is an example of the success that has been attained in the way of founding institutions of charity, and the beautiful convent at Hollywood will serve to show what has been done in the educational field. Not to speak of the colleges and high schools which the Catholic Church maintains in Southern California, thousands of children are being educated in the parochial schools. In this city nearly 5000 children are in atendance upon the parochial schools.

When Bishop Conaty came there were not many sisters or members of religious orders here. Of course the Franciscans were here, having come with Father Junipero Serra nearly 150 years ago. During the years of secularization the brown-robed brothers were Bishop Conaty, who will celebrate his most eventful anniversary next Thursday, the monumental million-dollar cathedral which he is about to rear in Los Angeles, and one of his humble Indian chapels in Ramona's country. The plans for the cathedral, which is to be the finest on the continent, outside of New York, have just been accepted, and construction may be begun forthwith.

MYSTERY OF YEARS.

WOMAN AND WEALTH STRANGELY MISSING.

Former Los Angeles Teacher, With Thirty Thousand Dollars, May Have Met a Tragic Fate—Boston Banker Here Inquiring—Weird Prospect.

WHERE is Annie L. Hodge, aged 54, formerly a teacher in the public schools of Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Ana and Chino?

Where is the $30,000 which Annie L. Hodge received in 1895?

Is Annie L. Hodge dead or is she confined in an asylum under an assumed name?

Where is Mrs. James Gordon, with whom Miss Hodge lived, and who, it is asserted by neighbors, "treated Miss Hodge worse than a dog?"

Finally, where did Mrs. James Gordon acquire sudden wealth, and how was she, a woman in ordinary circumstances, able to lend, first $12,000, then $6000 and then $3000 on mortgages? (This last sum was loaned to the late Madame Modjeska.)

These are the questions to which Warren T. Currier, a business man and banker of Boston who is a guest at the Hayward, is seeking answers.

Upon the answers hangs a story which shows signs of developing weird details.

Twenty-five years ago Miss Hodge, a talented and educated young lady, left her home in Boston and came to Southern California, settling in San Diego. She had been granted a life diploma as a teacher, and was soon enrolled as an instructor in the San Diego schools. She acquired one or two small lots there, and then came to Los Angeles, where she also taught. She regularly corresponded with her sister, Mrs. Warren T. Currier of Boston.

In 1894 Charles Hodge, a retired business man of Boston, and the father of Miss Hodge and Mrs. Currier died after a few days of illness of pneumonia. His wife sickened upon his death and passed away six days later. There was an estate of $60,000, which was to be divided equally between Miss Hodge and Mrs. Currier.

Miss Hodge wrote to her sister asking that the estate be divided and the money sent to her. This was done, and in 1895 a New York draft for about $30,000 came for Miss Hodge. The receipt of the draft was duly acknowledged. Then all communication ceased.

Mrs. Currier wrote repeatedly to Miss Hodge without result. She finally abandoned the task, and thought her sister was too busily engaged to answer.

During the last year the silence began to worry Mrs. Currier to the point where she insisted that her husband make a trip to Los Angeles and ascertain if there was anything wrong. Currier arrived about two weeks ago and began the search.

DEATHS, ABUSE AND GOSSIP.

He found that Miss Hodge had taught school in Santa Ana thirteen

And That Burning Garbage Issue Is Hotter.

"Well, what about that garbage?"

It's a pretty slack day when some "representative citizen" of near or outlying parts doesn't stroll casually into some one of half a dozen different departments of the city or the county executive departments with words to that effect. The Board of Public Works gets some and so do the Supervisors, not to mention a scattering vote in the Superior Court, but a careful canvass indicates that Chief Deputy Attorney Shaw is the most popular among those sought out for the latest data about garbage.

Which is because the problem is Shaw's. The comprehensive county ordinance which the Supervisors fondly hope will effectually and permanently dam the inundation of garbage protests that continue to overflow their pigeonholes has not yet been forthcoming.

It is more likely, however, that the next few days will see radical steps taken toward the framing of that monumental piece of legislation. It is scarcely to be expected of any official, however profound, that he should sit down and dash off an ordinance that will at once and completely dispose of the prize riddle of the municipal sphynx. In passing on their troubles to the deputy district attorney the county solons set no date as the limit for their settlement, and Shaw is taking his time. It is the consensus of opinion in official circles that have previously had to do with garbage that he needs to.

"Nothing definite to give out yet," he said yesterday. "I haven't really had time to look into all sides of the question as thoroughly as I wish to before forming more than merely a tentative idea as to the nature of the garbage ordinance. I expect to get after it in earnest now and the matter will take definite form just as quickly as it can be made to. When? Oh, I don't know—within a few days, probably, or at any rate within the coming week."

IMPORTANT DISCUSSION DUE.

Another important official garbage act which has been hanging fire for some time past and which this week is expected to see placed on record is Judge McCormick's decision in the Durbin case, upon which hangs the right of the city to make an exclusive contract for the disposal of its garbage. Such a contract was made with Alexander last March and later rendered temporarily invalid by a court order restraining the city from interfering with the business of the Vernon hog raisers, who, among them, still manage to account for a considerable per cent. of the garbage hauling.

Basing his opinion upon the decision of the Supreme Court in the similar case involving the disposition of the San Francisco garbage, A. J. Goudge, Alexander's attorney, yesterday expressed his entire confidence that Judge McCormick's decision would reverse the temporary restraining order and give Alexander a chance to fulfill his "exclusive" contract entirely instead of partially, as heretofore—to thereby earn the $4000 which that leaky document has been costing the city every month.

PROLIFIC IN SUGGESTIONS.

Remarkably prolific has been the past week in suggested schemes for a better way for the city to handle its daily output of 100 tons of garbage. The authors of most of them proceed upon the assumption that, while the garbage may not be bad for the hogs that eat it, it is very decidedly bad for the people that later eat the hogs. This is controverted in a measure by the verdict of veterinaries, who point to the fact that, outside of the corn-fed Middle West, swill and refuse have been the diet of hogs ever since the time of the Prodigal Son. Others are on hand to call attention to the $100,000 yearly value of the city's garbage as hog feed, sagely adding that, while the city is not getting the $100,000, there is no reason why it shouldn't. That we should acquire a municipal hog farm and go into the business of reducing the local price of pork strikes them as being altogether feasible and desirable.

A. J. Goudge, something of a garbage expert himself, says that the ideal way of getting rid of the stuff is that employed in Sweden, where every household, hotel and business establishment is required to maintain its own private incinerator and care for its own refuse. Asked if he thought that the great American public would stand for anything like that, he merely chuckled gently.

Some local San Franciscans incline to resent the imputation that the incinerator in their native city is not an entire success. They are among those who give it as their opinion that, would the city return to its discarded scheme of burning the garbage, its troubles along those lines would be forever at an end. Oaklanders point with pride to their system of sea-dumping from big garbage-scows, Easterners to theirs of making soap and things out of their potato-parings, bones, etc. And then there are some who would have the garbage hauled out to the far fields and spread out on the ground for fertilizer; others who favor the idea of burying the municipal refuse in big pits.

And so on.

REAL-LIFE ACT IN "THE CITY."

Brightness in the company playing "The City" with its turgid undercurrent, was afforded yesterday noon when Miss Gwendlyn Lowrey became the wife of Moris Majeroni in the parlor of the Hayward Hotel. Dr. Locke performed the ceremony in this act of real life. Norman Hackett played the role of father and gave the bride away. Miss Ethel Martin and Miss Susanne Willa took the parts of maids of honor, and Herbert Delmore was the best man. Luncheon under the supervision of E. C. Carter played an encore to the principal act. A number of friends of the pair were on hand to act as props and attendant scenery. The couple leave for Santa Barbara immediately upon the completion of the engagement of the company in this city.

CLEAR AND CORRECT.

STANTON ON THE PRIMARY.

Says Spalding Is Entitled to the Senatorship.

Assembly's Speaker Clarifies the Situation.

Advisory Vote Points Plainly to A. G. Spalding.

[Signed Statement Made Especially for The Times by Speaker Stanton.]

I have been asked as one of the authors of the Direct Primary Law, to give my interpretation of that particular section applying to the advisory vote for United States Senator. In the first place, let me say that the Direct Primary Bill, as introduced into the last Legislature by Senator Wright in the Senate, and by myself in the Assembly, was prepared by the Direct Primary League of California, which was practically an adjunct of the Lincoln-Roosevelt organization, and that the bill as introduced was past and became a law with but one change, and that in reference to the vote for United States Senator. Hiram W. Johnson, as representative of this League, appeared before committees of the Legislature advocating its adoption. As introduced, it called for a state-wide vote; but many of the legislators, myself included, believed that inasmuch as members of the Legislature were elected by districts, and were responsible alone to the electorate within the boundaries of those districts, they and they alone (the electors) should be the ones to advise or instruct members as to whom to vote for for United States Senators.

This brought on a contention, which was finally settled by the law being amended as it now reads, to-wit:

"That members of the Legislature shall be at liberty to vote either for the choice of their respective districts, expressed at said primary election, or for the candidate for United States Senator who shall have received the indorsement of their party at such primary election in the greatest number of districts electing members of such party to the Legislature."

This action was brought about by the fear that unless the member of the Legislature had an alternative choice, he might feel that he had been instructed to vote at all times for the person who received the greatest number of votes in his district, and thus bring about a deadlock which could not be broken unless members of the Legislature violated the instructions of their constituents. Thus he was given two choices, and, obviously, it would be proper for him to vote for the popular candidate instead of the less popular one. This fear of a deadlock, which was justly founded, was the only reason whatever for dissenting from the distinct plan, and when this was overcome, no cause was left for dispute.

The object of making the change above described by districts, instead of at large, was, firstly, as above stated; and, secondly that the large centers of population, particularly around San Francisco Bay, could at any time, by concerted action, dictate as to who the United States Senator should be, and at the same time turn around and vote opposition candidates into the Legislature, thus leaving it to the safe Republican districts to elect Republicans, and at the same time have nothing to say as to who the Senator would be. This was manifestly so unfair that those of us who had the best interests of the Republican party at heart demanded and insisted upon the district plan, foreseeing that, unless this were done, certain sections of the State, could force upon us an undesirable candidate and leave to us the necessity of choosing a Republican Legislature to elect him. Such a condition might be so brought about as to result in the election of a Democratic Senator, and it was to prevent this calamity that the district plan was given serious consideration. The wisdom of this is seen in the election of an overwhelmingly Republican Legislature. It tends to cement and bind our party together, not disintegrate it, for while a person may vote for his choice of Senator at the primaries, yet to make his vote and voice effective he must follow it up by voting the same party ticket at the general election. The importance of this is appreciated when we realize that approximately 215,000 votes were cast for Governor at the Republican primaries, yet but 150,000 were received by the Republican candidate at the election; thus demonstrating that 65,000 members of other parties participated in the Republican primaries, but went back to their own parties at the election.

Much is said about the present Senatorial situation being complicated, and predictions are freely made that a deadlock in the next Legislature is assured. How this can be brought about without a deliberate violation of the spirit and absolute text of the Direct Primary Law is a puzzle to me. The issue before the people at the August primaries was distinct and definite. There were three candidates—Spalding, Works and Meserve. Personally I was for Meserve, and did what little I could, without injuring my own candidacy for Governor, in his behalf. But Meserve was defeated, and, obeying the spirit and text of the Direct Primary Law, Meserve and his followers are, or should be, for the winner. The people at the August primaries, by Assembly and Senatorial districts, declared in favor of Mr. Spalding. He carried a clear majority of all the districts, and these districts in turn have elected Republican members of the Legislature, and, to my mind, Republican members of the Legislature elected in districts instructed for Mr. Spalding would be absolutely derelict in their duty if they failed to cast their votes for him next winter. There can be no equivocation about this. The law is plain and distinct. Mr. Spalding carried the greatest number of districts. Members elected from districts which were carried by Meserve or by Works are at liberty to do one of two things—vote for the choice of their districts as expressed in the primaries, or vote for the man who carried the greater number of districts in the State, and that man is Mr. Spalding.

In the final vote in the Legislature upon the Direct Primary Bill there were none in the negative in the Assembly, and but one in the Senate; so that the law as it stands was practically the unanimous choice of the entire Legislature, Democrats and Republicans alike.

I have no interest whatever in the outcome save to see a Republican elected. I have met Mr. Spalding but twice; my heart is with Mr. Meserve, my friend of twenty years standing. But these men made their fight, the people spoke, their mandate should be obeyed. The losers should be good losers; do as I have done, hurrah for and help elect the winner!

P. A. STANTON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

NEW CATHEDRAL.

widely scattered and the noble old missions fell into decay, but there was always here and there a Franciscan priest or friar to be found. Their hold on the mission of Santa Barbara was never relinquished. More than 150 years ago Spain banished the Jesuits from California. As far as Southern California is concerned they never came back until a few years ago, when Bishop Conaty restored them to the old footing which they once held. To meet certain other needs the bishop, during the past four years, has brought here the Benedictines to minister to the Basques of the diocese, the Dominicans for the Poles, and the Sons of the Immaculate Heart for the Mexicans. There are also the Redemptorist Fathers at Fresno, fully half of the San Joaquin Valley being included in the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles.

The sisters who have been brought to the diocese for the first time by the bishop include the Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Franciscan Sisters and the Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, which latter order ministers especially to Italians.

These strong organizations furnish the bishop with a working force equipped by the training of centuries to meet every conceivable demand. But in addition to all that the head of the diocese has the secular priests who have charge of the work of the parishes and who are surrounded with lay societies intimately connected with the church. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul extends its operations throughout the whole diocese. It is an organization devoted wholly to the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor and the sick and is composed of laymen. Many merchants and professional men of Los Angeles and Southern California belong to the St. Vincent de Paul Society. Then there are day nurseries and maternity hospitals in the cities, all doing splendid work and keeping abreast of the Christian spirit of the times.

INDIANS AND OLD MISSIONS.

Sixteen of the twenty-one missions erected by the brown-robed Franciscans in California during the days of Junipero Serra, and after, are located in this diocese. These include the Mission San Diego, the first Christian church reared in California; San Carlos Mission at Carmel, where the dust of Father Junipero lies bureid; San Luis Rey, San Gabriel, San Antonio, and those other noble and ancient ruins which are among the most priceless archeological monuments in existence on the continent.

The work of preserving and restoring these venerable crumbling piles has been attended to in the past almost wholly by the Landmarks Club, an organization composed almost entirely of non-Catholics. But since Bishop Conaty came he has taken this duty largely into his own hands, always, however, in perfect harmony with the Landmarks Club, to which he never fails on appropriate public occasions to acknowledge a debt of gratitude.

At the present time nearly every one of the Old Missions in Southern California is in good condition and safe from further ravishments of time. Santa Barbara, San Luis Rey, the churches at both Monterey and Carmel, and several others, are now in perfect condition. The work of preservation and restoration will be pushed steadily forward. Five thousand dollars has been spent recently on Santa Ynez Mission, arrangements are about concluded for the restoration of the Mission San Diego, while the Spanish priests at San Gabriel have almost brought that ancient establishment back to its former glory.

Concerning the Mission Indians it may be said that they are experiencing what nearly approaches a regeneration. They are now looked after as they have never been looked after since the days of the Padres. A new chapel has been built on every reservation between Soboba and San Diego, all down through that stretch of sun-swept hills now commonly referred to as "Ramona's Country." The new Indian church at Soboba, built by the Indians themselves under the direction of that fine young enthusiast, Father Hughes, would do credit to any community in California, and recalls the days of old when the Indians built San Juan Capistrano, stone on stone, with their own hands.

There are now seven priests in charge of the Missions Indians, a larger number than has ever been engaged in the work since the days of Secularization. For many years past old Father Hahn of Banning was the only pastor the Indians had. Now their wants are regularly and strictly attended and there is reason to hope that their condition will in every way be improved. The teaching Orders of Sisters are also entering the field.

It was within the borders of the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles that the early history and romance of California had birth. Bishop Conaty is the sixth in the line of great ecclesiastics who have presided over the destinies of this famed and beautiful principality of the church. Junipero Serra is sometimes referred to as the first bishop, but he was never consecrated to that office, although, by special authority from Rome, he exercised the functions of a bishop for a period of two years.

In the diocese of Monterey the first Christian service ever held within the present borders of the United States was probably celebrated. This was at San Diego in 1542, when Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo landed there on his voyage of discovery with the first white men who ever set foot on California's soil. No Spanish ship sailed in those days without a chaplain and it is not likely that the chaplain of Cabrillo's expedition failed to hold divine services in San Diego during the six days the crew remained in that port. At San Diego the first Christian martyr gave his life for the faith in California. Cabrillo himself sleeps his last sleep on the island of San Miguel, off the shores of Santa Barbara. The first capital was at Monterey.

Bishop Conaty, while anything but a dreamer, holds the ancient glory of his diocese in deep affection, and takes an especial interest in the Old Missions and the Indians. But he is a man of action and is most interested now in his plan to build in Los Angeles the handsomest and costliest church edifice in America outside of New York. The tremendous demands which his growing diocese has made on him has delayed the cathedral, but there is to be "something doing" now.

The great building will occupy the entire block between Valencia street and Union avenue on Ninth, fronting south.

WAR DEPARTMENT LOOKING IN?

RUMOR ABOUT ARMY SNUB OF MILITIAMEN THERE.

California National Guard Officer Tells How It Felt to Be Looked Upon as a Bore at the Atascadero Autumn Maneuvers — Takes Out All Enthusiasm.

That the National Guard officers were snubbed by the regulars at the autumn maneuvers at Atasceadro this year is a bit of gossip that is understood to have reached the War Department from California.

The sequel is likely to be spicy.

These maneuvers are held at enormous expense by the government for special purpose of welding the militia and the regular army into one compact military machine. In other words, "team work" is the whole purpose of the expensive maneuvers.

If the effect of these maneuvers is spoiled by the niftiness of some of the West Pointers, it would seem that "doing" are inevitable in the region of Washington.

It is a matter of excited gossip in militia circles that the War Department is looking into these reports.

An examination of the sore spots on one of the local National Guard officers disclosed the following:

"Two years ago," he said, "we all came back from the camp very enthusiastic for soldiering. This year it was different. This year we came back feeling sat upon and squelched.

"The trouble was the prejudice that some of the regular army officers seemed to have against the National Guardsmen.

"Two years ago, the adjutant general and chief-of-staff at Atascadero was a regular officer of some note and many prejudices—Maj. Dunning.

"At the beginning of the camp, it seemed to cause him weariness and ennui to have to bother with the militia. At that time, however, Col. (now General) Maus was in command. He was in thorough sympathy with the work of the National Guard, and seemed to soften the heart of Maj. Dunning and the hearts of some of the other regulars who held to similar ideas.

"This year, Gen. Tasker N. Bliss was in command. He seemed to have about the same ideas as Maj. Dunning.

"I wouldn't go so far as to say they were rude. They were merely distant. They gave us instructions with a 'We-are-doing-this-merely-because-we-have-to' air.

"They acted as though it were a terrible bore for which we were responsible.

"They acted about like a shop girl when you come into a store at three minutes to closing time and want to match samples.

"We were made to feel that we didn't belong there at all. I couldn't put my finger on any specific thing that they did; it was what they didn't do."

Musical Kindergarten.

AN interesting feature of the pupil recital to be given by the Fillmore School of Music on November 29th is a demonstration of the really wonderful work done by the little folks trained by Miss Madge Patton, in the Dunning System for beginners. Parents contemplating starting their children will be especially interested. For invitations address Thos. H. Fillmore, 325 Blanchard Hall Bldg.

New Lingerie Waists

Extraordinary Values at $1.95

Monday we place on sale a brand new line of lingerie waists that are exceptionally strong values at $1.95.

The offering includes two new models as follows:

Fine white batiste, with collar, front and back, round yoke of lace, adorned with five hand-made Irish crocheted medallions. This style opens in the back and is pin tucked.

Another model has front yoke and collar of lace, trimmed with three hand-made Irish crocheted medallions, back of waist attractively tucked.

Hundreds of women will be glad to know about these great values, but only a limited number can experience the pleasure of buying one at the ridiculously low price of $1.95—because there are only 144 waists in the lot.

Orient, when she was one of the three young women, non-official travelers, who enjoyed the unique experience of exploring the Philippines under the personal direction of the then Secretary of War and present President of the United States. Now she is making a new record as the foremost maiden hostess at the national capital, which is in the world, for the unmarried woman of 40, be she ever so brilliant, is rarely reckoned as a person of importance in European society.

Every one in Washington gives receptions, or goes to receptions. Most worth while people do both. There is nothing remarkable in that, but the receptions Miss Boardman gives are remarkable inasmuch as they bring together one evening each week several hundred distinguished guests, under the most delightful conditions, in one of the most beautiful homes in Washington, and apparently without the least formality or trouble to the hostess. The receptions are of course by invitation, cards being issued early in the season announcing Miss Boardman at home on a certain evening, and so [illegible] the rest. Ambassadors and Senators, judges of the Supreme Court, members of the House of Representatives, scientists from the Smithsonian Institute, all find their way to Dupont Circle on the evening named on their card of invitation, some to stay ten minutes, some to linger until midnight, just as their own inclination and engagements suggest. The feminine portion of the company is quite as interesting, for Miss Boardman knows few dull women, and with her great tact and amiability is always able to put these at ease. She is ordinarily assisted by her sisters, Mrs. Frederick A. Keep, who was Miss Florence Boardman, and Mrs. Winthrop Murray Crane, wife of the junior Senator from Massachusetts. Mrs. Crane is the youngest daughter of the house, who as Miss Josephine Boardman was a great belle seven or eight years ago. She surprised the world by suddenly turning her back on the youthful frivolities for which she and her friends were famous, to the study of politics, spending hours in the visitors' gallery of the Senate, and finally marrying Senator Crane, then a widower, and as one of her friends described him, "twice her age and half her size." Notwithstanding these discrepancies the marriage has proven very happy, and Mrs. Crane is one of the really important matrons of the Senatorial circle and a great aid to her sister in the latter's good works.

There is always a bountiful supper at Miss Boardman's reception, served from an exquisitely appointed table by soft-treading, low-voiced servants, but this too sans ceremonie.

Sometimes there is music, if a real musician happens to be among the guests, and disposed to be gracious, but no one is hired to entertain, for the entertainment is in conversation, and that the guests supply themselves and in several languages. The newly-arrived diplomat need not absent himself because of his halting English, for he will find a dozen women able to speak to him in excellent French, Italian or German.

Although the hostess at these evenings, Miss Boardman is not the head of the hospitable home in which they are held. Mr. and Mrs. William J. Boardman are living and socially active and prominent. They came to Washington some twenty years ago from Columbus, O., built their present home and proceeded to enjoy themselves in the sane and satisfactory way that the truly elect always take Washington society. Possessed of large wealth, cultured taste and a family connection of distinction in Connecticut and New Jersey, as well as in Ohio, they made many friends and no enemies, and no mistakes—Mr. Boardman has never held any official position nor been identified with any important local interests in the District of Columbia, hence the social success of his family is all the more remarkable and easily traced to the intelligence and amiability of his wife, and now to his eldest daughter.

The Admiral of the Navy and Mrs. Dewey, who recently celebrated the eleventh anniversary of their marriage, are leading an ideal existence in their spacious K street home. The Admiral, despite the fact that he will be 73 next month, is hale and hearty as ten years ago and in daily attendance at his office in the Navy Department. Mrs. Dewey, although many years younger than her husband, is extremely delicate and unable to take any active part in general society. She is, however, the same brilliant, charming woman who won the heart of the hero of Manila Bay way back in the days he was a commodore, with his present fame undreamed of, and of whom Fighting Bob Evans said when he heard of their marriage, "Dewey will never know another dull quarter of an hour as long as he lives."

The years have proven Rear Admiral Evans a prophet, as can be proven by the small but choice circle of friends who enjoy the Dewey hospitality and enter into their happy home life.

The passing of one Albert J. Myer from the ranks of the Signal Corps of the United States army to private life, is not only a great relief to the dignity of Fort Myer, Va., a post named for the distinguished grandfather of the late corporal, but to the entire service. Not that there was anything discreditable in young Myer's career, he was a model soldier until a very short time ago, when he overstayed his leave of absence, as member of a smart country house party, and returned to duty to find himself fined, reprimanded and reduced in numbers as well as sentenced to the guard house.

Maj.-Gen. Grant, commanding the Department of the East, remitted the confinement owing to the previous good conduct of the soldier whose term of enlistment was just coming to an end. That Mr. Myer has decided not to re-enlist brings great comfort to the army set in Washington, from the fact that in his non-official life, which began each day at 5:30, "Bert Myer" was a society man of the first magnitude, having the entree into Washington's most exclusive homes and clubs where he was continuously meeting officers young and old who resented his presence as a private.

That this particular "private" was an intimate friend and familiar acquaintance of the hosts from his childhood, where many of his superior officers were entitled to polite recognition only by reason of their uniform, was not accepted as a reasonable explanation of the corporal's presence, although quite satisfactory to society.

THE LISSNER-HOOLEY LEGISLATURE.

With a conceit that is colossal, and an audacity as monumental as that of Danton, Mr. Meyer Lissner has formulated and is putting into execution a plan to place the law-making power of the State in his own hands. The process by which he assumes to be vested with the privilege of accomplishing this feat is brazenly violative of the fundamental principle of the organization which has made Mr. Lissner its guide, philosopher, friend, leader and master. Mr. Lissner is attempting to exercise a one-man power, in comparison with which that of Uncle Joe Cannon shrinks into insignificance. Speaker Cannon has been sharply criticised for establishing in the United States House of Representatives a system of government by committees appointed by himself. It was the exercise of this power that provoked the Republican insurgency which resulted in temporarily overthrowing the Republican party in the East, while in California it chained it as a satrap at the wheels of the Lissner chariot.

We do not believe that Mr. Lissner will succeed in his plan to usurp the functions of the Legislature of the State of California. "Whom the gods wish to destroy," says the proverb, "they first make mad." The gods must contemplate the destruction of Mr. Lissner, for they have illustrated in him the proverb—

"Great wits to madness nearly are allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide."

The primary election law was designed to supersede the convention system, by providing that the nomination of public officers shall be made directly by the voters. In the contest for nominations little attention was paid to the selection of delegates to conventions, whose main function would be to formulate party principles. Since the popular interest centered on men, and platforms appeared to be of small consequence, it was not difficult for Mr. Lissner to select the members of county committees, who selected the members of the Republican State Central Committee, who selected Mr. Lissner for chairman, and then, under the color of empowering him to carry out the party platform, the committee vested in him, or attempted to vest in him, the power to appoint committees to fashion the laws of the State.

This power Mr. Lissner has used to its fullest extent. He has appointed twelve committees of ten members each to prepare bills for submission to the Legislature. Each of these councils of ten has assigned to it a different subject matter for legislation.

The Times does not question the ability or integrity of most of the 120 gentlemen named by Mr. Lissner as members of the twelve committees. It attacks the proposed system of government, and not those who will put it in operation. In the name of the people of California it objects to a government of Lissner, by Lissner, for Lissner. That these committees might formulate wise laws, that Lissner himself might possibly formulate such laws, may be conceded. But, with the exception of a few Senators and Assemblymen, who have been placed on these committees, their members are not legitimate legislators, and some of them would never have been elected as such by the voters.

Again, in the appointment of committees to carry out his policies, Mr. Lissner has not always been wise in his selections. His Committee on Suffrage, for instance, is utterly masculine in its constituent elements. The Republican platform favors woman suffrage. Was there not in the brilliant galaxy of California suffragettes a single lady whose attainments would have warranted her selection as a member of the Suffrage Committee? Then there is the Committee on Criminal Procedure. There is probably no man in the State more conversant with the defects of our Criminal Code than Francis J. Heney.

The people of San Francisco were most unjust to him when he ran for District Attorney. Instead of rushing tumultuously to the polls and voting for him, regardless of race, color or previous conditions of political servitude, they dropped him with a dull, sickening thud into the election discard. It was not Heney's fault that the higher-ups were not accorded an opportunity to eat corn-meal mush at San Quentin. The blame of his defeat rests upon the defective Code of Criminal Procedure, which Heney was unable to adjust to his peculiar methods, and his Arizona law learning. If the Criminal Code is to be amended, Heney should have been charged with the duty of preparing the amendments, and it was a shame to take him away from criminal law, of which he has a little smattering, and put him at work formulating methods of conservation to discourage homesteaders and prospectors, for Mr. Heney has abundantly illustrated by his illustrious career that he is not conservative about anything. Lissner ought to have wired Pinchot to return to California and take charge of the pleasant duty of tying up California natural resources for the use of future generations.

Without unduly criticising the statesmanlike qualities of the 120 gentlemen who have been selected by Mr. Lissner to supersede the Legislature of California in the making of laws, it may be said that the membership resembles the old-time lists of passengers on the Panama steamers, "Senator Gates, Gov. Gillett and Works in the cabin, and 117 in the steerage."

Mr. Lissner, with that inordinate self-respect which is his distinguishing characteristic, will probably require all the bills prepared by the committees to be submitted to him for examination. He will then deal with the proposed laws as the thrifty housewife deals with a litter of kittens. Some are approved and given access to the cream pitcher, while the others are placed in a sack, weighted with a stone, and deposited in the pond.

The members of the Legislature will be expected to wait patiently until Mr. Lissner submits them such legislation as he deems necessary for the welfare of himself and his friends, primarily, and for the good of the people of California incidentally. They will then pass the Lissner laws, reject all others, and adjourn.

There is, however, one storm speck on the otherwise cloudless horizon of Lissner power, and it may at any time grow into a thunder cloud. Gov. Johnson may not stand for the Lissner plan of placing the law-making power of California in the hands of Meyer Lissner. He may have some faint aspirations of his own in the same direction, and after the dexter haunch of His Excellency has been so applied to Herrin's seat of power as to compel that gentleman to take his meals standing for awhile, the Governor may turn his attention to the presumptuous Angeleño, who proposes to make Senators and Assemblymen mere puppets to register his ipse dixits, and if he should do so, why—

"Never did the Cyclops hammer fall
On Mars' armor, forged thunder proof,"
With less remorse than Johnson's upraised foot
Will fall on Hooley Lissner.

When we consider the gulf that yawns between the abilities and the ambitions of Hooley-Lissner, and reflect upon his assumptions to lead a reform movement that shall purge California of the evil of bossism and the one-man power in politics, we are reminded of the lines—

"The river Rhine, it is well known,
Washes the city of Cologne.
But, tell me, O ye gods divine,
What power shall wash the river Rhine?"

STANTON ON THE SENATORSHIP

The Times presents today a signed statement by Speaker Stanton which sheds a great deal of illumination on the United States Senatorship question. Indeed, in view of the explanation by Mr. Stanton, there can no longer be much question about it. Under the law Mr. Spalding is clearly entitled to be elected Senator. He carried a majority of the districts in the advisory voting, and if the legislators heed the plain provisions of the primary law, a majority of them will have no recourse but to cast their votes for the San Diego candidate. In his clear, candid and accurate presentation of the history of the enactment, Speaker Stanton shows what the intent of the lawmakers was. He goes back of the phraseology; he sets forth the reasons which led the Legislature to adopt the district system. He makes it as obvious as a hump on a camel that if the legislators vote according to the intent and terms of the law, a majority of them will consider themselves advised to vote for Mr. Spalding. It is the insurgents' own law; The Times never has favored it; but now let its authors and defenders live up to it. Mr. Spalding has an indisputable claim on the office of United States Senator.

OUR MARKET IN CHINA.

One of these days the port of Los Angeles undoubtedly will be the busiest on the Pacific Coast. To make it so will need much work on the part of our citizens. We ought to have direct trade with China and Japan from Los Angeles. There is a great, or if we were dealing in superlatives we might say a gigantic market in the Orient awaiting exploitation by clever, up-to-date Los Angeles merchants. We needn't sit idly by and say that San Francisco has that trade and it would be useless for our merchants to attempt to "break in." San Francisco has not the cream of the oriental trade, nor even the skimmed milk of it. As a matter of cold fact the United States plays but a poor part in oriental commerce, as the latest figures covering our export business show. In the trade statement for nine months of the year the Bureau of Statistics at Washington shows that our total exports to China for the period named amounted to but $12,750,000. Careful estimates are that the total trade of the calendar year will not exceed $15,500,000. This is a falling off of $4,000,000 as compared with 1909 and of $8,750,000 when contrasted with 1908. These figures may not convey much to the general public, but the striking comparison between 1910 and 1905 ought to make the people take notice This year our exports to China will approximate only one-fourth those of five years ago. A still more remarkable illustration is furnished by the Financier of New York. It remarks:

"Taking the population of the empire at 400,000,000 people the present state of our trade with China can be best shown by saying that the United States sales to China are 4 cents per capita per annum. The United States sells to South America every six weeks as much goods as we sell to China in an entire year and we sell more to Canada in one month than to China in twelve months."

The explanation is, of course, that vast as is the market across the Pacific, yet it is easier to supply the less densely populated regions north and south and that our merchants get quicker returns from those points. They can the more easily send agents there to find out what is needed, while the markets are more congenial and far less peculiar. In the Orient we have to educate the native to appreciate our productions; the countries to the north and south of us are already educated in this regard, and they appear to be able to take so much of our surplus productions that it seems hardly worth the bother to curry favor in the Far East in order to make trade.

But if this is to become a great port, the greatest on the American Pacific Coast as we hope and believe, we must encourage extension of trade in the Far East as well as north and south. In fact, ships which make their home port in the San Pedro section of Los Angeles must visit every point of the compass and bring to us the spoils of the universe as well as taking to every country the output of this favored Southern California. Los Angeles must become the ocean trade spout of the whole of the great Southwest and through her big shippers of the East will be expected to send their goods to the magic isles of the Pacific and to the mystic lands on the other side of the great ocean that washes at our feet.

"NOT A WORD."

"Not a word" was the statement given out by Col. Roosevelt, the other day, when asked to express himself as to the state of his feelings concerning the late election in the Eastern States. Had the said election gone differently there can be no doubt that T. R. would have had much to say, but under the circumstances it seems that he felt that his silence might prove more eloquent than any pronouncement that he could possibly make.

This attitude of our only living ex-President raises a question, and the question is whether it is better when one has been taken up bodily and slammed against the side of the barn, or otherwise lambasted, either physically or mentally, so to speak—whether it is better to preserve a deep and impressive silence or to "holler."

Having given the matter much thought, having consulted the historians and the philosophers on the subject, we are inclined to think that Col. Roosevelt has shown wisdom and perspicacity, and that the "not a word" policy was the proper course for him to pursue. He was "whipped to a frazzle"—to use his own favorite expression—and that was all there was to it. The returns spoke for themselves. Was he to rub the sore spot and emit loud wails? By no means. Was he, on the other hand, to rise up from the dust of the road, wipe the blood from his nose and shake his fist and make threats? That would have been an undignified attitude and would have subjected him to the scoffs and sneers and the jeering scorn of his triumphant enemies. The colonel is a good fighter, but he got licked. He simply took his medicine and grinned.

Now, a man with less sense and courage would have acted in an entirely different spirit. Every day somebody gets the worst of it in some way or other, but what attitude do the majority of these unfortunates assume? If anybody asks them for an expression of their feelings, do they wave their hands deprecatingly and say "not a word," as T. R. said? As a matter of fact it is the rarest thing in the world for anybody to take the trouble to interview the fellow who lost out, but that does not seem to deter those who have been defeated either in love or war from jamming the air with their howls and inharmonious wails.

Take, for instance, the man who has been crossed in love. Why on earth does he persist in going about with a melancholy face advertising his disappointment to an unsympathetic world? Can he not see that there are other hearts not only willing but eager to beat and throb against his own and to take the place of the perfidious fair one who jilted him, perhaps with much more satisfying results? He should understand that the majority of men look upon him as a person to be congratulated and not to be commiserated. Cynical bachelors and enslaved married men wonder why he does not shout with glee over his escape. This may be a harsh thing to say, but a great religious newspaper is compelled to speak the truth.

To be what is called "a good loser" is to achieve greatness. "The man worth while is the man who can smile when everything goes dead wrong," as the poet said. We should no more fear to lose than we should fear to die, because death is no more certain than that every man cannot hope to win all the time. Nor would it be well for any man to be always a winner. Success soon loses its good taste unless it is occasionally spiced with defeat.

PAVING HIS WAY.

Premier Asquith has lost no time in informing the British Houses of Parliament of the course he intends to pursue following the failure of the conference on the constitutional question regarding the veto of the House of Lords. The peers will be given an opportunity of saying yes or no to the government's veto bill this week and if they decide to continue the war the controversy will be "sent for final decisive arbitrament to the national tribunal."

This is high-sounding language, but if we remember rightly we have heard something like it before. When the British Premier last called for a general election the same question was before the voters for "final, decisive arbitrament," but the country is so well divided on the matter that only the Irish votes kept Mr. Asquith from losing his hold on Parliament. The same thing may happen at the next appeal to the people. There is nothing to show that the one-half of the voters opposed to the Asquith programme has changed its mind.

The British Premier knows well what will be the answer of the Lords to his sonorous sentences. They will reject his measure, or perhaps amend it to make it conform to the views of those Britishers who are willing to compromise on the subject and so find same way of ending the uncomfortable state of affairs that now exists in the United Kingdom. As Mr. Asquith has shown that he will accept no compromise short of the scalps of the peers, he is preparing for the general elections. In paving the way it is observed that he has promised to bring in a bill to provide for the payment of members. This measure will be designed to catch the votes of the workingman and of the labor unions, which were hard hit by what is known as the Osborne judgment. Mr. Asquith's move in this direction is certainly an astute one. Personally he is far removed from sympathy with labor members or union leaders, but he is the head of a party which depends on that kind of men for support. He is well aware, too, that leading Conservatives have been trying to induce Mr. Balfour to come out with a declaration in favor of this policy, so he has decided to get in "the first lick."

REMARKS BY THE STAFF.

Blather of Gompers.

Gompers has got it bad. He says: "Fear! Fear! Fear! Always the ghostly apparition of fear haunts the lives of the average Congressman, and while this un-American attitude prevails, the privileges, the dignity, the unquestioned prerogatives of legislation, the bed-rock basis of constitutional rights, the fundamental requirement of fearless, faithful representation that gave this nation birth—those precious, valued and holy elements of liberty are being gradually alienated from the House of Representatives by the courts and by the Presidents," etc., etc., ad libitum, ad nauseam." It is a monument to the patience of newspapers that they pay for the telegraphic transmission across the continent of the unmitigated rot that Gompers talks. Gompers and his readers have one element in common. Neither he nor they have the slightest idea of what he is talking about.

Advanced Thought in Arizona.

The "progressive" Arizona Democrats are beginning to recognize their own idiocy. They have voted down the proposition to apply the recall to the judiciary, and they have indefinitely postponed a clause in the Constitution which proposed to recognize the right of labor organizations to strike, picket and boycott without being bothered with injunctions. They also indefinitely postponed a provision in the Constitution requiring a five years' residence as a qualification for election to the United States Senate. This tardy recognition by the cactus statesmen of the Federal Constitution is quite an intellectual advance.

A Peevish Hindoo Lady.

The Maharanee of Baroda leaned over the taffrail of the outgoing liner and slapped the dust of America from the soles of her sandals. "Your republic is a fraud," said the olive-brown lady. "They told me that your women were educated and intelligent. I find it is so—not. I have been asked if I was an East Indian or a West Indian, or an American Indian? I have been asked if Baroda was in Bombay, or Bombay was in Baroda, and whether either was in India? I retorted by asking whether Chicago was in Illinois or Illinois was in Chicago, and they thought I was in earnest, and said that they couldn't tell until the census returns were received, for the city and the State were miscellaneously mixed up."

Shooting Boys.

Mr. and Mrs. William L. Parker of Geneva, Ohio, whose united ages amount to 149 years, have been arrested for a violation of the game laws for shooting schoolboys out of season. Three boys from an adjacent school were noisily playing in front of the Parker residence. The old lady would not stand the racket. She took a pot shot at the outfit, and succeeded in peppering a 13-year-old boy with fine shot. Nice old couple, the Parkers.

Kept Awake.

A San Diego woman, the lower part of whose residence was used for a polling place, has charged the county $25 rent, being $5 for the room rent and $20 for keeping four members of her family awake all night while the judges were counting the returns. Audit the bill, you Supervisors!

A Disgusted Joy Rider.

"You look weary, Mr. Legit," said the enterprising and urbane real estate agent, as the fat man entered his office and dropped puffing and mopping his face into an armchair. "Yes," was the response, "the next time I want a joy ride that ends in a grief walk I will again patronize your $5000 high-class, double-back-action, gasoline-tanked, evil-smelling horseless machine. I left it with your chauffeur on his back under it, with a monkey-wrench in his hand and curses in his mouth. It lacked what I have achieved—a good tire. If you have any more real estate bargains that are situated three miles at right angles from a trolley line, I will visit them even as my Redeemer visited Jerusalem, on the hurricane deck of my brother the jackass. See?" "I see," said the real estate man, cheerfully. "I see clearly."

Every Year.

The government official reports say that the corn crop this year will be a record breaker, worth more money than all the gold mined in the world during the past twelve months. And the beauty of it is that the corn crop comes every year. This is a pretty good country after all.

Maybe.

The words of the Psalmist: "Be lifted up ye everlasting gates," probably referred to the one hundred ton affairs they are building in Pittsburgh for the Panama Canal locks.

Going—Gone!

The contest for Queen of the Roses in Pasadena is approaching the warmth of the Fredericks-Woolwine episode, and that is going some.

Hard Course.

Quite a crowd of Democrats are arranging to put a number of tacks and pieces of glass in the road when Champ Clark makes his auto dash for the Speakership.

Will Be Lost.

The Congressional elections show a number of successful unidentified patriots who were only put up to fill out the Democratic ticket. They will linger for the brief space of a single term and then vanish into nothingness.

The One Who Stayed.

I met a woman old and gray
And sought to cheer her lonely way.

A girl flashed by us, all aglow;
"Your child," I said; she answered, "No.

"I have but one, and she is dead,
Yet seven others live," she said;

"Live, but we live so far apart
I hold them only in my heart;

"But one who has no dwelling place
In earthly time or earthly space;

"She nestles in my arms at night,
She greets me when the morn is bright;

"Her baby smile, her winsome ways
Make glad my bleak November days."

She looked across the waters gray,
Then pressed my hand and turned away.

Gypsy Life.

Oh, the gypsy's life for me, as for Jessie Hebersham Michels, the heiress who eloped with a Romany king and was happy forever after.

There's nothing like the outdoor life in sweet Vagabondia. There's nothing I love as much as sleeping with a good saddle for a pillow. First, you try hanging your head overboard with the saddle under the back of your stiffening neck. This is about as comfortable as hanging out of a window by your heels. Next you slip down and crumple your ear on a nail head or a buckle. By the time morning comes, your neck is so stiff you have to get a mirror to see your own feet.

Nothing like sleeping outdoors under the stars, wondering if every sound is a snake; with a rock like a spear impaling your spinal column and the ground underneath you as hard as a cement walk; with a gale of icy air blowing in on your feet where the covers have slipped off and a chill crawling down your legs and a million

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Verbal charges against the Chief Building Inspector before the Legislation Committee yesterday, caused a hot retort, followed by an apology.

Ex-Secretary Dean, of the office of the Chief of Police, yesterday filed supplemental charges of indiscretion and incompetency against Chief Galloway.

A rumor was current yesterday in the City Jail building that Police Judge Williams may go to San Pedro to sit in both civil and criminal cases because the number of cases in the University Police Division is small.

Judge Crow of Santa Barbara delivered one of the severest denunciations ever heard in a courtroom, yesterday, in denying Louise Brunner a divorce from Herman Brunner. The aged defendant also gets back all of his property, valued at $200,000.

The will of John A. Barnard, involving the disposition of an estate of $140,000, was offered for probate yesterday.

AT THE CITY HALL.

RUGGED ROAD OF INSPECTOR.

BUILDING DEPARTMENT CHIEF GETS IT HOT.

No Likely Change of Fire Escape Ordinance—Movement to Reduce Thickness of Walls in Buildings. Dean Files Supplemental Charges Against Chief of Police.

The meeting of the Legislation Committee of the City Council, held yesterday morning, turned out to be one of the most seething of recent occurrences at the City Hall.

In two discussions, one concerning fire escapes and the other concerning a reduction of the thickness of walls as required by the building ordinance, there was a disposition to attack the Building Superintendent. In one instance, when Mrs. Daisy Fuller made certain irrelevant assertions concerning him, Mr. Backus became so incensed that he retorted with an epithet, for which he afterwards apologized. At the close of the committee meeting, a man named Dickerson made a scene by becoming very angry, throwing around charges against Backus, to which the latter, being well on his guard from the former encounter, paid no attention. Enforcing ordinances is no fun.

Joseph Simons, the brick manufacturer, was leader in the argument in favor of reducing the thickness of walls of buildings. The petitioners presented a scale, running from the basement to the height of ten stories, calling for a horizontal reduction of four inches in all walls throughout the entire structure.

Simons argued that the walls, as called for by the building ordinance, are unnecessarily thick and impose an unnecessary burden upon builders, and intimated that there are some people about the City Hall who do not know everything about construction. His contention was sustained by a number of other speakers.

Building Inspector Backus maintained that the provisions of the ordinance are necessary for safety, and asked that before the committee determines upon any course of action a committee of qualified experts be called in to advise upon the subject. The matter was then postponed for two weeks.

The request of a number of persons that the fire escape ordinance be changed, so that the same heavy and expensive equipment will not be required for light structures in outlying districts, as in the heart of the city, was argued and taken under advisement. The Fire Commission strongly opposes the requested change, and it is not likely to be made.

The anger of Dickerson, who attacked the Building Superintendent, was occasioned by the demand of the officer that he change the fire escape on his Grand avenue building, though they complied with the ordinance when placed six or seven years ago. He also alleged that he knew of other buildings, upon the owners of which Backus has failed to make any effort to enforce the ordinance, but he did not "come through" with the facts.

SUPPLEMENTARY CHARGES. EX-SECRETARY FILES THEM UP.

Harry E. Dean, ex-secretary to Chief of Police Galloway, who filed charges against the chief, at the last meeting of the Police Commission, which were ordered filed without reading, came forward with another chapter yesterday. He filed with Secretary McKeag, supplementary charges, covering the alleged action of Galloway in urging Fred L. Baker of the Baker Iron Works to purchase certain bonds in his possession, while he was at the same time giving police protection to Baker, and also to the industrial establishment, of which he is the president and manager. A copy of the letter urging the stock upon Baker, in which the writer says "I need the money," accompanies the charges, which allege indiscretion, incompetency and a misunderstanding of the importance of the position he holds.

NOTICE EXPIRES. GARBAGE MAN PROMISES.

The two weeks' notice given to Garbage Contractor Alexander to comply with the specifications of his contract, expired yesterday. No official notice was taken of the fact by the Board of Public Works, but Mr. Alexander had a conference with W. M. Humphreys, Superintendent of Public Works, in which he promised to be good. If the agreement is carried out, householders throughout the city will at once receive notice of what is required on their part to make the collection of garbage effective.

WHITE SHRINE OFFICERS.

Manetho Shrine, Order White Shrine of Jerusalem, held its annual election of officers at the Shrine rooms, New Masonic Temple, on Friday night, as follows: Margaret I. Magee, High Priestess; Harriet J. Watson, Noble Prophetess; John H. Goss, Watchman of Shepherds; C. F. Jones, First Oriental Council; Benjamin F. Rosenfeldt, Second Oriental Council; A. N. Hamilton, Third Oriental Council; Alice M. Dickson, Scribe; Alice M. Knox, Treasurer; Minnie M. Jordan, Shepherdess; Freida Gibson, Guide.

WANTS A NEW START.

Mrs. May L. Russell yesterday filed a petition in the United States District Court asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Judgments on notes which she signed with another party amounting to $4600 are outstanding against her. She alleges that all she possesses is wearing apparel valued at $200.

AFFIRMS HARRISON CASE.

The conviction of R. E. Harrison on a charge of having committed a lewd act at Bimini Baths, was yesterday affirmed by the District Court of Appeal. He is under sentence of five years in San Quentin.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

SCORES WIFE IN BITTER WORDS.

COURT DECIDES MRS. BRUNNER IS HEARTLESS.

Terrible Arraignment of Woman Who Sought to Get Rid of Aged Husband and Made Life Burden to Him—Daughter Also Comes in for Criticism.

"She saw that he was old, infirm and decrepit, and that, as a money machine, he was about worn out."

From that text Superior Court Judge S. E. Crow of Santa Barbara, yesterday read a lecture on domestic ethics that must have seared the soul of the person against whom the excoriation was delivered—Mrs. Louise Brunner, wife of Herman Brunner, the ex-lottery king of St. Louis.

The court was giving a decision in the divorce action brought by Mrs. Brunner against the old man, the finding of the court being that she was not entitled to any relief through divorce; that all of the property that had been turned over to her by her husband should be returned; that she should be allowed $150 a month for the support of herself and their minor son, Fred Brunner; that Brunner should be allowed to visit his children as often as he pleased at their $100,000 home in Alhambra, which Brunner bought and paid for but from which he has been a fugitive, as it were, since June, 1909. The decision was a sweeping victory for Brunner, who has been fighting the case since last May.

The action as originally brought by Mrs. Brunner was for separate maintenance and an allowance of $1000 a month, but this was afterward amended for an absolute divorce. Brunner filed a cross-complaint through his attorneys, E. W. Britt and H. A. Massey, asking that the court declare him the owner of the property valued at about $200,000, and this the court has done, not only giving him all he asked for in that regard, but the finding also covers about $40,000 worth of stocks, bonds and mortgages that had been kindly transferred from the mother to her favorite daughter, Miss Teresa Brunner, and now held in her own name as trustee for "the mother."

The Brunners were married in St. Louis in March, 1881, and they have been residents of Alhambra since 1905. Brunner is a German about 70 years of age, and very infirm from age and three attacks of paralysis. He made his money selling lottery tickets before the ban of the government was put upon the business, but retired from the traffic some years ago.

They are the parents of five children—Mrs. Hermina White, aged 29; Teresa Brunner, 26; Julia, who is student at Stanford, 19; Louise, 18, and Fred, 16. The trial disclosed the fact that the sides of the family contention were lined up with Mrs. Brunner and her second daughter, Teresa, on one side, and the father and the other children on the other side.

As to Teresa the court declared that the intention of Mrs. Brunner to get rid of her husband as soon as possible was "no doubt largely encouraged by the advice of the daughter, Teresa, who has proved such an unnatural child in her attitude toward her father, as well as her manifest interest in the result of this case, as to make her almost unworthy of belief as a witness."

Brunner admitted that at various times during the last ten years he had given his wife the deeds to all of his property, but he alleged that as he was old and infirm he wanted her to know how to manage her large property, and thought that by so doing he would make provision for the old age of both.

The troubles of the family broke out soon after they had purchased and occupied the beautiful Alhambra home, where the testimony showed there were many scenes of turbulance, finally ending in the old man being driven away and taking refuge at the Rosslyn Hotel in this city or the home of his eldest daughter, Mrs. White.

The evidence showed that as soon as Mrs. Brunner believed that she could hold the property standing in her own name as her own, she concluded not only to assert title to the whole of it, but that she had made up her mind that she would divorce herself from the man who had accumulated all of the property.

In deciding the case in favor of Mr. Brunner, all along the line, Judge Crow employed the bitterest language, seldom, if ever, noted in a deliverance from the bench. Among other things he said, referring to the wife's treatment of her husband:

"She cared no more for his companionship, and she was determined to rid herself o this presence; and from their beautiful home in Alhambra she was determined to exclude him as soon as possible. * * * His infirmities did not appeal to her sympathy, his wants and necessities she cared nothing about, and she even went to the extreme of aiding her daughter Teresa in throwing him out of his own home and leaving him bleeding upon the sidewalk, after having closed the door against him.

"And on another occasion, in the bathroom of their home at Alhambra, she pushed him down upon the floor and cruelly stamped upon him. This unnatural conduct on her part produced the result that she wished—it made him leave his home, after which time, while she was living in this home, which is now of nearly the value of $100,000, we find him in a little room at his son-in-law's house. Yet with all this property in her own name, and believing that she could deprive him of the enjoyment of any part thereof, her avarice was not satisfied and she came into a court of equity with unclean hands asking this court to impose a burden of $1000 a month upon her husband for separate maintenance of herself and family."

PAYING THE PENALTY. HENRY NO LONGER DAPPER.

Victor C. Henry, the disciple of frenzied finance, who is facing three informations involving felony, was in Judge Davis's court yesterday to be arraigned.

Henry is no longer the dapper, swagger young man who had the faculty, if reports be true, of extracting money from citizens by the "phony" mortgage route. He appeared unkempt and ill at ease when facing the court. He did not seem to know what to do with his eyes or his hands, and perceptibly cowered beneath the gaze of his victims in the courtroom.

After the reading of the complaints, charging him with forgery and securing money on false pretenses, he begged, through his attorney, for time to consider whether or not he would plead guilty. He was allowed until Wednesday to make up his mind.

On October 18, Peter Carbone and John Stasi, became involved in a fight, and Carbone pulled a gun and shot Stasi dead. Now he claims self-defense, and he pleaded not guilty to an information alleging murder. His trial was set for December 12.

Jesus Rivera, charged with grand larceny, pleaded not guilty and his hearing was set for January 12.

C. L. Stanley pleaded guilty to burglary, and he will be up for sentence and judgment tomorrow morning.

Hugh Brown pleaded guilty to grand larceny, and he will be sentenced tomorrow morning.

BARNARD WILL. FILED FOR PROBATE.

The will of John Alfred Barnard, who died in Pasadena the 11th inst., husband of Julia Fletcher Barnard and father of Hilda Fletcher Barnard, Julia Barnard and Agnes Helena Barnard, has been filed in the Probate Court. The estate disposed of amounts to about $140,000. Of that sum $50,000 is personal property in the shape of stocks and bonds, but the major part of the estate is represented by a one-ninth interest in the estate of John Fisk Barnard, valued at $15,676.72; a one-third interest in the estate of his wife, Julia Fletcher Barnard, valued at $75,000, and a one-third interest in the estate of S. J. Fletcher, located in Indiana, the value of which is not given.

Ten thousand dollars is given to each of the testator's sisters, Mrs. Annie Barnard Wells, of Berkeley, and the Misses Helena and Gertrude Barnard, of Los Angeles. The balance is to be divided equally among the three minor children and Julia Fletcher Barnard, named above. No provision was made for the daughter of a former wife, Abbie Ingalls Barnard, who resides in Cincinnati. Miss Helena Barnard is named as guardian of the minor children and their estates, and a brother-in-law, Arthur G. Wells, is appointed executor of the will, to serve without bond.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

INCORPORATIONS. Articles of incorporation were filed yesterday by the Electric Corporation, capital stock, $50,000, incorporators, A. R. Fierce, J. H. Lowe and J. A. Craney, subscribed, $300; Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce, incorporators, A. R. Fraser, G. E. Brown, J. D. Blanchard, C. W. McLeod, J. B. Proctor, A. M. Montgomery, F. E. Bundy, Carl F. Schader, J. Raibley, subscribed, $25,000.

PLAINTIFF WINS. In the action brought by William Mitchell to secure a rescission of a contract entered into with Dr. H. B. Crocker, involving the trade of two lots in San Francisco, for 60 acres of land in Sonoma county, Judge Hervey found for the plaintiff. The defendant must return the San Francisco property and $500 that Mitchell paid in cash to secure the Sonoma acres. The court found that Dr. Crocker had misrepresented the value of the land to Mitchell.

SMALL ESTATE. A petition was filed in the Probate Court yesterday by Carrie F. Meyers, asking that she be appointed administrator of the estate of her husband, Frank M. Meyers, who died in this city October 20. The property is valued at $3000, consisting of realty for the most part.

BREAKS A COLD IN A FEW HOURS.

PROVES QUININE IS NEVER EFFECTIVE IN THE CURE OF A SEVERE COLD OR THE GRIPPE.

There would not be a soul here in Los Angeles suffer much with a bad cold or the Grippe if they would get this effective Compound and take it as directed. It is dispensed by the Pape's of Cincinnati, which means real curative merit.

Nothing else that you can take will break your cold or end grippe so promptly as a dose of Pape's Cold Compound every two hours until three consecutive doses are taken.

The most miserable neuralgia pains, headache, dullness, head and nose stuffed up, feverishness, sneezing, running of the nose, sore throat, mucous catarrhal discharges, soreness, stiffness, rheumatism pains and other distress begin to leave after the very first dose.

Pape's Cold Compound is the result of three years' research at a cost of more than fifty thousand dollars, and contains no quinine, which we have conclusively demonstrated is not effective in the treatment of colds or grippe.

Take this harmless Compound as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other medicine made anywhere else in the world, which will cure your cold or end Grippe misery as promptly and without any other assistance or bad after-effects as a 25-cent package of Pape's Cold Compound, which any druggist in the world can supply.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

DISCUSS CHANGE IN POLICE COURT.

UNIVERSITY BRANCH IN VERY PEACEFUL VICINITY.

Possibility That Justice Williams May Be Assigned to Civil and Criminal Cases in San Pedro at the Harbor—Work of Courts Grows With Census.

The possibility or probability, as some refer to it, of a change being made in the police judicial regime is being discussed at great length about the police courts in the City Jail building.

It is declared that the removal of Police Judge Williams court to the University Police Station is not affecting the remedy planned and that the latter court, though given jurisdiction over a very large section of the city is comparatively idle because of the law abiding character of the community.

The change discussed is the rumor that Justice Williams may be sent to San Pedro in January to sit in both civil and criminal cases which are under the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace and police judge.

If the change is made all cases now tried in the court at the University Station will be sent to the courts in the Central Police Station building. This, it is understood, would not clog the three courts in the latter building while it would ease the situation at San Pedro.

Williams said yesterday that he has heard nothing that indicates the change scheduled as a certainty.

The work of the police courts has increased in a steady proportion with the increase in population.

Between April 5 and November 19 there were 11,000 arrests by the local police. About seven years ago it required thirteen months for the same number to be accumulated.

Inebriates and beggars lead in the total, as is the case in all large cities.

In police court during the past week there were 402 offenders in court on misdemeanor charges and nine on felony charges. Considering the size of the city, the proportion shows a very good conditions of affairs, the police say.

Police Judge Frederickson will sit in all police cases originating during this week.

Police Court Brevities.

Police Judge Rose yesterday morning continued the cases against Eugene Phipps and C. T. Wells until December 12. The men are charged with plucking feathers from poultry before killing it.

BEAR IN MARKET.

A large cinnamon bear looks incongruous in an up-to-date market, but Bruin is a great attraction just now at the new plant of the Newmarket Company, Nos. 442-446 South Hill street. He was captured while stealing honey in the mountains back of Petaluma and will be presented to the Eastlake zoo. There are many innovations at the market. The main floor, covering 6000 square feet, is divided into spotless departments, a special feature being the wall refrigerator cases. Chilled air is used entirely throughout the market. The refrigerating department in the basement is the real feature. The proprietors, R. H. Jeffries and John C. Lenk, aim to have a plant not surpassed in the west.

CONSOLIDATION COMMISSION.

The Consolidation Commission met behind closed doors in the Mayor's office yesterday afternoon for organization. Those present were J. A. Anderson, S. A. Butler, W. B. Mathews, D. K. Edwards, L. A. Handley and S. C. Graham. Leslie R. Hewitt, the other member, was unable to attend. Mr. Anderson was elected chairman of the commission, and Mr. Handley, secretary, while Messrs. Anderson, Butler and Mathews were appointed a committee to block out work for the future meetings.

the Knabe

¶ The Knabe is designed to meet the requirements of every one who is ambitious to own "the best" in Pianos. Over seventy years of uninterrupted success in the making of pianos enables the House of Knabe to make such a broad statement and us to back it up. The Knabe fulfills the expectation of the most critical piano purchaser—not for to-day alone, but for every day of many, many years.

¶ The Knabe cost a few dollars more at the beginning, but that's the end of the expense.

THANKSGIVING is almost here. How about your dining-room? Is it in readiness? Is there not some needed piece of furniture you have long intended to add? Why not add it now, when it will contribute to the beauty of your dining-room for Thanksgiving and the other festive events that follow at this season?

There is no possible dining-room furniture need that cannot be satisfactorily and economically supplied at the "California"—and further, any piece of furniture you buy here, whatever its cost—will be distinctive—and will give you splendid service.

If you only need a single chair—or a dining table—it will pay you—from the standpoint of satisfaction and from the standpoint of dollars and cents—to come to the "California" to get it.

The display includes the best in mahogany and oak, in all the important periods. We show pedestal extension tables for as little as $15.00 and up to $250.00—and solid mahogany chairs, with full leather slip seat, for as little as $8.00 and on up to $50.00.

It is always a pleasure and pride for us to show visitors through our store—whether they buy or not. Welcome.

Both our windows this week show unusual designs in dining room furniture—one, a beautiful Sheraton set of mahogany, with its inlaid satinwood and white holly—the other, a solid mahogany set of the Georgian Period, showing a magnificent sideboard with its beautiful knife urns.

CHEAPER.

WILL TOBACCO REDEEM CHINA?

CIGARETTE HABIT IS GROWING IN THE EMPIRE.

Representative of Canton Company Says Orientals Show Hearty Appreciation of Moving Picture Exhibitions Used to Advertise Wares.

Tobacco in all its phases—opium, the Orient, the Chinese and climate were discussed yesterday by A. G. Bevans, who represents the British-American Tobacco Company at Canton, China. He is here on a short visit on his way to London.

The original home of Mr. Bevans was Honolulu, where he was born of American parents. Eight years ago he answered the call of the East and went to China. This is his second trip to the United States in that time.

"Selling cigarettes in China would be as pleasureable as it is profitable were it not for the enervating climate," he said. "That is why I long for your California climate. It invigorates one like good wine.

"Do the Chinese prefer American tobacco to their own? Well, rather. The largest cigarette factory in the world at Shanghai has a capacity of 2,000,000 cigarettes a day. Smoke? The whole nation smokes. It is a cheap pastime at that, for a packet of the best grade of cigarettes costs a Chinaman from 1 to 2 cents."

Mr. Bevans then launched into a theme which had the motion picture machine as a star attraction for the Chinese.

"We have adopted moving pictures to advertise our wares throughout China," he continued. "We have halls in every city of importance to which the Chinese are admitted free of charge. The best pictures are exhibited, and, of course, we give them a liberal sprinkling of scenes dealing with cigarettes.

"These pictures are educating the Orientals to a point where they are commencing to realize that good, wholesome American tobacco is a far more healthful plant production than opium. The Chinese take as keen interest in moving pictures as Americans do, and when a particularly good picture is thrown on the screen their applauding 'hao' is hearty.

"In my opinion the opium scourge has lost many devotees since the invasion of American tobacco. For decades opium has been China's curse. It has ruined more ambitions, blighted more lives, wrecked more homes than any war the world has ever known. The habit grows on a person. For example a Chinaman will commence by smoking an insignificant portion daily. Each year he will increase the portion until he is consuming three or four mace daily. Those entering the four-mace class usually are hopelessly indifferent to everything. They don't survive very long. The heaviest smokers, as a general rule, sleep during the day and remain awake at night to smoke."

Sidetracking back to California, Mr. Bevans said: "A wonderful State this. Wonderful, indeed, but sadly deficient in population. Why, a thickly-populated Chinese province the area of California contains at least 20,000,000 of people, I am sure. Too much acreage here in the hands of the few and not enough for deserving citizens. All China is composed of small farms, and the people are contented, if not rich.

"Your laboring men, by morally opposing the invasion of aliens to cultivate the soil, are exercising a dog-in-the-manger policy. A more practical method, in my opinion, would be to permit, say, 50,000 Chinese to enter the State as farm laborers, to be returned to China in three years. In a few years the entire State would be a bower of beauty, and the garden spot of the world."

BURDETTE AT THE BAT.

XXXIX.

You Never Can Tell.

"Call no man happy till he dies," runs a saying of the old-time Greeks. The ink is scarcely dry on the pages of an article in the Strand Magazine, a periodical published in the city of London, England. There is another town of the same name in Ohio, once locally famous as a horse market, which is not to be confused with the older and larger city in Great Britain. This magazine to which reference is made is an English magazine, in which the advertisements are interpaged with occasional bits of reading matter. This is an excellent method of binding a magazine, by the way, as it permits consecutive paging. It is very superior to the American advertising magazines which are consecutively paged after this manner, the story or essay running: 1, 2, 28, 33, second column; 42, first half column; 45, last half column; 52, column and half; 63, "to be continued."

One does not so much object to the outnumbering pages of advertising matter carried by the magazines devoted to that industry. As a rule the advertisements are much more striking and far more original than the other fiction in Harpy's, Nobody's, McLooney's, The Whirled Shirk and the others. And the illustrations so much more accurately and appropriately illumine the subject of the letter text, that the reader finds more amusement and edification in the advertisements than in the reading matter, so called because it has to be read to be misunderstood. Nobody quarrels with the ads. They are too clever to make enemies. Most of the magazines would be vastly improved if the pressure of advertising crowded out more of the fiction, most of the poetry, and all of the politics.

But as one was saying when one was interrupted in one's discourse by the carping criticism of one's one reader—who might be called The First Reader (joke,) there was an article in "The Scanned" concerning "The Ideal Home Life of Count Tolstoy." You may have read it. It divided space with "Bovril," "Nestle's Milk," and several sorts of foods until it made the literary pages of the magazine look like an Ammersmith bus. It so described the beauty, and the orderliness, and the sweet harmony and domestic perfection of the Tolstoy home that the reader actually skipped the next page, the one about "Talcum," "Bilson's Whisky," the "Bible Society's Publications" and "the American Bar," to come to the place where some explanation might be given why the angels, who must have seen the Tolstoy home, were yet content to remain in Heaven. Must be force of habit. The article doesn't say.

But before the article could be pirated in the American journals, the Count had deserted his wife and family, driving them almost to distraction with anxiety and sorrow.

Deranged, probably. He crawled away to die like a wounded animal, in a seclusion that was promptly discovered and flashed to the ends of the world by swift correspondence. A man whose ideals have always been high and pure, after the days of his rather tempestuous youth. A man of noble character, who tried to live his own teachings. But the one idea magnified itself into distorted proportions. There was nothing taught that was worthy of imitation, in the act of creeping away to die in some lonely hiding place, like a rat in a hole. That is not an act of character building. That couldn't make the world any better or happier. Much better it is that a man should quit this world at least with what dignity he can. Much better that he should die in his own home, his head pillowed in the loving arms of wife or child. A man isn't a brute. His children will not tear him to pieces, when they find that his hurt is mortal, as do the wolves of the pack, or the gentle deer. Had Count Tolstoy died at home, there would have been sorrow, deep and intense and sincere. But there would have been tenderness, and sweetness, and the beauty of affection, instead of half crazed apprehension, the hysteria of fear and nameless dread, heart-breaking longing to see the face of the dead, to caress the hands of the dying husband and father.

Should this prove to be the closing act in the drama of a noble and a most unselfish life, it will contradict all that has gone before it. The last act should be its climax of thoughtfulness and gentle consideration for others. But the curtain goes down on the poorest and meanest scene—unworthy of all that had gone before—a most disappointing exit.

Even poor old Falstaff, braggart and coward and guzzling drunkard that he was, made a dignified departure from the stage of this life—"a' made a finer end and went away as it had been any christom child," "for 'a' babbled of green fields." A man's death should crown his life. But Tolstoy passes on like a man fallen in a fit in the street, with a staring mob crowded around him—the whole world discussing this strange motive in the last hours of his life-chattering their theories and guesses, their praise and censure over his closing eyes. Men have been hanged with less publicity and greater decorum.

You can never tell what a living man may yet do to change your praise into censorious criticism. I think we would hand our friends the bouquets we design for them while they can themselves appreciate and enjoy them, rather than send them to the undertaker for artistic arrangement about the casket, but for the fear that they may not honor the gift. It is very disappointing to the mourner and lover, if the lamented should turn away from the beauty and perfume of rose and carnation, and ask for a chew of fine cut in preference.

I knew a fine old Virginian, an old line Whig, who was a great admirer of Tyler when that political Judas, not having yet revealed himself, was "Tippecanoe's" running mate on the Presidental ticket. Just at that time a son—the first born of a troop—was born to the enthusiastic Whig, and he named him "Tyler." Then came Tyler's party treason. Seven other sons and one daughter were born to the Old Liner as the years came and went. But he never forgot his lesson. His second son he named Noah. Then they came along, Abraham, Isaac, Moses, Joshua, Samuel and David, and the daughter he called Ruth. "They're safe enough," said the old Whig, when he named the youngest, "the newest of 'em's been in heaven 3000 years. They're not likely to go wrong now."

MANY FEATURES FOR GYMKHANA.

TWO-DAY FETE ARRANGED FOR JAPANESE SQUADRON.

Festivities Will Be Held at Ascot Park and Include Garden Party, Athletic Games, American and Native Dances—Great Banquet to Be Tendered Officers of Fleet.

The Japanese Association of Los Angeles has definitely decided to hold a two-day gymkhana at Ascot Park in honor of the officers, midshipmen and sailors of the Japanese training squadron which is due to arrive at San Pedro about the 29th inst., under the command of Rear Admiral Yeatsushiro.

The festivities will commence the morning following the arrival of the ships with a garden party, athletic games and American and Japanese dances. Local Japanese wrestling enthusiasts will measure strength with the champions of the fleet. An interesting part of each day's programme will be motorcycle races, and aeroplane efforts by local aviators.

Fully 6000 Japanese from Los Angeles and Southern California will attend the exercises at the park to aid in a welcome to their visiting countrymen. Admission will be by badge, which will be given to those who contribute financially to make the celebration a success.

The association will extend an invitation to the various city officials, judges, members of the Chamber of Commerce, and prominent citizens to attend. Otherwise the exercises will be confined to the Japanese residents of Southern California.

Apart from the main celebration at Ascot Park, the eighty Japanese and American members of the Japanese-American Fraternity of Los Angeles will banquet the principal officers of the squadron at one of the prominent hotels at a date to be announced. Rev. C. C. Pierce, president of the fraternity, is in charge of the invitations to the banquet, and will issue them on application to those desiring to attend.

The training squadron comprises the first-class cruisers Asama and Kasagi. Aboard are 149 graduates of the naval academy near Yokosuka, Japan. The Asama, flagship, is best known as the flagship of the Emperor of Japan, as it was on that vessel that he reviewed the entire Japanese fleet in Osaka Bay, close to Kobe, just prior to and after the war with Russia. Both ships participated in naval conflicts with the Russians, including the big sea fight off the island of Tshushima, May 27, 1905. The complement of the two ships is about a thousand men.

The squadron is expected to arrive in San Francisco Bay about next Wednesday and will remain there four days. From Los Angeles the warships will steam to Panama, stopping en route at the principal Mexican ports. After a short visit to South American ports on the Pacific the ships will proceed home probably by way of Australia.

SAYS THIS IS IDEAL PLACE.

Tourist Has Tried Them All and Los Angeles Attracts Him Like a Magnet.

John Bacon, retired department store owner of Louisville, and director in a number of street railways and other enterprises throughout the Middle West, is at the Alexandria for the winter season.

This is his eighth consecutive year here, and he is enjoying the prospects of another winter more than ever before, according to his statements.

"After coming here three years in succession, I decided it was time to change the routine. I went to Cuba. I stayed there from the middle of November until the beginning of January. The weather was very warm. Frequent rains made it tiresome.

"Mexico City seemed an attractive proposition, and I wended my way to that place. When I arrived there it was bitter cold. They claimed it was the coldest winter in thirty years. People froze to death among the poorer classes, for the reason that they had nothing but light cotton or linen clothing to wear. It took only a few days for me to decide that Los Angeles was the better place after all, and so I passed most of that winter right here in Southern California.

"I have traveled all over the world. After all is said, there is not one that in my estimation that comes up to Los Angeles.

"You have here hotels which cannot be surpassed in cuisine in any part of the world. You can hear the best preachers here, attend the lectures of the finest speakers in the country, see many of the late theatrical hits, says

MODEL FARM VILLAGES.

Government Working Out Experiments in Montana and Idaho of Much Interest.

In the newly irrigated regions of the West the government is laying out model farm villages, and the experiment has novel features which make it an interesting study. Intensive methods and the certainty of water make possible large crops on a small area, and the plan is to have the farmers and their families centralize in small communities within easy access of their outlying farms.

In the Sun River Valley, Montana, for instance, twenty towns are now being laid out six miles apart, so that no farmer, even if he lives in the most remote corner of his farm, is more than three miles from the school, church, stores and offices of the village. Moreover, the towns are connected by trolley lines, the power being supplied by the irrigation canals which furnish water and power for the farms.

There is a similar arrangement in Southern Idaho, where thousands of people have found homes and have prospered in a region which was absolutely desolate and uninhabited a few years ago.

This plan eliminates the loneliness and many disadvantages of farm life, where the homes are far apart and many miles from a city or village. Of course, it is possible only in a new country, where the town is arbitrarily located and made to order, and not the result of natural conditions and slow development.

GETS THE LIMIT.

UNION FAILS TO SAVE HIM.

Stevens Receives Maximum Prison Sentence.

Desperate Efforts Made to Prove an Alibi.

Court Strikes Hard Blow for Industrial Freedom.

Judge Davis, in Department Twelve, struck a telling blow for industrial freedom yesterday when he sentenced Charles F. Stevens, a union laborite striker, found guilty of a brutal assault on Edward C. Hoffman, at Latin Station, on the night of September 19, to two years in San Quentin. It was the limit of the law for the offense.

The attack on Hoffman was an incident of the strike of the iron workers in this city, the victim of the thug being a workman who had the courage to earn his bread at the Keystone Iron Works, as a free worker. The trials of Claude Mars and C. F. Grow, who are jointly charged with Stevens, with the commission of the assault, have been set for December 8.

The case of Stevens was fought to the utmost by the labor unions, attorneys George Appell and George F. Snyder having been brought from San Francisco to defend the prisoner. Every day during the trial the court room was filled with representatives of the labor forces, and it was no secret that they not only took the greatest interest in the proceedings, but assisted the accused by obtaining testimony in every way possible.

The assault on Hoffman, according to the testimony, was a most heartless one. The thugs left their victim on the ground for dead, taking to their heels toward Nadeau Station. Stevens, however, was recognized by a number of the citizens of Latin Station, and they all gave damning evidence against him, in spite of the threats of Stevens's union labor friends.

BEATEN SENSELESS.

Hoffman was knocked senseless, but he managed to pull himself together and was taken home where he lay between life and death for several days. A cruel wound on the top of his head had been inflicted by some instrument, the nature of which was not disclosed by the evidence.

The jury was only a short time coming to a unanimous conclusion affirming the guilt of Stevens. A motion for a new trial was immediately filed and argued at some length by Stevens's attorneys, and the proceedings yesterday was the ruling of the court on the motion and the passing of sentence.

The motion was denied by Judge Davis, and Stevens told to stand up and hear the judgment of the court. The subservient tool of the unions affected to be defiant, and the imposition of the extreme penalty of the law apparently had no effect upon him. He had been steeled to show absolute indifference, for his attorneys had given him no hope that a new trial would be granted.

In passing sentence Judge Davis said the crime down at Latin Station was an ugly one; that the attack upon Hoffman had been made without warning, that it was unprovoked, unjustifiable and vicious. It was a crime that, in the opinion of the court, justified the maximum penalty. Stevens was then sentenced to San Quentin for two years. He was asked if he ever followed any mechanical trade, and he replied stolidly that he was a machinist and skilled in general repair work.

Attorney Snyder gave notice of appeal from the judgment of the court, also that the defendant would ask for a writ of probable cause which would act as a stay of execution until the case has been disposed of in a higher court.

CAUSE OF ASSAULT.

The grounds of the motion for a new trial were alleged to be error in the admission of evidence; alleged misconduct on the part of the District Attorney, and that the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

Testimony had been given by Hoffman to the effect that a strike was on at the Keystone Iron Works where he was employed; that he was not a member of the Moulders Union; that he did not go out on a strike; that he had been solicited to do so, and that he had been asked to join the union. This testimony was introduced for the avowed purpose of showing the motive for the assault. On this subject the court said:

"I think the merit of this contention is doubtful, in view of the fact that it appears from the defendant's own testimony that the iron workers of Los Angeles were on strike; that he, the defendant, was a member of the union; that his sympathies were with the strikers; that he was at the strike headquarters three times on the day of this assault. But if the inadmissibility of the evidence objected to were conceded on the ground of its not having been properly connected, it is the court's view that before having a right to complain of its effect, the defendant should have asked that it be stricken out and taken from the consideration of the jury, which was not done in this case.

"The alleged misconduct urged as a ground for a new trial relates to statements of fact and avowals made by counsel for the people. The instances specified as to misconduct, if at all prejudicial, I am satisfied were sufficiently cured by the court's admonition given to the jury at the time, which prevented any repetition of the statements.

"Now, it is urged that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence in this case. The information charged the defendant with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. The jury by its verdict found the defendant to be guilty of the lesser and included offenses of assault with a deadly weapon. It would seem probable that the jury was unable to find evidence of murderous intent, and believed that the intent was of a criminal character, and to do to the prosecuting witness great bodily harm. At least the inference is that they were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the intent was to commit murder.

"It is claimed that the evidence failed to sustain the verdict in two particulars—first, that there is no evidence to show that the assault was made with a deadly weapon; second, that there is no evidence to show the presence of the defendant at the place where the assault was committed. The prosecuting witness, Hoffman, gave testimony concerning the manner and character of the attack which was made upon him; that blows were received, unexpectedly, suddenly, and concerning the nature of the wounds which were inflicted, and there was the testimony of Dr. Robinson, his careful description of the character of the wounds, and his expert opinion as to the kind of an instrument which could have produced such wounds. No instrument or weapon was introduced in evidence on the trial as the alleged deadly weapon referred to in the information.

"There was also the testimony of the witness, John Edward Hill, who was an eyewitness to the assault and who testified as to the character of the blows struck. In all of this there was certainly sufficient evidence from which the jury might, as reasonable men, applying their common knowledge, reach a conclusion that the assault, by whomsoever it was made, was made with a deadly weapon."

ALIBI DIDN'T WORK.

With reference to an alibi in behalf of Stevens the court said that Mrs. Gregg, Mrs. Mason, Miss Jones, Paul Mason and the defendant had declared that at the time of the attack Stevens was on West Jefferson street, in this city.

On the other hand, John E. Hill, Mrs. Mary Hill, William E. Hill, Beulah Hill, Isaac A. Johnson and Mrs. Minnie Sharp testified that they saw Stevens and recognized him on the night of September 19, and at Latin Station, where the assault was committed.

The court found that if the defendant was at Latin Station that night he had participated in the crime, whether he struck the blows or not.

The law provides that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they actually committed the offense charged or aided and abetted in its commission, are guilty as principals.

On this conflict of testimony Judge Davis said it was the duty of the jury to weigh the matters fully, and that body had determined that the testimony given by the witnesses at Latin Station as to the presence of the accused there was entitled to credence. The jury had passed upon that conflict and decided it against the defendant.

TRAFFIC RECORD.

FREIGHT RATES LOWER HERE.

RAILROADS MOVE FARTHER FOR LESS MONEY.

Earnings Have Not Kept Pace With the Increased Cost of Foodstuffs and the Higher Prices Paid for Labor, According to Federal Statistics.

Under regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads of this country transport freight for a greater distance at a less rate than any railroad in any country.

"Statistics from the Federal Bureau of Labor show that living expenses increased 11 per cent. in the year of 1909 alone," said a railroad man last night. "This same bureau furnishes information to the effect that in the past ten years the increase in pay in all classes of labor in the industrial world and on railroads has amounted to only 12 per cent., or 1 per cent. more than the cost of living increased in the year of 1909 alone.

"The railroads have been regulated to this extent, as shown from the Interstate Commerce Commission records. Since 1883 to 1910 their compensation has been reduced from 2.43 cents to 2.01 cents for carrying a passenger one mile, and from 1.22 cents to .77 cents for hauling a ton of freight one mile, or a reduction of about 40 per cent., which means that our railroads are hauling all traffic 40 per cent. cheaper than is being done in any other country on the face of the earth estimated in value of American money.

"The Federal Bureau of Information shows the following figures as increases for the years 1900 to 1908:

	P. C.
Foodstuffs	20.6
Fuel and lighting	30.8
Metals and implements	25.4
Clothing	16.0
Lumber and building material	22.1

Or all combined showing an increase of 22.8 per cent.

"The average charge for moving a ton of freight one mile, based on American currency, is:

	Cts.
In Great Britain	2 1-3
In France	1½
In Germany	1 1-3
In the United States	¾

"These figures cannot be disputed.

"England moves a ton of freight forty-three miles for one dollar; France, sixty-six miles; Germany, seventy-five miles; the United States, 132 miles.

"You can take the tariff sheets of Oklahoma alone, which were revised by the Oklahoma Corporation Commission, and put into effect in 1908, and which were used for political purposes by being sown broadcast. Take the reduction in rates on coal, lumber, machinery, building material of all kinds, foodstuffs, etc., which were reduced to the extent of taking $5,000,000 away from the earnings of the railroads and published as having been saved to the people."

Traffic Notes.

Hugh McPhee, district commercial superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company here, left yesterday for a tour of inspection of the offices in his district. Mr. McPhee is in charge of the third district, which includes Southern California, part of Nevada and Arizona.

Fred P. Gregson, manager of the Wholesalers' Board of Trade, will be the speaker at the semi-monthly luncheon of the Los Angeles Traffic Association at the Angelus Hotel tomorrow.

The Salt Lake railroad has printed an attractive menu card for the Thanksgiving dinner to be served on the dning cars Thursday.

"The Land of Irrigation" is the title of an unique booklet picturing some of the productive valleys of the Rockies, issued by the Denver & Rio Grande railroad.

Former Senator Clark, who has been in Los Angeles on a semi-annual tour of inspection of the Salt Lake railroad, has gone to Jerome to inspect his copper properties at that place.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

The result of the graded school system is described by a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle as the herding of children into large classes whence they are advanced at infrequent periods into large groups. "This common system of grading, class teaching and promotion appears to work easily and naturally as an organization and it unquestionably obtains a good measure of results. It is not wholly pernicious. It is best to grade children and most effective to teach them in grades. Children, too, must be advanced from grade to grade.

"But mass teaching and mass promotions have led to the crushing out of the individual. The individual child has been ignored largely because our usual plan of school organization, following the 'plan of least resistance,' has made it extremely difficult to properly place the individual. Our present system has directly hindered self-initiative, self-mastery, courage of conviction and individual independence and forcefulness. The child has been made to feel that he must spend a certain time in school—serve a sentence, as it were. Somehow, each little child finds himself caught in a machine. He must crank with the others. He should be free to achieve at will. He should be promoted when he is ready for it, and not be compelled to go along with others either faster or slower than himself."

The Philadelphia Teachers' Association was lately discussing the bad boy, what it is that makes him bad and how to cure him of his badness, says the Public Ledger of that city. It was declared to be a large question, but the modern school teacher must have faith and patience surpassing those of the ancient philosopher, for she—it is generally a woman—has made the modern schoolboy generally respectful, sensible of the value of an education, and, on the whole, something more than the sluggish, dullard, laggard and truant that he used to be. There are still plenty of bad boys in school and out, but there are not so many of them as there formerly were. As one of the speakers pointed out, it is easy enough to expel a bad boy from a school, but that is not exactly what the school is for. It is the business of the school, not to make cherubim and seraphim out of incipient angels, but to make good boys out of unlovely, unpromising children.

Mathematicians have seen a great light! They agreed recently that calculus and mensuration, the greatest common denominator, square root and complex fractions and a few of the other brain-twisting tortures of the course in arithmetic might as well be dumped into oblivion, so far as the public school child is concerned, says the Philadelphia North American. At a meeting of the Philadelphia section of teachers of mathematics of the Middle States and Maryland, not one protesting voice was raised against Superintendent Brumbaugh's new simplified course in arithmetic. The only criticism was that it was not simple enough, and that while the city's educators were about it they might as well get rid of wall papering problems and cut out the everlasting type of example that begins drearily.

"How many yards of carpet will it take?" The 500 teachers who crowded the auditorium heaved a concerted sigh of relief when Dr. Brumbaugh announced the demise of the least common multiple and the greatest common denominator. "Too many teachers in this city and all over the State and country," he said, "have been riding an arithmetic hobby and cramming it down pupils' throats in season and out of season. Now arithmetic is only useful as it will apply to the child's future life. What is the use of teaching a boy who is going into a mill at fourteen how to find the square root or calculate in complex fractions? What he needs is a working knowledge of the elements of arithmetic and an insight into current industrial activities. The new course aims to do this. It has done away with dead subjects, and simplifies the statement of problems. It has shifted the work upward in the grades, so that the children will not learn like parrots, but will be old enough to reason out their examples."

Theological schools do not turn out ready made preachers, but young men who are trained to become preachers. Medical schools do not turn out physicians, but young men who will in time become physicians. The skilled surgeon is not the product of a college of surgery, but of education plus experience. The lawyer learns more out of college than he learns in college. Schools of journalism will not make journalists, but there is no reason why they should not be increasingly useful in training young men who have a natural aptitude for newspaper work, says Harry Watterson in the Louisville Courier-Journal. The most valuable equipment they can give the student is knowledge of subjects with which the newspaper man must deal after graduation from the ranks.

PARTY FOR THE CHILDREN.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the second annual party to be given the children of St. Elizabeth's Day Nursery have issued a request to their friends and patrons that when they are ordering their Thanksgiving supplies they leave a small order for foods, fruits and so on to be sent as a donation to the nursery at No. 125 North Anderson street. The committee plans to give a Thanksgiving party to their children and the children of the neighborhood on Thursday afternoon and supplies are earnestly requested.

...UNION PICKETS ...ALLY ATTACK WORKMAN.

...where they took a car. In vain the men yelled for the conductor to stop.

The brutal assault was reported to the police, and Capt. Bradish has sent out a general order to division commanders to arrest the men. An excellent description of each has been furnished the officers.

Cavanaugh, though badly battered, refused to go home, or to the Receiving Hospital for treatment. After his injuries had been attended by the company physician, he reported for duty.

According to the officials of the Lord Motor Car Company, the union loafers who assaulted Cavanaugh have been performing picket duty in front of the plant since the machinists' strike was begun, six months ago. Frequently the police have been called to the place, but no arrests were made. Of late the unionists have become particularly abusive to the employees of the Lord company, but, with the exception of the assault on Cavanaugh, they have confined their activities to threats and invectives.

About a third of the population of Chinatown is queueless at the present time, including nearly all the American-born Chinese. However, the Chinese say that queues are destined to go, and it is but the matter of a few months when the sight of a Chinaman wearing an unsightly pigtail will be both an object of derision and interest to visiting tourists in Chinatown.

LETTERS TO THE TIMES.

[The Times freely publishes the views of correspondents without holding itself responsible for writers' opinions. Be brief, write plainly, state clearly. The space of 250 words, on the average, is sufficient for the point. Well-written letters are liable to be declined merely on account of their length.]

Against Shirkers.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 19.—[To the Editor of the Times:] It seems to me that most of the people who up-hold socialism and organized labor have an entirely one-sided view of social welfare. They are constantly complaining about the low wages they receive; the high cost of living; and that the rich are getting richer and the poor poorer. They don't stop to consider the other side of the question and notice what a tremendous amount of capital has been required to develop the country and build railroads, factories, and commercial, financial, and public institutions of all kinds that are the backbone of all our cites—at the rate we have been building them during the past one or two generations.

I do not believe that any form of socialism could have been organized under which civilization would have advanced and our material wealth increased at the rate it has during the past half century, or at the rate we are expanding at the present time. I believe that the large profits of some of the corporations, and the successful business manipulations of some of our great financiers have been a necessary means of taxing the public for public improvement or for acquiring the capital necessary for our rapid expansion.

Certain socialists have figured it out that the average wage earner receives in payment for his work only a small percentage of what he is producing and I consider this one of the solutions to our expansion. As he cannot consume what he does not receive the surplus is added to our increasing wealth.

As a rule the people who are doing most of the complaining about social conditions or who are really in poverty are not those who are receiving the least pay for their labor but those who are addicted to strong drink or other dissipation or who spend too much for unnecessary luxuries an dpleasures.

I have worked with men who were only working to draw their salary without ever thinking whether or not they were producing for their employer an amount equal in value to their pay, and I have even met some who were doing as little as they could for fear they would work themselves or their fellow work-men out of a job and who were opposed to me because I did not do enough "shirking." Then again others would complain about modern machinery and foreign labor cheating the working people out of their jobs and cutting down wages, and at the same time they were complaining about the high cost of living.

I was one of the laborers at the Philippine Reservation of the St. Louis Exposition during the spring and summer of 1904 and as it was government work most of the laborers including bosses were working to drain the treasury and make the job last rather than to get the work done, and this has led me to believe that there is more or less of this spirit connected with most government work that is not let by contract and for this reason and other surplus red tape it would be unwise to have the government run our railroad systems, our large factories and other business and financial institutions.

May The Times prosper in the stand you are taking against organized labor.

Our beloved soldiers who lost their lives in the explosion of the battleship Maine in the harbor of Havana some years ago proved to be martyrs for the freedom of Cuba, and it is my belief and earnest prayer that your innocent men who lost their lives in the Times Building disaster a few weeks ago may not have been lost in vain, but that the hand of Providence will make them martyrs for our freedom from the tyranny of labor bosses.

PICK THE CHOICE BIRDS.

Pigeon Thieves Despoiling the Lofts of Fanciers in West and Southwest Parts of City.

Thieves who worm their way into pigeon lofts at night, and by the flare of pocket electric lamps, select the choicest birds for their bags, have been giving no end of trouble to fanciers and the police. Some of these birds have been found and identified by their owners, in the ice boxes of local meat and game jobbers, while others have been sold to suburban bird fanciers.

A total of ninety birds were stolen from H. R. Montague's loft, No. 2907 Harvard boulevard, and R. Brown's, No. 1007 Wall street, within the past week. The birds were all of fancy breeds, among the number being pouters, fantails, homers, hens and ruffle necks. Not one common bird was taken from either loft.

Aside from the above, several bird robberies were reported to the police within the past week by Sunset boulevard fanciers. These, however, lost only ten or twelve birds each.

It was at first thought that the thefts had been committed by boys, but this was disproved by footprints found nea rthe entrance to the Montague loft. Detective Murray, who has been investigating, says he has an excellent clew.

DOESN'T FAVOR LONG BEACH.

Federal Board of Engineers Reports Adversely Regarding Harbor Aid From the Government.

The Federal Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors does not look with favor on the proposition of giving government assistance toward improving Long Beach Harbor, according to a report which is made public by Capt. W. P. Stokey, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A. An examination has been made in compliance with provisions of the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910.

The board desires to get all of the available information concerning the harbor and will give oral hearings to those who desire to give their views on the subject.

The reasons why Long Beach is not considered as a good place for establishing a port follows:

"Long Beach harbor is an artificial waterway as yet and but partially completed, being constructed at private or corporate expense as a part of a commercial enterprise and land development scheme. The project is as yet apparently in its infancy. No waterborne commerce has been created and none is possible under existing conditions.

"The general government has for years been engaged in the construction of a deep water port at Los Angeles harbor, but four miles distant, and the last river and harbor act adopted two projects involving the expenditure of large sums for extending the facilities, with a view to meeting present and reasonably prospective demands of commerce at this locality.

"The area available for extension in Los Angeles harbor is practically limitless. The board does not see the necessity of an additional port four miles from one already established at great expense, and it believes that resulting benefits to general commerce and navigation would not justify the United States in undertaking this work.

"DAD" MOULTON IN DANGER.

Veteran Stanford Trainer Is Victim of Typhoid Fever—Students Are Alarmed.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Nov. 18.—"Dad" Moulton, the veteran athletic trainer at Stanford, is seriously ill with typhoid fever. He is in bad shape and while it is expected that he will not succumb to the disease much alarm is felt.

"Dad" has been the Cardinal trainer for twelve years. He was unable to attend the intercollegiate football game last Saturday. It was the first athletic contest at which he has not been present to look after the men since he took charge of the athletic training here.

Before becoming a trainer, Moulton was one of the best professional foot racers in the country. He competed in more than 300 match races without losing an event.

YOUNG DOGS AND THEIR OLD TRICKS.

[Boys' World:] I was lounging in the dressing room of Burmeister, whose trained dogs and cats have been seen by thousands of boys of the United States. Burmeister is a German, and he has a pleasant home outside of the city of Berlin, where in the kennels more than 200 dogs of all ages and breeds are in constant training for the show work. Then there are the "dog pensioners," who are the animals grown old and useless in the work.

Burmeister will not kill them. They have been faithful to him. Therefore he pensions them off to a comfortable bed, three meals a day, and no work. When he comes home from his long trips which take him to every part of the civilized world, these retired animals make the greatest noise in welcoming him.

I asked Burmeister to talk to me about the home training of dogs to do the little tricks that make them interesting, and this is what he said:

"I knew the great Mr. Barnum when I was a boy and beginning my animal training work. I had had some experience in Germany, but my most effective early work was done here. Mr. Barnum was watching me one day while I tried to break a fox puppy to jump a stick.

"The dog became confused, and would not obey me. I suddenly gave it a hard slap, and then it became altogether unmanageable, and I had to give up for that day. Mr. Barnum, noticing my temper, turned to me and said:

"'You'll make more headway with patience and kindness. It may sometimes be as necessary to strike an animal as a child, but I think, in the long run, patience and kindness accomplish the most.'

"Of course, I remembered this, and as I grew older I plainly saw that all animate life is best controlled by those two virtues. I have whipped animals and I still whip them, but the occasions are rare. They must do something very wrong before I will strike them or even raise my voice. But when I do whip, it is very severe, so that they will not forget and I may not have to repeat the punishment.

"The younger a dog is you wish to train, the better he will learn. The saying is true that you cannot teach an old dog new tricks. Fox terriers, collies, ferrets, poodles and young Newfoundlands take the most naturally to trick work. The very big dogs, like the boar and bloodhounds, are not intelligent in this work, and the bulldogs, as a rule, are not fit for it.

"When you begin training a dog, remember these two important points about him:

"He can carry only one idea at a time in his brain, or whatever you choose to call it.

"He grows tired quickly, and his ability to be trained may be destroyed altogether.

"Therefore, in training give the puppy just one thing to think about at a time. Suppose you wish to teach him to sit up on his haunches and droop his paws so that he seems to be begging. Set him in the position you desire, and say, 'Sit up.' Always repeat the words just so. Do not say one time, 'Sit up,' and the next time 'Set up,' and then 'Up.' That will mix him badly, for dogs learn largely through sound. It is the familiar sound of 'Sit up,' and not the words, that finally causes him to obey.

"Ten minutes' practice of this exercise is sufficient with him for one day. When it is over, do not give him a different exercise, but let him go about his play. The next day set him up again and repeat the phrase and do that again the third day and the fourth and the fifth. Do not try to have him sit up without your placing him in position, but put him up yourself, and when he does not obey, do it over and over again.

"When they have learned one trick so they do it without hesitation, give them another—like shaking hands with the right paw, then the left paw, then both. Be patient about this. Lift the paw up at the same time saying, 'Shake hands.' If it is the left paw they are to give, say, 'Shake again,' and if it is both paws, say, 'A good shake.' Gradually the dog will come to understand what command refers to the right paw, what to the left, and what to both. If he makes a mistake, correct him and start over again. Never let a mistake on his part go unnoticed, and always make the training work short in time each day, so that he is not bewildered.

"So in teaching him to jump a stick to speak, to jump through the arms, to sit upright on your shoulder, to stand upright on his forepaws, to jump through a hoop, and so forth, follow the same process and give him a separate command for each, and never vary the language of that command. If 'One' means to stand on his head—I have two dogs that will—always say 'one' when you wish that trick done. If 'two' means roll over, always use that command.

"Your dog wil gradually respond to the training and become a very interesting playmate. But you must be slow in everything you do with him. He is easily mixed up.

"The best trick fox terrier I have is valued at $1000, and he can point out the letters in the alphabet and find hidden things if he can smell them before they are put away. I spent two years on his education—from ten to twenty minutes every day. He was very stupid until he had been at it six months, and then of a sudden his memory began to work, and he learned all that a dog can learn.

"Very few of my ordinary trick dogs have less than six months spent on their education. In all of them I inspire confidence. I try to show them that if they are honest with me I will be honest with them, and that if they do serious wrong, they will be punished. Like boys that try to do right, they come to understand this, and after that their training is only a matter of patience and kindness. Few dogs ever forget a kind act, and I have met few that ever forget an unkind or treacherous act."

DEVELOPING NEW BERRIES.

Agricultural Department Finds Blackberries Can Be Made With Flavor of the Huckleberry.

While the Department of Agriculture has not yet raised any blueberries the size of tomatoes, it has them approaching cherries in size, and has the common or garden gooseberry easily eclipsed, says the Washington Star.

The trouble with the blueberry, which is a close connection of the huckleberry of this region, is that it has heretofore been misunderstood. What it needs is an acid soil, like that in a good many of the worn-out farms around Washington. These farms need to be heavily limed before they will grow ordinary crops, but the blueberry revels in the sort of soil that would make fodder corn get up and move into an adjoining county.

The department has been experimenting with blueberries recently and finds that they can be grown so that they have all the attractive flavor of the huckleberry and with only a few seed. The matter of seed has prevented the huckleberry from becoming popular. Even people who like its flavor do not want to exploit themselves as human stone crushers and the seeds are too much in evidence even to make a satisfactory pie. But the blueberry, if properly planted and trained, develops all the desirable qualities of the huckleberry with none of its disadvantages.

It has been found that the berry has a satisfactory range from North Carolina to Nova Scotia, and that if culled and properly packed it will ship well and can be kept on the Washington market from May until November. Just how much money it will produce to the acre depends on how the buyers have been trained to pay for it. The department has just issued a bulletin telling how to plant and care for the berry.

"FLOWER CITY" Gasoline Traction Engines

We desire to call the attention of the progressive rancher to this wonderful farm tractor which reduces the cost of plowing over one-half. Read this testimonial and see what this engine is doing in this vicinity:

S. DUPUY,
Dealer in Hay.

ALHAMBRA, CAL., Nov. 18, 1910.

Messrs. HAWLEY, KING & CO., Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:—The 40 Horsepower FLOUR CITY Engine is running satisfactorily, pulling twenty-four (24) 8-inch Stockton Bottoms, and twenty feet of spike-teeth harrows.

Yours very truly,
S. DUPUY.

Other testimonials for your inspection:

We have these engines in two sizes, 30 and 40 H. P. One of our 30 H. P. we shipped to Calistoga climbed 30 per cent. grades easily.

Remember, you can burn either gasoline or distillate.

An expert engine man, Mr. Menzie, a direct representative from the factory, is with us. Call and talk with him and learn what a saving you can make on the ranch.

DO IT NOW! Orders received at this time will be filled at factory price, Los Angeles delivery.

Bear in mind that you can use this engine not only for plowing, but for road hauling, threshing beans and grain, and for operating any other ranch machinery.

OVERWHELMING.

NEVER SUCH GORGEOUS RECEPTION GIVEN TO AMERICANS BY CHINESE.

Wonderful Experiences of the Chamber of Commerce Commissioners in the Flowery Kingdom — Miles of Lanterns and Unprecedented Turmoil of Festivities. Personal Triumph of President Booth of Los Angeles.

BY LEWIS R. FREEMAN.

[Special Correspondent of The Times with Pacific Coast Chamber of Commerce Commission.]

EN VOYAGE CHEFOO TO FOOCHOW, STEAMER "HSIN-MING," November, 1910.—I have some hazy recollection of a time when it was my intention to write of the trip of the Commercial Commission, move by move and "function by function," setting down in black and white vivid word pictures of the events of our visit as they passed before our eyes. I recall writing some first impressions on the evening of our arrival in Shanghai, and remember still the regret with which I was compelled to forego a description of our first garden party to dress for our first Chinese dinner. And the description of that dinner—our first experience of bird's nest soup, shark's fins, bamboo shoots, lotus nuts, frog's eggs and the dozen other delicacies which years of fancy had conjured into almost palpable realities—there is some recollection of drowsily punched typewriter keys that got in each other's way until the page looked like a transcription from the Chinese menu itself or—I hadn't seen one at the time to make the comparison—a rubbing from the tomb of the Mings. Samshu, fukien, California wines, French cordials, Chinese liqueurs, Japanese and German mineral waters, moluten fire and vitrol, nectar and ambrosia by turns, I'm sure the typewriter didn't go to that dinner; which makes the way it acted all the more reprehensible.

That was the swan song of our correspondence anthem, for the swelling crest of the wave of the astounding welcome that had been prepared by the Chinese broke full upon us the next day and we have tossed upon the rising bosom of it ever since. It was only this morning, a month after our arrival in Shanghai, that it occurred to me that I was even the possessor of a typewriter; and as for cameras, there may have been some such instruments of distraction in my luggage, but just what town of the back trail that luggage is reposing in at the present moment there is no way of knowing. Certain it is that they have not been used. Baggage litters the back trail like the bleaching bones of a caravan across a desert, and away back at the other end of it lies Shanghai; let us see what stands out from the breathless confusion of that first wild week in Shanghai.

The plans of the entertainment had been long in the laying, and the general scheme called for mornings of visits to industrial plants, afternoons of garden parties and receptions and evenings of banquets or theater parties, all of these, with the exception of a single reception by the Consul and the American Association, under the entire direction of the Chinese. Practically every carriage and automobile in the city had been chartered for the week, and in these, with occasional special cars, tugs, launches and house-boats, we scurried from the close of our 9 o'clock conference in the morning until well after midnight of each day, and always from one to three hours behind hand.

A MAD RUSH.

The schedules were Teutonic in their apparent exactness on paper and Irish in their contradictions in practice. An hour would be allowed to visit a silk filature which it required an hour to reach, a half-hour to tour, and a half-hour of toasting, lunching and speechmaking in its lacquered reception-room. Then a mad rush in a scattered, mile-long procession of tooting autos, or swaying coaches with shouting coachmen and footmen, to the next place and repeat, with the loss of another hour. Patient and smiling our hosts would greet us under a bower of Chinese and American flags and assure us that they had not been incommoded in the least by the delay, and then proceed to put us another hour down on the schedule, and so on it would go, straight on through the noon hour until about 4 in the afternoon, when, bedraggled and dropping, but bulging with facts and figures bearing on the wonders seen, we would drop into the hotel for a five-minute shift into afternoon dress for the garden party which had been scheduled from 2:30 to 4:30, and which we would reach half an hour after it should have been over, and leave about the time of the reception at a mission school the schedule called for the closing or the Chinese Y.M.C.A. The "reception" has an hour's programme of music and addresses in its assembly-room, with perhaps a grand finale of "stunts" in the gymnasium, and from there we get away in time for a shift to evening clothes and an arrival at a press banquet, but an hour or so late. Each function took its toll of an hour or more from the one following, while the evening affair took it all out with one big bite into our sleep at the end of the night.

Of the industrial plants themselves this is hardly a propitious time or place to write, though I may say that no plant visited but was a never-ending source of a surprise in its completeness, modernity and general efficiency. We found the latest British, American and German machinery operated by Chinese and, save in a few scattered instances, under Chinese supervision, turning out high grade commodities—flour, paper, cotton cloth, silk—at costs which in most cases were but fractions of the expense necessary to produce similar articles in other countries. Unskilled laborers we found were paid at an average of 10 cents, gold, a day, while skilled laborers of the class of machinists, and even foremen, were paid from 25 to 50 cents a day. With wages rather less than 10 per cent. of those in Europe and from 7 to 8 per cent. of those in America, with raw materials in most instances considerably cheaper, and still allowing two Chinese as necessary to do the work of one foreigner, the commanding advantage of modern industrial undertakings in China will be apparent. As a matter of fact, where there is occasion for it, the Chinaman will come pretty near to performing the same work as the foreigner, and while the cost of living must necessarily increase with the growth of foreign wants, yet this increase cannot in any event be sufficient to neutralize the advantage of Chinese over foreign labor. At the present time the manufacture in China of such articles as cotton cloths, flour, steel and the like is not sufficient to supply the home market, though the increase from year to year is steadily cutting down the import of those commodities from foreign countries. The point which has most interested the commission, however, has been as to what time will elapse before the Chinese manufacturers, after supplying home wants, will begin to be thrown upon the world's markets. We have seen enough to know that this is no idle dream of the theorist or visionary, but a consummation, subject only to the limiting influences of international or internal complications, as assured as the next rising of the sun.

MOST WONDERFUL DINNER.

From this dive to the depths of Chinese economics I rise for air and a glimpse of the higher flung rocks of Shanghai happenings. Notable among these against the skyline of memory looms the Chinese dinner at Chang Su Ho's gardens given by the Chinese Chamber of Commerce. Outside of a confused blaze of color and lights, and a blended blare of Chinese and foreign music, my recollection of this, the greatest dinner ever given to foreigners in Shanghai, is somewhat like the description given by Col. North, of Chilean nitrate fame, of a new picture which he had bought for his gallery. The canvas was twelve feet long by eight feet wide and cost £2000 sterling, he told a friend; but what the meaning of the picture was he was quite at a loss to say. I remember that there were two miles of specially-made lanterns—crossed American and Chinese flags, with the word "Welcome" in both languages, painted upon oiled silk, that there were 5000 yards of colored silks woven into fanciful designs among the lacquered galleries of the lofty hall; that $4000 were spent for new costumes for the actors who strutted through a dozen classic Chinese plays during the half-night long course of the dinner; that the flowers cost $2000, the shark's fins $3 a plate and the bird's nest soup $5. I recall all of these things, but as to what they mean I am at considerable of a loss to say. Was it—with all that had gone before and has happened since—the perfunctory hospitality of a people which, especially in the entertainment of guests, has no conception of doing things by halves; was it a political play for American friendship, the strings of which were skilfully laid and pulled from Peking; was it a spontaneous outburst of friendliness on the part of the Chinese people for the visitors from the only nation that has pursued a disinterested policy in its relations with them?

It is possible that in time the good Col. North found out what his picture meant, though doubtless he took no more pleasure or pride in it than before enlightenment came; possibly, also, time may bring enlightenment to the commission as to why its reception in China has been of a nature that has led both Chinese and foreigners to agree that nothing to compare with it has been known in the history of the Middle Kingdom. Probably something of all three of the conjectures I have enumerated have been operative in bringing this reception about, but with the memory of the friendly faces, not only at banquets and receptions, but along the streets as well, still floating clear upon my retina, I cannot but attribute it to the last one, a spontaneous outburst of friendliness for the visitors of the nation which, more than any other, has proved China's truest friend in the past and bids fair to remain such during the trying years that are to come.

Our old friend, His Excellency Wu Ting Fang, for many years Chinese minister to America, made the address of welcome at the Chang So Ho dinner in the same quaintly humorous vein that made him one of the most sought-after after-dinner speakers in Washington during his sojourn in Washington. He was followed by Consul-General Wilder in what struck me as being the best speech I ever heard delivered by an American Consul, and what has been generally agreed to be one of the strongest and most forceful utterances of the entire trip. One or two notes from Dr. Wilder's speech which I chance to have by me at this time seem to be worth appending here.

DR. WILDER'S SPEECH.

"Much has been said of the awakening of modern China and everybody rejoices in the movement. Railways are being biult, mines opened, the que is doomed, the feet of the Chinese ladies are soon to be as pretty as their hands. You can now get factory cinders in your eyes in Shanghai as in Pittsburg, death by automobile is as easy, and wages are rising to a point where one must pay $1.25 a week for a cook who may have a Rooseveltian family to support.

"This mission may be regarded as two-fold. Its primary object is promotion of trade between the two countries. There has been a good deal of misinformation regarding China as a market. Those who have multiplied the population of China, 4,000,000 by one dollar or ten dollars, as a fair estimate of what she should consume of our products of field and factory need to visit the country. This empire is so equipped that she could close her doors and find all she needs in her own domains. Moreover she has the material and the capacity ultimately to make the new things she will need under the desires of the newer civilization. But while the dreams of trade enthusiasts may thus be punctured, it remains true that in equipping herself for the new life that awaits her, China is a market in an increasing way, and it is honorable and laudable in business men of all countries to offer what they have and take away what China has of surplus of her own products. The friendly relations between not only the two countries in a political way but between Chinese and Americans and Chinese as men as well are an asset that we can properly appreciate. It is sometimes called a peculiar relation and we are credited with a peculiar hold on the Chinese. It is explained by the fact that our national policy safeguarded us from interference, and our prosperity enabled us to be generous. Moreover, Chinese came to us for education who have since become influential. Most important, however, the democracy of spirit that characterizes both peoples gives us a common denominator; to every Chinese has been extended that cordial, kind, unaffected attitude, which Americans learn from home, parents and the genius of the republic to extend to all men.

"Some one has said 'let me write the songs of a country and I care not who writes its history.' So in view of the splendid national spectacle of a hundred select Chinese youths going to the United States for their education, for their views of government, social organization and of what constitutes true manhood, one might say 'Let me educate the viceroys, the governors, the leaders and thinkers of China, and I care not who builds her railroads, or digs her mines or has the ear of the throne.' The power of a clock lies in the mainspring; the control of an empire lies in those who think—and on such America is leaving and has left the mark of the forces and influences that have made the word "America" revered among nations. Greater than the tradal significance of this significance is the benefits it promises a civilization in promoting sentiments of mutual esteem, willingness to listen, give and receive, earnestness in striving for better national life and better men. The United States would have China believe—her ruler, her people—that we seek not yours but you; that the outreach of our nation is not merely to force railway equipment and the staples of life on this great population, but in response to the best that is in our people to set up the highest comity—to exchange not only wares but ideas, to bring not only cargoes but principles, to work together not only to enrich each other but to further civilization—to open the doors for every child, to put foundations under the home and state, and to gladden the hearts of men."

PRESIDENT BOOTH.

President Willis T. Booth's speech on this occasion was the first of four—the last being two nights ago in Chefoo—each one of which, while delivered at widely separated points, has been a striking example of diplomacy, good sense and fitness unto the occasion which called it forth. I shall endeavor in a later letter to make brief note of the really remarkable personal triumph of Mr. Booth in his conduct of the commission under conditions which for many reasons, but especially in paucity of precedent, have been singularly trying.

GOT THE FULL FLAVOR.

Sampled Cocktails Till He Found One Which Contained the Requisite Strength.

Edgar Selwyn, the actor-playwright, was dining at the Cafe Madrid the other day when the proprietor came to his table, according to the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. "I want to thank you for having referred to my restaurant in your latest play," said George Rector. "In what manner can I reciprocate, Mr. Selwyn?" Mr. Selwyn said that he might name a cocktail for Mrs. Selwyn—who is Margaret Mayo in playwriting ranks. "Not being an expert on cocktails," said he, "I'll send my brother Mike in to sample it."

So Mr. Rector devoted his skilled attention to the work of building a new gargle. Mr. Simon—Selwyn's name was Simon before he went on the stage—proved uncommonly hard to suit. Mr. Rector would toss together a new collection of acids and Mr. Simon would come in, drink the mixture wisely, head on one side.

"Let me try another," he would say, "I don't quite make that." So the patient Mr. Rector would scramble some more liquor, and Mr. Simon, after painstaking investigation, would finally go out giggling to himself, but declaring that Rector had not precisely caught the knack of it yet. Until the other night Mr. Simon came in jauntily. Mr. Rector hailed him.

"I have got it at last, Mike," said he. "This is the most wonderful cocktail that was ever put together. Try it." Mr. Simon tried it. A moment later Mr. Simon robbed a water glass of all its ice and went about with his mouth open, panting for fresh air. By and by he sat him down and watched Broadway through the window with eyes dull and glazed. His hand went to an aching forehead.

"Try another, Mike," said the malicious Mr. Rector. "Maybe you didn't get the full flavor."

"The devil I didn't," said Mr. Simon, crossly, as he went out.

W.B. Reduso CORSETS

J. J. HAGGARTY

IT is not the actual SALE of goods that counts most in upholding and upbuilding our reputation. It is the quality that is in the goods, and that produces the lasting after-effect of satisfaction in the mind of the woman who buys.

Hats In Fashion's Latest Mode $10

Small shapes, for the most part, that sit comfortably on the head and frame the face charmingly. There is elegance and art in their lines, richness in the materials of which they are made, luxury in their trimmings.

The new Hood Hats are liberally represented and the popular turbans are numerous.

Feathers, breasts, plumes, tapestries, ribbons, flowers, have all been employed to produce hats that excel in the beauty of their design.

Other stores are selling hats of the same grade of materials, though less artistically combined, as high as $18 and $25.

At our special price of $10 they are distinctly interesting.

New Untrimmed Shapes

In hatter's plush and white beaver, some daintily shaded, some in solid colors, many black. Large sizes, most of them, made of better material, with greater skill and with a higher artistic standard of design than any we have seen. $11.50 up to $18 would not be an excessive price for them elsewhere. But New York Store close pricing puts them at only $8.75.

Untrimmed Plush Hats at Only........ $5

Not the conventional, uninteresting shapes that require expensive trimming before they can be made smart; but styles that are distinctive when you get them and that need only a little simple touch of ornamentation to complete them.

Our stock of more conservative untrimmed and trimmed hats for women of mature years is concededly the city's most complete.

Artificial Flowers For Corsage Bouquets

Are coming into more general use, each day. Given a beautiful and almost perfect imitation rose or cluster of violets, and greater satisfaction is assured than from any short-lived natural blossom.

We have some of the most wonderful imitation flowers that you have ever seen—priced very moderately.

SHAKESPEARE INCARNATE.

RY WILL SOON BE ARD AT THE AUDITORIUM.

Ellen Terry, will be heard at the Auditorium Monday evening, in an interpretative Shakespearean Lecture.

and her voice quivered with emotion. Then, with her incomparable grace of gesture still unimpaired and her perfect clarity of reading, as delightful as ever, she recited the scene with Benedick.

"Miss Terry, who never acted Rosalind, touched lightly on that heroine. She seemed most impressed by her fine breeding.

"Her account of Portia was much more sympathetic. She told of the various conceptions of the character, and said that Shakespeare was capable of so many interpretations that there might be even grounds for the German view that the trial scene should be played as low comedy, with Portia wearing an eighteenth century lawyer's wig, with large spectacles and even sometimes a small moustache. She admitted having found so much beauty in the role that nothing could be sacrificed to that, and so played Portia as an Italian lady. She read the 'Mercy' speech so exquisitely that the warmest applause of the afternoon followed.

"When Miss Terry finished and stood with an armful of roses, the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant read a speech of welcome written by Kate Douglas Wiggin, and then she listened to a poem which Percy MacKaye had composed and which he read to her.

"Then she received a book, containing the signatures of the President of the United States and many of her admirers, including Mayor Gaynor, from Rev. Mr. Grant.

"But at length she had to thank her friends and disappear behind the blue draperies."

Some of the most prominent women of Los Angeles are to be Miss Terry's patronesses, and a big reception will probably be given in her honor.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

in part by the Park Commission, is to place at the rear of the athletic field a cypress hedge, to plant a dainty vine to be trained against the white walls of the building, and to place around the extensive lawns deep borders of flowers in the cardinal which will be the school color.

The first steel lockers to be installed in the city schools have been placed in the gymnasiums of the Manual Arts High. They are sanitary and safe.

An insurance company against breakage of glass, has been organized among the students of Manual Arts High. Each member pays 10 cents as an initiation fee and this protects him from any further assessment in case of the breaking of glass by pupils. The great quantity of glass in these buildings gave rise to this idea. About 80 per cent. of the pupils belong to this organization.

The delegates from the Manual Arts High School Improvement Association to the United Improvement Association of the Southwest, were Dr. A. E. Wilson, principal; Valentin Buchner, Geo. E. Mitchell, J. H. Whitely and R. C. Daniels. At the session, Dr. Wilson was elected vice-president of the Southwest Improvement Federation.

A Girls' Swimming Club has been organized at Manual Arts High and last week 100 girls under the chaperonage of Mrs. Morgan, director of girls' physical training for the school, went to Bimini for a swim, having the pool to themselves from 4:30 to 5:30. So great is the enthusiasm that there is a demand for another organization, as no more can be cared for, in the present one, but Mrs. Morgan will be unable to attend to another until next semester. What Mrs. Morgan calls 'dry land lessons" in swimming are being given to the girls at the school. By this means all the motions of the art are taught and when these motions become automatic, they can easily be put into effect in the water.

A teachers' gym class has been formed at Manual Arts for practice after school hours. Mrs. Morgan is the instructor and it is hoped that all the women teachers in the school will join, as the social side is pleasant while the benefits of the exercise are indisputable, after a day of teaching.

Center Ball or Captain Ball is most popular among the girls of this school, Mrs. Morgan having introduced it for the reason that so many can play at a time and all thus have equal opportunities at exercise.

Under the direction of Miss Groves, musical director of Manual Arts, a number of original songs are being practiced for use at the time of the dedication.

Music held sway at Polytechnic last week. The orchestra made its first appearance for the year on Tuesday at an Aud Call. Three numbers were rendered and fine progress was shown. A trombone has been added to the quota of instruments and the orchestra is in fact the best one ever brought together in the school. The announcement was made that Jamie Overton, a former Poly student, was one of sixteen out of seventy to win an award at Berlin recently.

At the Girls' Aud Call a musical programme was given, one of the features of which was a violin solo by Grace McCormick.

Caught Cold!

How often it happens that serious illness, and sometimes death, is directly traceable to neglect of a "common" cold. After it is too late, what wouldn't we give to have checked the cold at the start, when it would quickly yield to simple home treatment.

A most effective remedy, that will usually break up a cold over night and quickly relieve the most irritating cough, is made by mixing 2 ounces of glycerine, a half ounce of virgin oil of pine and 8 ounces of pure whisky. Shake well, and take a teaspoonful four times a day. The ingredients for this mixture can be bought in any good drug store, and easily mixed together in a large bottle. This formula was used and recommended for many years by the late Dr. W. A. Leach, who founded the Leach Chemical Co., of Cincinnati, O., in whose laboratories the virgin oil of pine is compounded.

The Glee clubs, string quartette and the chorus of Polytechnic are all practicing Christmas music, and the Boys' Glee is practicing to take part with the dramatic department in the production of "Antigone" at some time in January. This production will take the place of the usual class play.

Mrs. Parsons, head of the musical department, is training an orchestra of teachers who will play during Institute week.

Next week Mrs. Parsons goes to Sacramento to attend the institute at that place.

A lecture upon Greek art was given on Wednesday evening at Polytechnic by M. Leoisakos, a native of Greece. The gentleman is an enthusiast about the art of his native land and is a profound scholar along these lines.

Miss Bolton, physical director of Stanford, paid a visit to Polytechnic last week.

The Western Jubilee Singers gave a concert at Los Angeles High School on Wednesday, under the auspices of the student body, the proceeds to swell the clock fund. Miss Florence Cole, soprano of the Jubilee singers, is a graduate of Los Angeles High. The male quartette made a great hit, being enthusiastically encored.

Thursday seems to be lawn mowing day at Los Angeles High. There were so many girls with lawn mowers at work that the grass was almost invisible last Thursday morning. There was a boy there also; he seemed to be telling the girls "how."

There are 356 boys waiting for the hand ball courts to be finished at L. A.

The zoology department is putting in cages for small live specimens for study. Natural science, as learned here under the tutelage of Mr. Culver, is by no means dry or uninteresting, but on the contrary is as "live" as the newly-caged specimens.

The coming debate between L. A. and Throop Academy, in the Southern California Debating League, will be upon the question "Resolved, That in all cases where a death penalty is not involved a unanimous verdict should not be required." L. A. has the affirmative and is represented by Tyler Robinson and Donald Albright. The debate will occur on the 23rd at Throop.

Los Angeles High, ever benevolent, is "boosting" for contributions for the Vidol family.

The programme for the Star and Crescent at L. A. High was a reciprocity programme and included numbers by students from Polytechnic and Hollywood. Muriel Rowell, vice-president of the society, had charge of the programme, which was as follows: Installation of officers; "Talk on Aeroplanes," by Warren Eaton of Polytechnic; piano solo, "Allegro Scherzando," by Dorothy Furgison of Hollywood; vocal solo, "Carmenia," by Hazel Sanders of P. H. S.; violin solo, "Soubenir," by Lillian Nolan of Hollywood; vocal solo, by Blake Smith of L. A. H. S.

Hollwood High School will have visitor's day on Dec. 9, at which time the domestic science department will hold a sale of Christmas articles made in the art and sewing departments and of jellies and preserves made by the domestic science departments. The proceeds will go toward the beautifying of the buildings.

"She Stoops to Conquer" will be given at Hollwood High School on Dec. 2, by the dramatic talent of the school.

At Gardena High School, a party was given on Monday last, at which all students of the school assembled for a harvest festival. Old time games were played and a truly enjoyable informal country party was given.

On Thursday at Gardena, the first of the parties by the domestic science department was given. It is the intention to have these parties each month. The girls of this department furnish the refreshments and prove to the others that they are really learning to cook. At the same time they are learning how to act as hostess in the truest sense of the term, since it is a point to make all feel at home, without any of the formality or frills of fashion.

The Los Angeles Physical Education Society held its annual meeting on Wednesday at Bimini and elected officers for the coming year. This society is composed largely of teachers interested in physical training. Swimming was the subject for this meeting and some extraordinarily fine examples of the art were given. Not alone the plain and practical side of the art, such as floating, diving, resuscitation of the drowning and rescue from watery death, but all kinds of fancy acts in the aquatic art were exhibited. After the exhibition dinner was served to the society at Bimini Inn, and election of officers followed. The officers are: Dr. E. C. Beach, president, Miss Handy of Cumnock, vice-president, Miss McCullough of Pasadena High School secretary-treasurer.

Mr. Chapman of L. A. H. read a paper on "The Value of Swimming in Physical Development"; Miss Caldwell of Long Beach High School, spoke upon "The Effect of Swimming in Organic Development"; Dr. Lowman spoke upon the "Corrective Value of Swimming," and Dr. Edwards of Bimini gave a talk upon "Swimming in its General Aspects."

The meeting was the most interesting ever held, it is said by those who attended. The society was organized last year by Dr. Beach, physical director of Los Angeles High School, San Pedro and Gardena. Meetings are held each month and some object of particular interest along this line is discussed.

GAY LIFE OF THE CITY.

BY A CLUBMAN.

As things look at present the coming season promises to eclipse anything ever seen in Los Angeles by the bon vivant. The calendar for a month ahead is more than full and it is getting to the point where a man must transact his business between the hours of nine and twelve in the morning in order to keep the pace. In fact I don't see much sleep ahead this week for anyone who proposes to hold up his end of the game.

It hardly sounded reasonable that anyone but the motor fans and cranks (not referring to motor machinery by these technical terms) would be tempted out for an all-night celebration before the start of the Thanksgiving road race. Yet I learn at the Jonathan Club that Ralph Hamlin, Herbert Cornish, Herman Hauser, Bert Logan and the other lively ones have stirred them all up to a nocturnal celebration. It doesn't appeal particularly to me as good preparation for a Thanksgiving dinner, but it may counteract this over-feasting idea of a proper celebration.

There should be no difficulty about keeping awake with football and baseball games, automobile races, vaudeville performances, barbecue, band concerts and other things that are on the programme. The club men are going down in parties of six or eight, and if there is any lack of entertainment they will be quite equal to securing their own amusement.

The Sierra Madre Club has a counter attraction on in the nature of a family dinner party and evening's entertainment in the clubrooms, but that will not keep the members from slipping away at midnight and joining the crowd at the beach. Tom Carrigan has to go down that way every night and if there are any machines that need a guide and can keep the pace they will have a pilot.

In addition to Thanksgiving Day and the night before we are all due for another half-holiday to see the Countess de Swirsky and her pink toes. Of course these dances, like Maud Allen's performance, are purely classic, but if the Countess' manager will have her toes insured and will not allow us to overlook the fact that she wears neither shoes nor stockings what can you expect? At any rate these matinee seats are not all being bought up by matinee girls.

And next week comes the Imperial Russian Ballet. They advertise costumes and scenery, and though the Countess de Swirsky evidently dispenses to a large extent with both I am given to understand that no one can afford to miss this performance. Mrs. J. O. Koepfli went to the expense and trouble of cabling a friend here to see this if she mortgaged her kitchen utensils in order to do so. As a matter of fact Mr. Behymer has pretty nearly mortgaged his table silver to put up the $10,000 guarantee that was required to bring them here and we are all bound to see there is no foreclosure.

What with the Russians, Nazimova, another week of grand opera, attractive offerings at the other theaters and the usual run of social functions that gather about the holiday season there are very few dull moments in sight.

It is also getting close to the Virginia Valley season. Just what direction the Jonathan Club jinks are to take this year has not yet been announced. Freeman Teed is in charge and has already held several meetings of his committee to arrange the programme. It looks hardly possible to attain the pitch of excitement that attended the Beauty Contest of last year when W. J. Wheatley was elected Beau Brummel of the Virginia Valley populace after one of the most exciting contests ever waged in any community with roast pigs, automobiles and ocean trips offered for votes. Virginia Valley has had its mayoralty contest, its beauty show, a great conflagration, a flood, an earthquake and a rehabilitation. What is left? Leave it to the fertile brains of the committee members and do not worry about the prosperity of the most productive valley in the world.

I thought I had seen all of the first-class hotels of Los Angeles until the other evening when a few of us dropped in on Charlie Ruggles at his new home. Ruggles, with his father and brother and a bachelor friend, recently purchased a California mission residence at 425 Kingsley Drive. It is a very attractive place, built in the old style with a patio surrounded on three sides and all the rooms opening into this court.

The patio is fitted up as a hotel office, with a desk, a register, a bellboy, candlesticks and pitchers of ice water. Ruggles is not thinking of going into the business. It is just a fancy he has for making his guests feel at home when they come out.

"These fellows who never had a home," he said, looking proudly around him, "are always talking about the comforts and conveniences of a hotel. Now the only addition to home comforts I could ever find in a hotel was a bellboy and a pitcher of ice water. I have them both here for the benefit of these hotel bachelors who come out sometimes."

George Fitch, custodian of the new Federal Building, who is soon to be married, is getting all the attention due him these days. His fellow-members of the Jonathan Club are determined to make his closing bachelor days so lively that he won't quite forget them when he lapses into the oblivion of domesticity. The ladies' night last Wednesday was in reality a prenuptial festivity for Mr. Fitch and Mrs. Murray, the bride-to-be.

FOR PEACE.

BROWN STUDENT MAKES A MOVE.

WOULD ORGANIZE AN ANTI-WAR SOCIETY IN U.S.C.

Perpetuation of Amity Between the United States and Japan in Mind of Himself and Associates, Aside From the Main Object—Will Carry Idea to Orient.

A movement is on foot among the Japanese students attending the University of Southern California to organize a peace society patterned after others of the world, although on a much smaller scale.

The man who has evolved this idea of a peace society among the Japanese element at the university is Riichiro Ohashi, a special student taking a course in English and theology.

Young Ohashi came to Southern California from Yokohama six years ago for an education. He and others of his friends attending the university despise war as a costly and unnecessary impediment to human progress, and their getting together here as a society is the inception of a peace movement which they intend to inculcate in the minds of their countrymen on their return to Japan.

Aside from the question of universal peace Ohashi and his associates have in mind the perpetuation of the present harmonious relations existing between Japan and the United States.

"We detest war," said Ohashi, "and there are thousands of our countrymen who have just cause to deplore the two terrible wars which Japan engaged in since 1[illegible].

"Japanese statesmen have rational minds as well as American or European public men, and there is nothing that cannot be settled through the medium of arbitration provided that the nations would eliminate the caustic attitude where it is backed up by a large army and navy.

"Both Japan and America annually comb the entire country for tax money to maintain fleets of battleships and armies of men, overlooking entirely the fact that there are millions of poor people to whom this money would be of incalculable benefit.

"War puts a nation back many years, shoulders the people with burdensome taxes, and increases the national debt. With a few more peace societies we would be in a position to support and have passed a policy of retrenchment which would in a very few years obliterate national debts, taxes and other obstacles of a national character. Then would the cries of the poor and distressed be heard.

"Neither my friends nor myself are after any Nobel peace prize. We have set views regarding the peace question and we want to vent them through a peace society. Upon our return to Japan we will organize a similar peace movement, and work to the end that our country will provide for less ships, fewer armies, and more money for the uplift and upkeep of the people."

EXCLUSIVE.

ANTI-INFANTILE AT ANY PRICE.

APARTMENT-HOUSE HEADS TURN THE BABY AWAY.

Twenty-three Out of Twenty-five Give the Cold Shoulder to the Man With a Child Seeking Accommodations, and They Waste No Politeness, Either.

"No babies wanted."

This was the plain, unvarnished ukase handed a Times reporter the past week by managers and proprietors of twenty-three apartment houses located in various sections of the city, when he sought to rent an apartment for a family with one baby. And no politeness was wasted in "handing it to him" either.

Of twenty-five apartment houses visited but two would accept babies.

"But this particular baby is but 16 months old and as harmless a little 'snookums' as ever invaded Los Angeles,' the apartment czars were told.

"No matter," was the reply inexorable, "we can't create a precedent, you know, for then we will have no end of trouble. Sorry, but you'll have to look elsewhere."

The first place visited was a large structure on the hill.

"Yes"—with a bland smile—"we have a nice suite at $45. Babies? I should say not. Nothing doing here." The last marked by a total disappearance of the smile and a hyperborean bow at the door.

A dozen other apartments, good, bad and mediocre, distributed over the hill, were next called upon. The magic name baby evoked a string of negatives which left no doubt in the mind of the questioner that the house rules were decidedly anti-infantile in character at any price.

"What, destroy my furniture!" said a stern apartment woman on Figueroa street.

"Horrors, have my halls scratched!" cried another, further down the street.

"Mercy, no!" shouted another, "my poor guests will never be able to sleep."

Exclusive apartments? Yes, exclusive for adults, and very much excluded to babies, especially in the Westlake district, where babies are rejected as useless timber in the makeup of its apartment houses.

On West Tenth street the landlady bristled up like an electrified exclamation point when asked if she had accommodations for a 16-month old citizen of the republic.

"No, no, no, no!" she fairly shouted, "I have some old gentlemen stopping here, and they would leave instantly."

"But perhaps these old boys have arrived at their second stage of childhood and would welcome children," it was suggested.

The witticism was badly timed, for the door was slammed without further ado.

The Pico district holds the record for producing two motherly apartment keepers who acknowledge that they are pleased to provide a haven for embryonic future politicians.

"God bless 'em," replied one, "of course I'll take them in—all you have, if I can find room for them."

"We already have six in the house," said the other, "but I guess we can get along with another. Come on in."

KALEIDOSCOPIC BROADWAY.

Eighty-six Persons a Minute Pass, One Bicycle Every Six Seconds, Car Every Eighteen.

Broadway, the chief shopping part of Los Angeles, daily presents a kaleidoscopic scene of humanity and traffic.

Tuesday afternoon about 4 o'clock, 1292 persons passed the southwest corner of Sixth and Broadway in fifteen minutes, an average of eighty-six persons a minute.

The ubiquitous bicycle holds the record for being eternally in evidence in the city's big thoroughfare, one crossing the intersection of Sixth and Broadway every six seconds between 4 and 4:30 p.m.

Close on the heels of the bike were automobiles and electric vehicles, one of which passed every eight seconds. Wagons of divers description and trades filed by every twelve seconds.

Averaging eighteen seconds apart, a yellow car crossed Sixth street or a red car crossed Broadway at Sixth.

—Thanksgiving Offerings of Special Interest From All

THANKSGIVING SEASON is one of the particular times during the year when the question of additions to the furnishings of the home is more prominently brought to notice. Especially so is this as regards the dining-room. With the reunion, which takes place in many families, or with the gathering of guests for the Thanksgiving feast, comes the desire to make the dining-room—and all the home—as attractive and inviting as possible.

Those who have purchases to make this week will find in the many departments throughout our store, many particularly interesting offerings, which are most timely. A few of the special offerings are featured in our announcement today. Many other articles throughout our stock may be found specially priced.

Holiday goods are arriving in large quantities now, in every line throughout our stock. The showing is one that cannot be duplicated in another store in the city; for nowhere is there such a large and magnificent display, such a splendid showing of new goods, such a wide variety of styles, such a wealth of new designs and ideas, such splendid values. It is a display which must appeal to every furniture seeker, and one which will satisfy from every standpoint.

We invite everyone to come—if only to look. Make yourselves entirely at home in our store. Look about through our stock at your pleasure and convenience. Make Barker Bros. store and stock—goods, qualities and prices—your basis for comparison. You will find you cannot duplicate the inducements here in any other store in any particular.

If you desire to avail yourself of the privilege of extended payments, you will find at Barker Bros., "Best Terms," arranged especially to meet your individual convenience.

—An Extraordinary Three-Day Sale of Rugs!

—Tomorrow morning we shall begin an extraordinary three-day clearance and readjustment sale in our Rug Department. In removing our rug department from the north to the south half of our second floor, we find it advisable to reduce our reserve stock to a certain extent, in order to make room at once for a large shipment of new goods now on the road.

—This special sale will embrace room-size rugs in Axminsters, Body Brussels and Wiltons—standard weaves of the very best grades, which can be depended upon for very best service. Please consider well the fact that these rugs are from our regular stock—absolutely first-class weaves in every respect. Do not confuse these offerings with the average class of "Special Sale" rugs, composed generally of "seconds," "culls" and "maker's mistakes." Also please consider well the fact that Barker Bros.' regular prices are absolutely the lowest at which reliable floor coverings can be purchased anywhere. Then note the savings which are possible at this time, as quoted below.

Let artists and esthetic critics rant as they will, but can anybody believe that a more suitable dress for civilised life was ever got up than what men wear today, and especially when made up in good strong easy hanging tweeds in dark or light to suit the season? It is a dress in which a man can eat, drink, read, write, run, fight, ride and carry bundles and lunch in his pockets, if necessary, and he is not too proud, and he can put it on and take it off, the whole business, inside of three minutes.—[New York Press.

Mustard is grown in England to a considerable extent in the eastern countries and the Fen district and to some extent in the Midlands. It is ordinarily grown in heavy black soil, but it is generally believed that the crop draws a great deal of strength from the soil. For that reason it is not especially popular. The yield an acre is variable, ranging from twenty to thirty bushels, but twenty bushels is usually considered a fair yield. The seed rate is usually about three to four pounds an acre when drilled in rows from ten to twelve inches apart.

FACTS, FEATURES AND FANCIES FOR WOMEN.

BY ~ Olive Gray

DAILY BEAUTY HINT: Be of good cheer. Lines of happiness beautify even the plainest of faces. High spirits can be cultivated and they illuminate the entire person, giving lightness of step and carriage, gracefulness and poise to the body. If you are happy and try to radiate happiness, you will be beautiful to all who know you.

Thanksgiving is pre-eminently the day of good cheer and its festivities naturally center around the dining-room.

While the Christmas dinner is important, it is less so than that of the other holidays for the reason that the gift spirit is uppermost at Santa Claus time, and dinner is more incidental.

I know a family who have a custom of gift-giving to "The Household," thus personifying the spirit of Home. This gift-giving is done at Thanksgiving as an appropriate offering for the prosperity of the year. At this season they make it a point to select whatever they have most wished for during the year, in the way of household ornaments or decorations or necessities and all club together and give these articles for the mutual benefit.

Last year, they selected a new gas range which was needed, and by each contributing toward the sum to be expended they made it possible to choose a much better article than if it had been bought merely as a necessity.

They also bought a fireless cooker and a complete set of casseroles.

This year things have been going exceedingly well with this charming family—some investments having turned out well—and they are planning proportionately for the Thanksgiving household gifts. It is a privilege to be in their confidence and know something of what they intend to do.

"We have dreamed of refurnishing the dining-room," said one of the girls, "or I might say of furnishing it, for we never felt that it was furnished at all, as we bought the present necessities as a temporary makeshift; but now we shall have some really good things for this best of all rooms."

It seems that they are undecided between several styles. Jean wants a Sheraton set that she has seen in a Broadway establishment. "I think it delightful," said she, "there is a grace and a lightness to this style of furniture which seems to me especially appropriate for the dining-room. The simple lines, the medium color of the wood itself and the dainty embellishment created by the inlaid patterns, give a cheerfulness that I like. That set is a perfect reproduction, too, of the original English furniture. If we buy this," she continued, "I have a plan of decoration for the Thanksgiving table, to correspond with it. I would use, in the bay window, upon French gilt brackets, a long flower box in that new French ware composed of wicker with flowers in full relief, cast over it in wreaths as decoration. It is in the delicious dull gold leaf. I would plant this with blossoming bulbs for the occasion. Then I would select for the dinner cloth one of the "Feast of Bacchus" designs, with the merry Cupids dancing round and round with rose wreaths—we saw a beautiful example of this damask in Austrian hand-weave at a certain store. With this I would use a center piece of rare lace, and in the midst I would place a low glass flower holder with wreaths of French gilt—I saw one that I liked—and it would be filled with Cecile Brunner roses and maidenhair.

At each place I would have an individual basket of similar ware containing a few of the roses. They seem Cupid-like, I think. The dinner ware itself should be in Minton with a carved gold edge, and the glass of the Minton glass which matches exactly the dinner ware. Then I would use as favor dishes, tiny gilded baskets with bonbons in gold foil—each a surprise in its contents. The place cards should be water color designs of Cupids and wreaths."

"That would be very pretty," said Margery, "and very Thanksgiving like; but I incline toward that handsome mahogany dining set—the one with the knife urns." Then, turning to me, she explained that they had examined carefully a set which is shown in a Boardway window. "It is of heavy solid mahogany, of the Georgian period; and its sweeping stately lines are superb. While all the pieces are fine—the China closet, the serviette, the dining table, the chairs,—the sideboard is the glory of the set. It has roomy drawers fitted out in cellarette fashion, and luxuriously padded cases for silver, but the unique features are the knife urns which are placed upon either side and which lend a dignity seldom attained by any piece of furniture of today."

Margery's enthusiasm determined me to at least see this set, the first thing in the morning.

"If we bought that set," she continued, "I would want to use with it a true Harvest Festival plan of decoration. I would buy that handsome damask cloth in the designs of corn, wheat and oats, 'The American Trinity of Wealth,' the man called it in showing it. The ears of corn from the centerpiece and the wheat and oats are scattered in artistic profusion. If we selected this, I would want to carry out the color scheme in yellow and I believe I would use rather a heavy lace centerpiece and I would make a basket from a fair-sized pumpkin, cut with the rind left for the handle, and into it I would put all kinds of rare and fine fruits. I would allow a bit of yellow satin to show through the lace centerpiece and at each place I would use those new little flower holders of crystal and place in them white Killarney roses—the deep creamy ones. The dishes should be those with the plain, very narrow, gold edge, and the glass the plain English rock crystal in those simple colonial designs so appropriate with the old mahogany furniture. I would use the Colonial design in the individual silver as well, that octagonal design that we saw especially suited me—the spoons looked like those of grandmother's."

"With the Sheraton, if we get it," said another sister, "I would like orchids for the floral decorations, and orchids for the table damask—you know we saw that design."

"Yes, or that rich rose wreath design, and then have one of those cluster bouquet holders for a centerpiece and use the Maryland roses in both the pink and the red," said the color-loving member.

"You have not expressed a preference, mother dear," said one daughter.

"My chief concern is with the dinner itself. I have decided upon one of those roasters which cook the turkey to a turn without basting. They look logical to me. The curved bottom to the pan prevents burning, and the airtight cover holds within all juices. Then I shall use the fireless for the plum pudding and the pies. I have a new recipe for nut soup and several new entrees made from a new imported delicacy."

"Is that what comes in those cute little earthenware pots?" asked Bee.

"You scamp—you have been prying!"

"Margery shall hem the table damask, whichever design we select, for her French rolled hems are perfect, and that is the accepted style for the present."

"Let us serve after dinner coffee in the library and with it some sort of 'cheesy' dish in the chafing-dish. I want to buy that set of chafing dish and percolator in old copper and I think it would be so cosy to have the after dinners in there before the fireplace."

"Don't forget to have bar de duc somewhere in the dinner; and oh Mother, how would some sort of truffled dish do for entree?"

"If we get the Georgian mahogany," said Jean, "I don't think the pumpkin center piece fine enough; let's have a great basket of openwork silver with Killarney roses and fern." So, the Georgian set seemed to be gaining in favor.

THANKSGIVING HINTS.

Roast the turkey breast down and the white meat will be more juicy.

Raspberry sauce for puddings and sweet sauces and flavorings is an imported novelty.

Bar le luc is an importer delicacy made from red or white English currants, gooseberries or raspberries. It is a delicious accompaniment of the meat course.

An imported strawberry jam comes in tiny glass jars for individual service at 10 cents apiece.

One of the leading grocers makes it a point to lower the price of all high class delicacies at holiday time in order that people of moderate means may afford them for the occasion. For instance several imported articles which are 40 cents per jar the year around are placed at 25 for the holidays.

One of the large house-furnishing stores has a number of Thanksgiving tables set throughout, with finest china, napery and floral decorations.

A superb display of dining-room furniture is shown in two large windows of a Broadway furniture establishment.

THE LANCER.

gnats dancing polkas in and out of your ears.

The heiress said she found gypsy life pleasanter than her luxurious home. Of course she knew best what her home was like.

Russian Invasion.

We seem to be in the midst of some kind of a Russian invasion.

The town is plastered with fetching photographs of the bare legs of a countess of the Czar's realm who is to dance the dance that fascinated Newport; Nazimova is on the way; the papers are filled with Tolstoi; and all the cigarettes are taking on Russian names.

As a retributive move, the American press agent seems to have invaded Russia. An American actress is reported to have jumped into the chilly Volga to the rescue of some sprig of nobility, and to have been made a countess, life-saving medals apparently being a little scarce that day.

Sad experience with press agents makes me suspect that the noble sprig was in reality rescued by some humble coachman with a name like a hay fever, who got a dollar from the advance agent to let the leading lady stagger into the palace halls with a wet bathing suit on.

If the Czar had had a little more experience, he never would have stood for an old one like the actress and the drowning man.

Press Agent's Dream.

I hope for her own sake that the "Countess" Thamara de Swirsky does not read the English language.

If she ever finds out what the press agents are doing to her there will be murder. She is still a hundred miles away and every day their stories get wilder.

The last accounts I read had John Jacob Astor or some other Astor buying up whole blocks of orchestra chairs to sit in all alone; the Countess insuring her toes for $10,000 per toe; the Newport colony belles grabbing off their clothes in a rage of jealousy.

A real countess who dances without any clothes on and shocks society is about the nearest thing I ever heard to a press agent's dream coming true.

SEND TURKEYS TO TOWN.

San Pasqual Valley Men Ship Four Tons of Thanksgiving Birds to Los Angeles.

ESCONDIDO, Nov. 19.—Eight thousand pounds of turkey, four tons, were shipped to the Los Angeles market yesterday, which at 24 cents per pound, live weight, brings the owners of the Thanksgiving birds $1920. The shipments were largely from the San Pasqual Valley, already famous as a butter producing center, as follows: Fred H. Roberts, Norman Hall, E. R. Harris, Andrew Judson, Fred Judson (Assemblyman,) G. B. Brown. The Julian Produce Company was also one of the shippers.

On the occasion of his eighty-eighth birthday, Thursday, seventy friends of Edward Durant, gave him a surprise party. A dinner was one of the features. Mr. Durant received a number of presents. The recipient of the honors was born in England, but came to the United States when 19 years of age. His business has been that of a bricklayer and plasterer and he had charge of the construction of some of the larger brick buildings of Denver and Cleveland. He came to Escondido twenty-four years ago for the purpose of having charge of the construction of the Methodist Church, and has lived here ever since. He is a pillar in the Methodist Church, which was well represented in the birthday gathering.

With four passengers in the car and with Mrs. Earl Schnack, the young wife of the manager of the Escondido garage at the wheel, a Ford tourabout this week made the new record to San Diego of one hour and twenty-four minutes. The previous local record was held by Robert Loveless, 1:28, also made with a Ford tourabout. The journey, which was from the garage in Escondido to the corner of Third and C streets, San Diego, was made without change from the high speed of the machine. Mrs. Schnack is one of the expert automobile drivers of the Escondido country.

Dr. Burdette of Los Angeles gave a lecture in the Auditorium Friday evening, under the auspices of the Baptist Church.

The output of wine from the Escondido country the past year is estimated at [illegible] gallons.

Mr. Business Man Do You Drink?

There Are Thousands of Successful Business Men Today Who Will Say That They Owe Everything They Have in the World, Their Social and Financial Standing—Their Very Lives—to the Fact That They Took the Gatlin Treatment IN TIME.

There are thousands of men in business today who will not be in business this day next year. They are drinking, and drink and business will not mix.

There are hundreds of thousands of men who had a good start in the business world, who, today, have nothing. Their families and friends could tell what liquor did for these men.

There are a million men drinking today who will always be working for some other man—who will never be independent—who will never be in business for themselves because they drink.

Come to the Gatlin Institute for three days and get out of the drinking class. Drink only shatters the nerves, weakens the brain, destroys business ability—it is deadly to the man who drinks it and deadly to the business.

The Gatlin Treatment

Cures the Drink Habit in THREE DAYS. No Hypodermic Injections or Disagreeable Features—Failure Impossible.

The Gatlin treatment contains no poisonous drugs, no substitutive stimulants—there are no bad after-effects — a treatment so harmless that a child could take it, yet the most effective remedy ever discovered. In THREE DAYS every trace of alcholic poison is eliminated from the system, and with it goes all craving and desire for alcoholic liquor.

Only the Gatlin treatment assures permanency.

All patients accepted for treatment under contract to cure in three days—under contract to cure satisfactorily—or treatment costs nothing.

"The Easy Way" To Stop Drinking

Think of it! THREE DAYS—no longer! Only seventy-two hours in which to take away all desire and appetite for drink under contract. Any business man—any man—can spare three days in which to avail himself of that great ASSET—that which makes the business go—SOBRIETY.

The Gatlin Home treatment should be taken by those who cannot come to the institution for three days.

The greatest privacy is maintained at the Gatlin Institute for either men or women who desire seclusion while taking treatment.

Call, phone or write for book giving full particulars, copies of contracts, etc.

COUNTESS IN STRANGE DANCES.

DE SWIRSKY TO APPEAR AT THE AUDITORIUM THIS WEEK.

Beautiful Young Russian Woman Who Conquered Newport Said to Fascinate by Art and Wonderful Wardrobe—Henry Ohlmeyer to Direct Her Orchestra.

Heralded by her beauty, her musical accomplishments, her society triumphs in Newport, her allegedly sensational "Tanagra" dance, and most recently by a series of highly successful performances in San Francisco, comes Countess Thamara de Swirsky, a lithe young Russian whose feet are shod neither with satin or leather when she dances, but only with her own rosy skin.

Charles V. Kavanagh, manager of the Ferris Hartman company, is bringing De Swirsky to the Auditorium for two matinee performances, on Tuesday and Friday of this week.

De Swirsky came to America at the same time as Rita Sacchetto, premier danseuse of the Metropolitan Opera-house. Both won instant approval in New York.

In the matter of very light attire in most of her dances, De Swirsky has been compared to Maud Allan, but her manager avers that her dances are entirely different, placing her more in the class of Orchidee. Gertrude von Axen and Irene Sanden—none of whom, readers will note, have danced very frequently "in our midst."

De Swirsky will be supported by an orchestra of size and complete instrumentation, and it has been announced that Henry Ohlmeyer, who is without doubt the foremost bandmaster in the West, will lead this orchestra.

At a grand piano, upon the stage, Mme. De Swirsky will demonstrate her own musical achievements.

Her programme, which she will give Tuesday and Friday afternoons, is in three parts.

The first part takes in her Dvorak Slavic dances, in which it is said that she appears in some of the most gorgeous costumes ever worn by a dancer. The Slavic dances include the "Dance Nuptiale," "Mazurka Russe" and the Russian national dance.

The second part will consist of the "Peer Gynt" suite, entire in its four divisions of "Morning Mood," "The Death of Ase," "Anitra's Dance" and "In the Hall of the Mountain King."

The "Tanagra," danced to excerpts from Delibes, Gluck, Glazounoff, Rachmaninoff and other composers, will be the finale.

GLIMPSES OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(Special Correspondence of The Times.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18.—The strain is over at last and we know what our population is. For some months past the tension has been nerve-racking and there were signs of a community breakdown had not Dr. Durand relieved the pressure by telling us that there are 416,912 people here, a gain of 21 per cent in the last ten years. Some of us think that there ought to be a million inhabitants but others are sure that half a loaf is better than none.

Rare discrimination was shown by the results of the charter amendment election. Nearly all the changes proposing a rise of official salaries were voted down. Also the plan to take away from Golden Gate Park half its revenue. Increasing the terms of municipal officers to four years, the revival of the pure Australian ballot and putting the power in the hands of the majority were all favorably enacted.

By formal action of the Labor Council charter amendments relating to majority rule were condemned. As a result the amendments were triumphantly carried. Now come the labor politicians with the claim that organized labor won everything in sight.

The Pacific Coast Congress is a success and bids fair to become a permanent institution. Prominent delegates from all over the Coast attended. Among the leading delegates were those from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Messrs. Joseph Scott, G. E. Bittinger and Paul J. McCormack.

The successful termination of the annual college Rugby football game with no casualities and intense excitement has caused President Benjamin Ide Wheeler to say that the British game is now a moral issue. He says: "The old intercollegiate game should be driven out of all American institutions. No one who is well versed in the two institutions can say anything else. The perpetuation of the old game can be only regarded as ethically wrong." A retort courteous from Walter Camp, father of the intercollegiate game, will be anxiously awaited by football enthusiasts.

Mayor McCarthy is not going to have it all to himself when he seeks the nomination of the labor union voters for re-election. Michael Casey stepped aside for him last time and this time the redoubtable "Mike" will step aside for nobody. Then there is "Andy" Gallagher, who thinks that his unselfish work for the plain people ought to be recognised, and that there ought to be no recognition below an endorsement for the mayoralty. Altogether it promises to be a Kilkenny fight and it may be that Olaf Tveitmoe may have to take the nomination himself to still the warring factions.

Secret sessions are now the order of the night between the city officials and the Spring Valley directors as to the purchase of the water plant. When asked what was the result, Mayor McCarthy said flippantly, "We talked of millions and we talked of gallons of water and we put several questions to them and then we adjourned." When the matter comes up for a vote on the purchase perhaps the people will have more light on the subject.

The Press Club gave a special dinner to those of its members who had been in the club ten years and longer. It was called a banquet to the old guard though several of the guests objected to being termed "old" and offered to submit their teeth for an examination by the nearest horse doctor to prove their youth.

The quarantine officials at Angel Island may be scientifically right in piercing the ears of the Chinese to see if they have the hookworm, but the orientals differ with them. They made a successful protest to Washington and now the inspectors will have to diagnose hookworm some other way than probing for it.

ARTISTRY OF FRANK BACON.

HIS "FORTUNE HUNTER" CHARACTERIZATION A PATTERN.

Rise of Veteran Player Who Years Ago Was Railroading an Average Company Through the West to Station of Well-Nnigh Peerless Character Creator.

BY JULIAN JOHNSON.

For a piece of character acting delightful because it is utterly simple, the town has not in a long time seen a mate to the quaint druggist portrayed in "The Fortune Hunter" by Frank Bacon.

If all the young actors who are prone to windmill gestures, megaphone language and cartoon exaggeration could see this quiet, real human being Mr. Bacon so exquisitely delineates, future audiences might be spared a degree of inflictions.

Nor is this antiquarian pharmacist merely a negative soft-speaker.

I stood in the rear of the Mason auditorium the other evening during the major portion of an act, and while numerous speeches hurled outward in a fortissimo key were indistinct and fragmentary when they reached my ears, I caught every word that Mr. Bacon uttered, though at no time did he raise his voice above a conversation tone, and often it was lower than that.

That's art—the art of perfect speech.

Mr. Bacon is really a California veteran.

Remember the days of "The Hill of California," and other bucolic plays?

Mr. Bacon was acting then, but he was not such an actor as he is now.

In those days he was satisfied to put over the traditional thing in the traditional unreal way.

But he has grown to the stature of genuine Thespianic accomplishment. He left San Francisco—where he was playing at the Majestic Theater—immediately after the fire, and for a long time toured in a vaudeville sketch of his own. He is an original "Fortune Hunter" man, and was a member of the first Chicago company—which was really the first company playing the piece at all.

Mr. Bacon was also an original Burbank man, and acted at that house when the management was changing with the same frequency as South American presidencies. This was before the days of Prudential-has-the-strength-of-Gibraltar Morosco.

Bacon is the living example of a great actor rising phoenix-like from the ashes of seemingly fruitless years.

Perhaps he wondered himself, while virtually barnstorming through the West, what the end would be. Perhaps he doesn't realize even now just how fine an accomplishment is his.

But be all that as it may, I recommend him as a study to every aspiring young player.

Mr. Bacon's daughter Betsy, supported by her mother and brother, was a recent headline feature at the Los Angeles Theater.

"The Fortune Hunter" company contains another thorough-going character maker in Fred Niblo—than whom nature never made any truer "good fellow."

Whether Leila Burton Wells' military play, "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," which will have its first production on any stage at the Belasco tomorrow night comes up to the expectations of the authoress and the Belasco management, or whether it fails to meet with the approval of the theater going public, it will have the unique distinction of being the only play within memory to reach the realm of the footlights without being offered for sale or peddled around among the play agents and the managers.

When Clyde Fitch was fresh from his studies at Amherst he wrote a number of plays and then started in to try to sell them. He speedily found out, as all dramatic authors must learn, that the writing of a play is only one quarter of the task. The other fraction consists in disposing of the dramatic composition and making some manager believe the work is worth a production. Fitch even had to resort to the expediency of traveling around the country for an entire season with Richard Mansfield, rewriting his "Beau Brummel" according to the ideas of the late Mr. Mansfield before the play was accepted. Augustus Thomas experienced much difficulty in selling his popular "Arizona," and finally was compelled to let the late Kirk La Shelle have it only after the Frohmans—Charles and Daniel—had both declined it with the customary managerial note of thanks. Charles Klein's play "The Lion and the Mouse," did not meet with the approval of the supposedly astute men of the theatrical world who make a business of producing plays and even "The Witching Hour" was turned down by Charles Frohman who termed it a "crazy thing." "Paid in Full" met with a similar experience at the hands of Klaw & Erlanger, the Frohmans, Henry B. Harris, and almost every other manager in the country and even after the first production of the piece, in Montreal, Wagenhals & Kemper did not realize what a splendid piece of theatrical property they possessed and it was only when Annie Russell failed to fill the Astor Theater that a substitute was required and in a hurry "Paid in Full" was brought into the breach. The rest is history and "Paid in Full" still goes on its way, triumphantly filling the theaters wherein it is played and enabling the one time sleep-in-the-park Eugene Walter to repose in oriental splendor and luxury.

Curiously enough, Mrs. Wells never sent "The Case of Sergeant Wilde" to any manager or play agent. It is true that on the occasion of a recent trip to New York she mentioned to a friend as having written a play but as all embryo Shakespeares are generally classed with the individual who has a sure cure for a cold in the head or a new principle involving perpetual motion, Mrs. Wells' declaration at the time received but scant attention. Later, in the evening, when the matter was mentioned to another friend—who happened to be a member of the Lambs' Club, he suggested that she let him see the manuscript, explaining that he had a number of producing managers among his circle of friends. Mrs. Wells turned over the play to the clubman and thought no more about the piece until a wire brought her the cheering information that a well known New York manager thought so well of the play that he had made an offer of several thousand dollars for the drama. One of Mrs. Wells' Los Angeles friends was shown the telegraphic offer and his opinion was requested.

"I don't know the slightest thing about a play," he admitted but added that he was acquainted with Manager Blackwood of the Belasco Theater.

The result was that the play—at the time it was called "The Way," which title was later changed to "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," which in turn will give way after the Belasco performances to that of "The Reville"—was turned over to the Belasco manager with a request for an early opinion as to its merits. Mr. Blackwood received the manuscript at three o'clock one afternoon and four hours later Mrs. Wells and he had signed contracts calling for an immediate production of the drama at the Belasco and an offer of more money for a one-half interest in the piece than the New York manager had made for the entire play.

It was about the quickest deal for a play on record.

Just how all this good luck happened to come to Mrs. Wells and her play is something of a mystery, when viewed from the viewpoint of the unknown and untried dramatist who spends months and even years trying to convince a manager that he has a good play.

Mrs. Wells expresses and admits that she is a strong advocate of Christian Science and hints that this may have had something to do with her good fortune.

Mr. Blackwood flouts any such suggestion. "It's a corking good military play with touches of melodrama, a good deal of comedy and a love story of great interest; that's all there is to any good play and as quickly as I read 'The Case of Sergeant Wilde,' I believed it was good enough to have an immediate production at the Belasco or any other theater. Then I had to beat the New York manager to it. It wasn't Christian Science at all—merely managerial technique and execution of the 1910 brand."

Odd Nazimova.

Mme. Nazimova, Shubert's star who comes to Hamburger's Majestic Theater for the ensuing week, is something new in stardom as regards publicity.

Not for her the classic diamond robbery. Not for her the story of queer pets from forgotten corners of the universe. Not for her the tale of thousands spent upon dainty lingerie. Nor for her the scintillating interview.

In other words, Mme. Nazimova has issued the dictum to all and sundry who are associated with the work of making her known to the public, that she shall be considered solely as an actress and not as a human freak.

As a general rule, the process of wading through the reams of "copy" that emanate from headquarters regarding famous actresses, singers, dancers and other artists of the footlights, is a cross between a fifteen-cent magazine and the chronicle of the police. With Nazimova's publicity material it is more like the perusal of a commentary on the modern drama, the psychological influence of Ibsen upon the woman of today, the rise and popularization of the deeply intellectual and the subconsciously psychic.

It is a strange fact that even now, after this great Russian woman has been in the public eye for about five years, has been pursued by the saffron reporter and the sensation seeker, she has succeeded in keeping her own personality, her private life, shrouded with an impenetrable veil of mystery. All that is known about her is that she came from Russia to New York to play in the Russian theater, was induced to learn the English language, and immediately became the sensation of the dramatic world.

Nobody knows whether she owns an Angora dog or a Newfoundland cat. It is not emblazoned on the walls of fame whether she eats spaghetti with a spoon or prefers to toy with chop suey with a knife. And if you really want to see a fine exhibition of horror, beside which the ravings of the dope fiend in "The City" are lamblike bleats of joy, just ask her advance agent a few of these questions. He is even stricken with chills and fever at the idea of anyone contemplating the pursuit of such an investigation. But he always is supplied with a fine lot of literature about his star, else he would not be an advance agent. Here is a partial catalogue of the topics he discusses fluently, by permission of madame:

Ibsen, the man.

The effect of the new Austrian dramatist, Arthur Schnitzler, upon modern stage literature.

A chronological story of Mme. Nazimova's American appearances.

Mme. Nazimova's demand for absolute harmony in her productions, including even the musical numbers between the acts.

How to pronounce Mme. Nazimova's name.

This last verges very closely upon the personal, but as it does not involve the private life of the sensitive Russian woman, it is permitted, with a slight uplift of the eyebrows, presumably, upon the part of the actress.

And so the public must rest satisfied to accept Mme. Nazimova as an actress, and govern its curiosity as to whether madame takes her exercise in a taxicab or by crawling around her apartment on her hands and knees.

Alla Nazimova,
the distinguished Russian actress—now, by her choice, a thorough-going American—who will present two plays new to Los Angeles this week.

THE WEEK.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT WILDE.

MRS. WELLS' PLAY GIVES GREAT PROMISE AT BELASCO.

Alla Nazimova to Be Seen at the Hamburger Majestic in New Repertoire—"Grand Army Man" at Burbank — "Spring Chicken" First Time Here.

Leila Burton Wells's new military play, "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," will have its first production on any stage at the Belasco Monday night.

An extraordinary amount of local interest is centered upon the presentation of Mrs. Wells's play and the assemblage that will view the initial performance will not only be one of the largest of the year, but it will represent the social element of the city better perhaps than has any theatrical gathering of recent years. All of the boxes and loges have been secured by well known social leaders, while numerous blocks of seats have been sold for theater parties.

Much secrecy is being maintained concerning the story of "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," and the only information that emanates from the Belasco management is to the effect that the play is founded on fact; that the story has to do with the sentencing of a Colonel's son by the father and the subsequent escape and ultimate salvation of the boy through the efforts of the girl to whom he is engaged. The first act of the play happens at Fort Meade, N. D., while the succeeding three acts are located at Fort McKinley in the Philippines. The scenic portion of the production will represent the best work of Artist Brunton of the Belasco forces and the military "atmosphere" will be reproduced with exceptional fidelity.

Lewis S. Stone will have the role of Julian Allen, the son of Colonel Allen, in command of Fort Meade and afterwards at Fort McKinley. William Yerance will be the Colonel Allen of the performance, while Frank Camp will be cast as Captain Desmond, his Adjutant. Eleanor Gordon as the heroine of the play will have a capital chance to do some uncommonly telling acting. Helene Sullivan will have the most important part that has come to her during her career at the local Belasco. Richard Vivian, Charles Ruggles, Charles Giblyn, Adele Farrington, Emma Lowry, Herbert Rawlinson, Harry Andrews and the others of the stock organization, will all be in the cast of "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," while the play will serve to introduce John J. Kennedy as a regular member of the Belasco forces.

"The Case of Sergeant Wilde" is the first of a series of new plays that will be given at the Belasco during the season and the rehearsals would seem to uphold the prophecy of the management that it will prove to be a splendidly well written drama, full of intensely dramatic situations, a love story of infinite interest and with sufficient comedy to provide the necessary relief from the more serious scenes.

Mme. Nazimova, one of the most important of the Independent stars and unquestionably one of the greatest English speaking actresses in the world, will begin a week's engagement at Hamburger's Majestic Theater tomorrow evening, including Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday matinees. About two years ago Nazimova made her first appearance in this city and so favorable an impression did she create at that time that it has been frequently commented upon with regret that she had not since appeared here. Today Nazimova is unique among the great actresses of the world. Her genius is of such an original mould that she can be likened to no other woman of the stage, past or present.

During her stay here Mme. Nazimova will present three plays—two of them absolute novelties in this city. On Monday and Tuesday evenings and Wednesday afternoon "Little Eyolf" will be presented as the opening bill. This is one of the last plays that Ibsen wrote and by many critics it is considered one of the best. It immediately preceded his "John Gabriel Borkman" and "When the Dead Awake," and like them showed a tendency to forsake the symbolism so characteristic of Ibsen's earlier plays and to get something of the Masterlinckian touch of fantasy. There are even occasional expositions of passion that is quite as red-blooded as any which are so prevalent among the modern French and Italian dramatists.

Rita Allmers (the character played by Nazimova) is perhaps the most human that Ibsen ever drew. Rita is a thoroughly impetuous woman of the vital, healthy type, and the play reveals her attitude toward a husband who is absorbed in the love of his child. The child is a cripple, and the wife watches the development of the father's love for the child with a jealousy that is dynamic. Her love for her husband is not of the pacific sort. She demands absorbing devotion, but receives nothing but coldness and indifference. At this point the Rat Wife appears. She lures rats to the water, where they are drowned, and one day Eyolf follows her, and he, too, is drowned. In the second act Rita is seen to be jealous of the dead child, jealous of its absorption of Alfred's mind. He tries to place the blame upon her and tells her that he never loved her—that he married her for her "gold and green forests." Man and wife sit opposite each other and wrestle with destiny. The spirit of the dead child is felt to exercise an influence over both. Alfred suggests suicide, but it is distasteful to both. The two finally join hands and agree to take up life as they find it. Like few other plays of the author of "Little Eyolf" it has a "not-exactly-happy-but-a-comfortable" ending. In the role of Rita, Nazimova is said to touch the very pinnacle of her art.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings and Thursday afternoon "A Doll's House" will be presented. This is one of Nazimova's earliest successes—her second play in English, as a matter of fact, and the character of Nora has always been one of the most popular in her repertoire. Starting as the lovable, bird-like child wife of the first act, and continuing through all the transcending tones of tragedy down to the divorce in the last act—Nazimova's characterization is different and more enjoyable than that of any other actress who has ever played the role. Nazimova's Nora will undoubtedly go down into theatrical history as one of the greatest characterizations of the era.

For the concluding performance on Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday afternoon "The Fairy Tale" will be given. This is a new play, which Nazimova herself produced for the first time in the English language at Chicago on the 12th of last September. "The Fairy Tale" is a translation by Nina Lewton from "Das Marchen," by Arthur Schnitzler, an Austrian author, who, although he ranks with Ibsen, Sudermann and Hauptmann in Germany and his native land, is virtually unknown here in America. Indeed, Nazimova has been the first actress of note to present any of his plays here. "The Fairy Tale" has always created widespread discussion, and there is little question but what it will be selected as the play to be given by Nazimova during her regular New York season when she returns to her own theater in January.

Inasmuch as "The Fairy Tale" has not been published in English and is not readily obtainable in this part of the country, even in German, a brief synopsis of it may not be out of place at this time. Fanny Theren (played by Nazimova) is a Viennese actress, who in her youth has had an affair with one Dr. Witte, and who finds that it pursues her through life like a nemesis. The play opens at the Theren home, where an older sister fears that her chances to marry may be spoiled by the stain on the family honor. Here Theodore Denner, a young author, brings hope and love into Fanny's soul by declaring in a moment of fervid idealism that "It is time that the world should be free from the fairy tale of the fallen woman." But circumstances make it difficult, overwhelmed with Fanny's love, to live up to his theories, and he is finally forced to admit that he is "not big enough" to do so. The final test comes when Fanny's success on the stage brings her an offer to go to Petersburg. To accept means to leave Denner; she lets him decide and when he advises her to go, throws back to him his own words. "Yes, yes," he cries, "perhaps it is a fairy tale, but there is another one a thousand times more treacherous and deceptive—the fairy tale of the woman who reformed."

Mme. Nazimova is bringing with her the entire Nazimova Theater Company, of which the leading man is Brandon Tynan, who has been with the star ever since she began to play in English. Mr. Tynan will appear as Alfred Allmers in "Little Eyolf," as Thorwald Helmer in "A Doll's House" and as Theodore Denner in "The Fairy Tale." Others in the company are Messrs. L. Race Dunrobin, Fred L. Tiden, Reginald Mason, Orlando Daly, Thomas Russell, Edward R. Mawson, William Hasson, Mrs. Jacques Marin, Miss Gertrude Berkeley, Miss Theresa Maxwell-Conover, Marie Allen and Elsie Esmond.

Two plays are linked inseparably with the name of the character actor, David Warfield—"The Music Master," and "The Grand Army Man." The latter was his second piece, and it will be played at the Burbank next week, for the first time by any stock company. This is by personal arrangement with David Belasco himself.

The spirit of the G.A.R. runs through the play from beginning to end. The scenes are laid in a village in the Middle West, where the G.A.R. Corps and the Women's Auxiliary are the centers of all social activity. Wes' Bigelow is the "Grand Army Man," a beautiful character, gentle and optimistic. He has his enemies, however, and when a boy he has adopted and loves as his own son, misappropriates some money belonging to the corps, having been buncoed on a trip to the city, these enemies insist upon prosecution of the boy. One of the most pathetic scenes ever devised is where the old veteran, having scraped together sufficient money to pay the boy's shortage, learns that money cannot save the lad and the law must take its course. The transition from the old man's happiness at getting the money together, and his heart-break at learning the truth, is one of the supreme situations in the dramatic literature of all time.

But there is comedy in the play, too, and the spirit of patriotism, so that it is not all tears and grief. All the quaint characters of the little village in the Middle West combine to form as effective a picture as can be imagined. A. Byron Beasley, who has been making a close study of the role of Wes' Bigelow during the two weeks of musical comedy just ended, will play the Warfield part, and it should be one of the best things he ever has done in Los Angeles, as it is a remarkably drawn characterization, and also makes a strong appeal to the sympathies of the audience.

Ferris Hartman will offer, for this week, "The Spring Chicken." This is the first time that this musical comedy has ever been given by a stock organization anywhere, and is the first presentation of the play in the West.

who will be seen in Los Angeles this week. Especially to be noted are Frank Bacon, whose performance in "The Fortune Hunter," at the Mason, has been one of the triumphs of the year; Liza Lehmann, who will make her first appearance in Los Angeles; Achille Alberti, distinguished veteran of the Bevani Opera Company, which is closing a highly successful engagement, and Lewis S. Stone, to be seen in the principal part of Leila Burton Wells's new play, "The Case of Sergeant Wilde," tomorrow night at the Belasco Theater.

good as its title and is said to be one of the best musical plays of the time. It was first produced by George Edwardes at his London Gaiety Theater and after a triumphant tour of England and the continent, it was secured by Richard Carle, who Americanized it, after which it duplicated its London success.

Perhaps the fact that five of England's best known musical play writers were concerned in its production is responsible for its success, for the lyrics are by George Grossmith, Jr., Adrian Ross and Percy Greenbank while the music is from the pens of Ivan Caryll and Lionel Monckton; however, part of its worth is due to the Americanizing process of Richard Carle. Traced through all of these hands it was adapted from Jaime and Duval's "Coquin de Printemps."

First of all "The Spring Chicken" is a big fun show, full of bright lines and hilarious comedy situations, while it is full of the breeziest variety of musical numbers.

The story is principally woven about four characters, Gustave Babori, a lawyer; Mr. Girdle, Babori's father-in-law and their respective wives. Both are staid business men in every season of the year but spring, and when the first sparrow is heard, they both shave their faces and start out on a little lark, making engagements from spring to spring with their lady friends at the Crimson Butterfly restaurant. They are discovered and traced by their wives which leads to a variety of complications which result in an almost continuous laugh. The scenes of the play are laid in Paris and give fine opportunity for brilliant stage settings. The Hartman chorus will work "over-time" for it is replete with such song numbers as "In Seville," "Waiting for a Certain Girl," "In the Spring Time," "Well I Guess," and "I've Come Along to Paris," and others.

Ferris Hartman as Mr. Girdle will have unlimited fun-making opportunities, as will Walter De Leon as Gustave Babori, while Marta Golden will be seen as Mrs. Girdle, Myrtle Dingwall as Delucie Babori and the others of the company will be cast to advantage.

"The Fortune Hunter," Winchell Smith's comedy, will be seen at the Mason Operhouse for another week, beginning Monday evening, November 21.

Briefly summarized, the plot of "The Fortune Hunter" concerns the pursuit of an heiress by a young man who has been an abject failure, Nathaniel Duncan, by name, played by Fred Niblo. A successful friend has rescued him from the depths of despair, staked him to a bankroll and started him on a sure road to success. Young Duncan agrees to follow certain rules that his friend, a successful promoter of schemes, has laid down. Consequently the second act finds Duncan domiciled in a small inland town, a typical country village with its inevitable characters. Following the rules of the game, he goes regularly to church, forswears drinking, smoking, gambling and profanity, and altogether impresses the townspeople as a youth either nearly perfect or wholly demented. An old man with a wonderful ingenuity for inventing, but no idea of business, has a run-down drug store, where his principal occupation, since his shelves are bare, is perfecting a new gas burner. The old inventor has a daughter, Betty, who is a slave to the profitless store, a girl of good character but soured by hopeless poverty. Into the store comes Duncan looking for work—one of the rules—and he succeeds in getting this old man to take him on without salary. Duncan rescues the inventor from a hard old money lender by taking up his note, pays an old bill and gets credit restored. So the third act shows a handsome place, fully stocked and enjoying most of the trade of the town, all the result of Duncan's energy. Morever, Duncan is pursued by the banker's daughter, and, against his desire, he is forced into an engagement, she doing the proposing and love making. Then Betty, who has been sent away to school, returns wholly transformed and Duncan discovers that he has made the mistake of his life. However, he succeeds by a clever ruse in having the banker's daughter declare the engagement broken and he and Betty are standing in rapt embrace in a pouring rain when the final curtain falls.

The announcement that the new Orpheum bill opening Monday matinee, November 21, is headed by Augusta Glose, is sure to be hailed with delight by lovers of cleverness in vaudeville. Miss Glose (and be sure to accent the "e" if you would be correct) is one of those who have carved individual niches for themselves in the hall of variety fame. Her planologues and spoken songs are quite apart from the usual; she has that charm of personality and that "way with her" that sets her upon a pedestal of her own. Her songs, as she delivers them, reveal her rare talent for imitations and character drawing, and it is little less than a revelation to listen to her descriptive verses, to which she plays her own piano accompaniment.

Another most welcome announcement is that the "big scream" this coming week will be Willard Simms and his company, in "Flinders' Furnished Flat." No one can fail to remember Simms, who, as Flinders, takes a flat and tries to paper it himself, with that cheerful idiocy with which such Mutts are gifted. How he succeeds in smearing his paste from fly gallery to vampire trap needs no further allusion. This act is a classic, in farce, and Simms's genial humor and song as he cheerfully goes on ruining everything in which he comes into contact, is equally fine.

In offering "The Continental Waiter," Spissel Bros. & Co., have drawn not so much upon their imaginations as upon actual observations abroad. Whoever has traveled has met with this same individual, who always brings you soup when you want ice cream, and has one finger in the beer as his other hand is out for a tip. Frank Spissell, in traveling abroad, came across just such a waiter who in one night broke more crockery than the profits of the cafe were able to cover. You make his acquaintance too when you see this hit.

Leona Thurber and Harry Madison have an unconventional but very funny skit, comprising song, dance and dialogue, called "On a Shopping Tour;" it, too, is a laugh from start to finish. Miss Thurber is a charming young woman of striking Junoesque figure, and Mr. Madison has gift of acrobatic dancing so the combination seems good for much merriment.

La Tortajada, in her Spanish pantomie, continues another week, as do John P. Wade & Co. in "Marse Shelby's Chicken Dinner," the Flying Martins, and Quinn and Mitchell.

Commencing with the usual matinee on Monday Sullivan and Considine will offer another bill of six acts at the Los Angeles Theater.

First among the newcomers is Franklyn Ardell and his company offering his timely political comedy sketch, "The Suffragette." If woman's rights work out ultimately in the manner in which Mr. Ardell works them out in his clever little farce "The Suffragette," then politics will be one sweet comedy instead of the tragedy some of the opponents of suffrage seek to make it appear. Mr. Ardell, assisted by clever Ann Walters, makes the biggest kind of a laugh of the whole suffragette movement and yet does it in such a manner than not even the most enthusiastic proponent could find reason for offense. The climax of this riotous little playlet is an anti-suffrage oration by Mr. Ardel, delivered from the top of his office desk; with his wife, who is also his rival for the office of Mayor, as his audience.

Another set that should prove popular is Roland Carter and company in the musical travesty, "Vacation Time." Mr. Carter is a good singer and just as clever a comedian and has associated with him two other splendid singing voices in those of Ed Wright and Charles Church. The scene of the skit is laid in jail with Carter as "Murphy," a "hick" character; Wright as "Blotz," a funny little German confined behind the bars and Church as the lady-like warden, outside of the bars. Both from the comedy standpoint as well as viewed musically it has proved one of the most entertaining features that has ever been shown on the S. & C. circuit.

Charming Hetty Urma will also be seen on the new bill. She is of the vanguard of the army of European acts that is now on its way over this circuit. Miss Urma is gifted with a sweet singing voice and possesses personal magnetism. Others on the new bill will be Kate Fowler, who has come to be known as the "Marie Tempest of Vaudeville," and who will offer her "somewhat different" pianologue; Alex Brisson, who has won renown for his contortionist act, and Christy and Lee, musical novelists.

A feast of comedy is promised by the

HOLLAND'S THRIFTY QUEEN.

Owns Fourteen Thousand Acres of Ranch Land in the State of Alabama.

[Philadelphia Public edger:] Queen Wilhelmina is part owner of 14,000 acres of land in Alabama and it is her plan to raise cattle, pigs and chickens on the farm. She will not, like Marie Antoinette, herself appear in the experiment, to play at being a milkmaid or a shepherdess; neither will she, in emulation of Queen Alexandra and her ladies-in-waiting, give her personal supervision to the business of butter making and marketing the products of model dairies. She is too busy ruling "brave little Holland" and taking care of the Princess Juliana. She will have to delegate her heifers, "lowing at the skies," to the care of local agents, but there can be no doubt that with the characteristic and traditional sagacity of the House of Orange she will follow with avid interest the progress of the agrarian experiment.

Queen Victoria, as is well-known, was one of the thriftest landladies of Great Britain. As Chaucer would have put it, she "well knew her purchase and her rent." She required a particular account of leases and mortgages and a just reckoning of what was periodically due from each of her tenants. She was as much a business woman as a sovereign. The vast fortune of the late malodorous King Leopold of Belgium came chiefly from his rubber and ivory enterprises in the Congo. Just as President Loubet of France, the son of a farmer, was happiest when he came nearest to the soil, so the present King of Denmark has learned homely and useful trades by which, if compelled to abdicate, he could support himself.

There are not many modern rulers wholly incapable of earning their own livings—or at least of managing their own private business affairs. If the Emperor of Japan could have his own way, he would probably prefer to be a minor poet—he is said to be an expert in the manufacture of couplets and verses not exceeding a dozen lines in length, King George V, if he should lose his crown, might sell his stamp collection—he is the world's most eminent philatelist.

of the Week and Coming Events in Los Angeles Society.

Samuel Jackson Whitmore, reception at Hotel Alexandria Monday afternoon.

all, these Los Angeles girls will travel 20,000 miles before returning, March next.

Mrs. Cline Hostess.

Mrs. William Hamilton Cline was hostess at a box party at the Gadski concert, Thursday afternoon, at the Auditorium. Her guests were Mrs. Arthur Letts, Mrs. Raymond Bradford, Mrs. William Lacy and Miss Pauline Vollmer. Later tea was served at Hotel Alexandria.

In San Francisco.

The Misses Edna and Gladys Letts, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Letts of Hollywood, are visiting friends in San Francisco.

Mrs. Riordan Hostess.

Mrs. D. M. Riordan, of No. 943 South Burlington avenue, entertained with a soiree, Wednesday evening, having as honored guests Katherine Fisk, Helen Bertram, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lillis, Miss Orcutt, Mr. Brooks and Florence Stone. About ninety guests were present.

Rev. Owens Honored.

In honor of Rev. Timon E. Owens, rector of the Church of the Ascension, a reception was given Tuesday evening at the residence of Joseph C. Whittington, No. 214 North Breed street.

Good News.

Miss Brownie Coulter, the charming young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Coulter, of South Figueroa street, returned last evening from the North, where she has been attending school.

At Coronado.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren E. Rollins are guests at Hotel Coronado, Coronado Beach.

Charming Party.

A charming event of Friday evening was the dancing party given by Mrs. J. Ross Clark and her niece, Miss Sally Bonner, at No. 710 West Adams street, in honor of Miss Florence Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Modini-Wood of No. 20 St. James Park, who will be introduced next month at a large tea given by her mother, and for Miss Mildred Burnett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Burnett of Beacon street, who will also be introduced at a large party, and Miss Jane Rollins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Bowman Rollins of No. 700 West Twenty-eighth street, and Miss Amy Marie Norton, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. John H. Norton of West Twenty-eighth street, who made their formal bows the early part of the season. The home was decorated with chrysanthemums and roses. In the dining room, where supper was served, a filet lace and English embroidered cloth covered the table. A centerpiece of pink Killarney roses and maiden hair ferns and silver shaded candelabra completed the attractive arrangement.

Mrs. Chaffee Hostess.

Mrs. Adna R. Chaffee of No. 987 Magnolia avenue was hostess at a smart luncheon given yesterday for Miss Florence Wood, Miss Amy Marie Norton and Miss Jane Rollins. A dainty centerpiece of pink roses brightened the table, at which covers were laid for Miss Elizabeth Wood, Miss Katherine Banning, Miss Elizabeth Hicks, Miss Lucille Clark, Miss Mildred Burnett, Miss Elizabeth Heim, Miss Anita Patton, Miss Lucy Clark, Miss Emma Conroy, Miss Sally Bonner and Miss Kate Van Nuys.

Miss Utley to Give Tea.

Miss Marjorie Utley, the young daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Utley of No. 963 Menlo avenue, will entertain with an informal tea party at her home for the Misses Lucille Clark, Jane Rollins and Elizabeth Hicks. About ninety of the younger girls will be entertained, and December 1 has been chosen for the date of the party.

For Miss Burnett.

About 200 guests were present yesterday afternoon at the tea and dancing party given at the Los Angeles Country Club by the Misses Sue and Fannie Carpenter, in compliment to Miss Mildred Burnett. Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Nave of Coronado, who have taken apartments at the Hinman for a month, were among the guests. Mrs. Nave was formerly Miss Clara Carpenter, sister of the hostesses and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Carpenter of No. 1153 West Twenty-seventh street. Pink flowers decorated the rooms.

Another Debutante.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Burnett of Beacon street will introduce their daughter, Miss Mildred, at a dancing party, to be given at Kramer's the evening of December 16. Miss Burnett was recently graduated from Mount Vernon Seminary, and her debut next month will be of interest to both local and eastern society. With the exception of the assisting ladies the guest list will be restricted to members of the younger dancing set only.

To Entertain.

Again the Country Club will be the scene of a delightful party. Miss Katherine Stearns of No. 27 St. James Park, will be the hostess and the guests will be entertained on the afternoon of December 3. It is to be a tea and dancing party and the honored guests will be eight young debutantes, who are Miss Jane Rollins, Miss Mildred Burnett, Miss Florence Wood, Miss Juliet Borden, Miss Sally Bonner, Miss Amy Marie Norton, Miss Katherine Spence and Miss Elizabeth Hicks.

For Mrs. Wilcox.

Mrs. George Drake Ruddy and Miss Helen Mathewson will entertain with a sacred concert this afternoon at the Hershey Arms in compliment to Ella Wheeler Wilcox. In the receiving line will be Mrs. Harmon David Ryus, Mrs. Oliver P. Clark, Mrs. David C. McCan, Mrs. Roland Paul, Mrs. John L. Von Blon, Mrs. William Irving Hollingsworth, Mrs. Walter Brode, Mrs. Louise M. George, Mrs. Margaret C. La Grange, Mrs. William Frances Kennedy, Mrs. Egelhoff-Rundell, Mrs. R. E. Blight, Mrs. Hugh Harrison, Mrs. Richard Hovey, Mrs. George Edward Graham, Mrs. John D. Works, Mrs. E. R. Bradley, Mrs. Reuben Shettler, Mrs. Rufus L. Horton, Mrs. Katherine Kent Althouse, Mrs. L. F. Hildebrand, Mrs. Edward C. Bellows, Mrs. E. R. Boyden, Mrs. Josephine M. Luthe, Mrs. Sidel Lawrence, Mrs. R. B. Williams, Mrs. H. K. Williamson, Mrs. Willits J. Hole, Mrs. Charles Farwell Edson, Mrs. F. C. Perry, Mrs. M. N. F. Bridgham, Mrs. H. L. Story, Mrs. Gertrude Adams-Fisher, Miss Frances Wills, Miss Fannie Dillon, Miss Alice Goff, Miss Jean Bridgham, Miss Agnes Hole, Miss Margaret Miller, Miss Blanche Ruby, Miss Edna Letts Miss Zerba Avery, Miss Dorothy Duffy, Miss Viva Dillon, Miss Louise George and Miss Edith Cutter.

Approaching Wedding.

Unusual interest attaches to the forthcoming marriage in the East of Miss Sarah Farquhar Chandler of Chicago to John Oliver Knight of this city. The bride-elect is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Chandler, who reside at the Walton, No. 878 North Clark street, Chicago.

The wedding will take place Saturday, December 3, at the Chandler residence, with only relatives and a few intimate friends present. Miss Josephine Carr of St. Paul, a cousin, will be the bride's only attendant, and Ward B. Sawyer of Evanston will serve Mr. Knight as best man.

The ceremony will be read by Dr. S. A. B. Mercer, an old friend of the family. Miss Chandler has a wide acquaintance in society and club circles and her family has long been established in the life of Chicago. The marriage is the result of one of the numerous pretty romances growing out of winters spent in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Knight, after a brief eastern and southern jaunt, will reside in this city.

Informal Afternoon.

A profusion of great shaggy white and yellow chrysanthemums were used to ornament the home of Mrs. Duncan Reynolds in Alhambra Wednesday afternoon, when she entertained informally with bridge. At the close of the games dainty refreshments were served. Those present were Mrs. Charles C. Hudson, Mrs. Samuel Kennedy and Miss Margaret Reynolds.

Another Tea Party.

Mrs. G. Ivan Peoples and Miss Semone Ruch, who returned recently from a tour of the Orient, entertained with a tea party at the home of the Face Cleared Beautifully

All Traces of Acne Are Gone—Poslam's Power Over All Skin Diseases.

"For six years I had what some skin specialists term 'acne,'" writes Miss Olive Brown, 997 West Delaware avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. "I doctored with some of the best physicians, but instead of improving it became worse. I used poslam faithfully, and after a month my face has cleared up beautifully, without a single scar. However, I still continue to use poslam as a cleanser and preventer, and then, too, it has such a soothing effect."

Poslam is probably the most widely recommended remedy available to the public. Any one will appreciate why this is so after sending to the Emergency Laboratories, 32 West Twenty-fifth street, New York City, for a sample (mailed free in plain wrapper) and seeing its work demonstrated in the quick removal of pimples, rashes, eruptions, undue redness or in clearing the complexion over night. Poslam should be used whenever the skin ails. Worst cases of eczema, tetter, scabies, itch and like surface skin troubles yield to it readily, itching being stopped at once. Poslam is sold by all druggists, particularly the Owl Drug Co., in two sizes, at 50 cents and $2.

Mrs. William Reynolds and Mrs. Andrew Swanfeldt. Members present were Mrs. Fred Ussher, Mrs. John Rupard, Mrs. Al Stein, Mrs. Claude Cole, Mrs. Van Lansingh, Mrs. H. D. Castle, Mrs. Jule Howard and Miss Edla Swanfeldt.

Week End Party.

Mrs. Clinton DeWitte was hostess at a week end party given at her beautiful ranch home in San Dimas. Those included went in automobiles, and a most delightful time was enjoyed by all. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. George C. Bush, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Huntington, Harold Huntington, Miss Mary Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Packer and William Carr. The affair was planned in honor of the birthday anniversary of Harold Huntington and an elaborate dinner was served. Yellow Cactus dalhia graced the center of the table, and a large birthday cake.

Theater Party.

The Friday Afternoon "500" Club entertained with a theater party yesterday afternoon at the Burbank, and a pleasant hour was spent later at Levy's. Special guests for the afternoon were Mmes. H. D. Castle, Claude Cole, James Luckenbaugh and Andrew Swanfeldt. Members included Mmes. Fred German, Fred Myers, A. Stephenson, Sidney Holman, Dallas Jones, A. Washington, Miss Ada Groves, Mrs. Howard Donnel, Mrs. William Reynolds, Mrs. Al. Stein and Mrs. Jack Rose.

From New York.

Mrs. H. L. Waterous, of New York City, arrived this week and will spend the winter in this city.

Informal Affair.

Mrs. Walter Everett and her daughter, Mrs. Clifford Richard Horne, of No. 927 Beacon street, entertained with an informal bridge whist party, Thursday afternoon. For the affair the home was decorated with yellow chrysanthemums. The guests were Mrs. Hattie Perrin, Mrs. Geo. Stratton, Mrs. Tout, Mrs. Edward Mansbach, Mrs. E. R. Wolcott, Mrs. Nefferly, Mrs. Emmitt Nott, Mrs. Charles H. Faulkner, Mrs. John L. Murphy, Mrs. John Newell, Mrs. George Pease, Mrs. Arthur F. Godin, Mrs. Lester Robinson, Mrs. H. M. Binford, Mrs. D. K. Dickinson, Mrs. Frank Bradford, Mrs. J. C. Ferrall and Mrs. Clifford Fleming.

Mrs. Hamilton Hostess.

Members of the Monday Musical Club were recent guests of Mrs. Roth Hamilton of Francis street.

Luncheon and Bridge.

Mrs. Edward M. Guthrie and Mrs. N. B. Carter entertained with a luncheon and bridge party Thursday afternoon. Yellow chrysanthemums and sweet peas brightened the home.

Personal Mention.

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. List of South Pasadena, entertained a party of seven at Hotel Mt. Washington at dinner one day during the week.

Mrs. Milton Slade of Seattle, is staying at Hotel Mt. Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Richardson of this city entertained a party of five to dinner last Sunday at Hotel Mt. Washington.

Dr. and Mrs. Morris of Denver, were guests of Mrs. Morrison to dinner on Wednesday evening. Mrs. Morrison is a guest at Hotel Mt. Washington.

Large Benefit.

One of the social events of the season is the large Thanksgiving and Christmas bazaar which is to be held at the beautiful home of Mrs. P. G. Hubert, No. 2144 Hobart boulevard, next Tuesday. The entire lower floor will be converted into booths for the occasion and will be decorated with hundreds of bells and palms. In the evening there is to be a musical programme. Near the entrance will be the beautiful fancy booth which will have articles to suit. Those assisting at this booth will be Mrs. Walter Brown, Mrs. J. Lowry, Mrs. G. Williams, Mrs. L. C. Erdt, Mrs. T. Vermilye, Mrs. T. P. Robertson and Dr. Cora Tasker. The Thanksgiving booth will be in charge of Mmes. Beall, Houghton and Billings. The apron booth will be attended by Mrs. W. Slater, Mrs. Krieger and Miss M. Butcher. Candy booth will be under the direction of Miss Draper and Miss Vincent, who will have every kind of home-made candy one can think of.

In the large dining room refreshments will be served by daintily dressed young girls. Then there will be for the little folks a huge Christmas tree ablaze with electric lights, with a real live "Santa" to give them any article upon the tree they may desire for only 10 cents. Those assisting Mrs. Hubert receive at this fete will be Mmes. Fred Howland, Alfred M. Smith, Alfred W. Morgan, C. R. Fagge, E. D. Hudson, T. W. Robinson, B. L. Fisher and F. O. F. Harbeson.

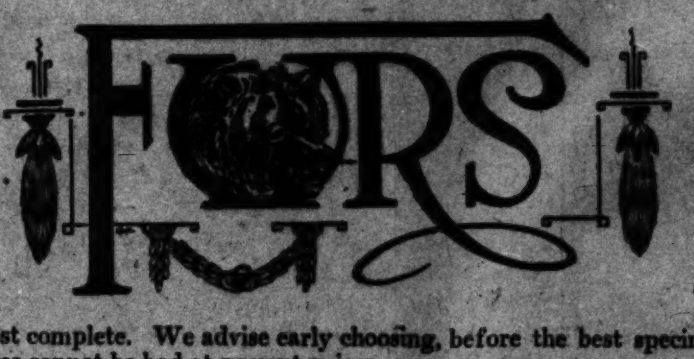
Glove Reliability

Better or more fashionable Gloves than we show are not made. Our assortments for the holiday trade are now complete to the last detail.

N. B. Blackstone Co.
DRY GOODS



Furs of quality last a lifetime. Inferior furs, imitations, etc., possess neither style nor wearing qualities. We show only the genuine, the dependable, the reliable grades, and we guarantee every piece to be exactly as represented. Our styles are authoritative; varieties and assortments are now most complete. We advise early choosing, before the best specimens are taken, as duplicates cannot be had at present prices.

Mink

Mink is always the staple fur. Other styles may come and go, but Mink endures. It is rich, luxurious and never out of fashion. No fear of a mistake in choosing Mink.

We show natural Mink stoles, scarfs, collars, muffs and complete sets in all wanted styles; natural Mink remember, not blended.

Mink Neck Pieces . . . . . $10 to $400
Mink Muffs . . . . $30 to $150

Skunk

Skunk is this season's fashionable fad, and it well may be. Surely no fur is more charming than these sets shown in broad stole and flat muffs combined with chiffon and satin. None other possess the same degree of style, of character, of individuality. It is the aristocrat of this season's exhibit.

Scarfs, Collars, Stoles and Muffs.

Skunk Neck Pieces . . . . . $20 to $100
Skunk Muff . . . . $35 to $80

Ermine

Ermine is the royal fur; Fashion's favorite fur for semi-dress occasions and evening wear. Our showing of Ermine is most complete and the prices we are able to quote are the most reasonable we have ever known.

Ermine Neck Pieces . . . . $25 to $150
Ermine Muffs . . . . $40 to $200

Black Lynx

In black furs our line is most extensive including Lynx, Lynx Cat, Fox, Wolf and other popular black pelts.

We show handsome BLACK SETS from $9.00 on up to the finest Black Lynx at $350.00.

Aside from the above our showing of other standard furs is most gratifying.

Shop Early

Make an effort to do your Christmas shopping early. Early in the day and early in the season. You will be the chief gainer. Early assortments are more complete. Streets are less crowded and, above all, there's a lot of satisfaction in the thought that the holiday shopping is a thing of the past.

Millinery Supremacy

Discriminating dressers look to Blackstone's for all that is new, correct, authentic in Millinery styles. Nor do they look in vain.

Nowhere else in the West are assortments so complete, or varieties so broad. One may spend hours here and see but half there is to be seen. Every day, almost every hour, some new creation is placed before the admiring gaze of visitors to this interesting section of our, store.

Hawkes Cut Glass
Make Rare Gifts
for the Christmas

"Glittering like some great jewel." A piece of Hawkes Cut Glass is indisputably the perfect gift for Christmas.

If you would choose a gift where regal beauty and great utility combine, you will not find such perfect union, so beautifully expressed, as in cut glass.

"Hawkes Cut Glass" is world famous, it is conceded to be the premier line. "In color the sought-for perfect white; in design, an expression of the finest art." Only such specimens as are absolutely perfect are allowed to go to the trade, and as protection every piece carries the "Hawkes" label.

It is because of this perfection that this store offers you "Hawkes" glass. If there was any more perfect ware we would handle that instead of this line, but there is none. Our cut glass room is resplendent and dazzling in its beauty. A sight you'll enjoy. Always open to the public.

Musicale.

The handsome home of Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt, Buena Vista street, was the scene of a charming musical Wednesday morning. Frank Patterson gave a talk on the symphony concert that was held Friday afternoon, and a delightful programme was presented.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

CHIEF among the larger social gatherings of last week was that at the Valley Hunt Club Saturday evening when 150 club members celebrated Founders Day in an informal manner. An electroscope was used to show a series of views of early days in Pasadena and interspersed among these pictures were photographs of former presidents and officers of the club taken in infancy or in costumes of the early eighties. Groups of old-timers and scenes of festivities of twenty-five years ago made an amusing collection. Supper followed and as a club reunion the affair was a success.

Mrs. Murray Bartlett of Manila, who has been the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Folsom, for several months, will leave for her home this week. She was the guest of honor at several smart functions recently. Mrs. John W. Hugus, who will accompany her on a visit to Manila, shared the honors on several occasions. One of the most elaborate of these functions was the luncheon given Thursday by Mrs. Fred Elmer Wilcox of South Orange Grove avenue. Pink chrysanthemums were used in ornamenting the table where covers were laid for Mme. H. Page Warden, Charles Cranz Perkins, Eva M. Kelley, Charles D. Callery, Harry Gray, Tod Ford, Wm. Park, Benjamin Folsom, Arthur A. Libby, Hugus, Bartlett and Wilcox.

Mrs. Eugene E. Hewlett of Oak Knoll was the hostess Tuesday at an elaborately appointed luncheon given for her cousin, Mrs. Neal Gung of Monterey, who is a guest here. Autumn flowers and fruits were artistically combined in a table decoration. Covers were laid for Mmes. William Park, Howard E. Huntington, Robert A. Rowan, Robert Pitcairn, Jr., Charles Crans Perkins, Charles D. Callery, Harrison I. Drummond, John W. Hugus, Robert Flint and H. Page Warden.

Miss Elsie Stambach of North Euclid avenue entertained a number of her friends Wednesday afternoon in honor of Miss Marguerite Egbert, who will wed Jonathan French Scott Tuesday evening. The guest of honor was given a shower of linen and a collation was served. Those present were Mrs. Ben Douglas of Los Angeles, Mrs. Harold Needham, Misses Jane Rowland, Elizabeth McMechen, Marion Toedt, Katharine Wadsworth, Mary Wadsworth, Ethel Wolfensetter, Sarah White, Helen Stroughton, Anita Hertel, Louise Hawkins, Bessie Mattison, Florence Thomson, Geraldine Barry, Margaret Sherk, Bessie Allen.

Mrs. Walter Simons of East California street entertained Tuesday with a five hundred party where decorations and prizes were suggestive of the holiday season. Those who enjoyed the hospitality were Mmes. R. R. Munger, Edward King, Charles H. Ward, Emil Bauer, C. H. Thomas, R. H. Halsted, Misses Louise Redding and Helen Ward.

"Hillcrest," the home of Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt of Buena Vista street, was the scene of a large gathering of Los Angeles and Pasadena society women Monday morning, who assembled to listen to an interesting lecture given by Frank Patterson upon the Los Angeles symphony program.

Mrs. Harriet Dyer Norton of West California street left Monday for Berkeley, where she will spend the holidays with her daughters, Mrs. Charles Coleman and Mabel Norton, both formerly of Pasadena.

Mrs. Eben P. Clapp entertained a few friends very informally at bridge at the Valley Hunt Club Monday afternoon. Those present were members of a small card club which meets weekly.

Mrs. Rudolph Schiffman of South Grand avenue gave a small but elaborately appointed luncheon Wednesday. Covers were laid for eight.

Miss Jessie Beaton of Cypress street entertained Tuesday evening in honor of her cousin, Miss Laura Repp who leaves this week for her home in Newton, Kas. Games and music entertained the guests and supper was served. Those present were: Misses Laura Hoffman, Mary Dawson, Ida Richards, Nida Ropp of San Dimas, Hattie Thomas, Hazel Johnson, Sylvia Rice, Nellie McDonough and Ada Barrows.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Allerton have returned from their summer home at Lake Geneva and are at their home on Fairview and Highland avenues.

Miss Ethel Parker of South El Molino avenue was the hostess Monday afternoon at a small musical where the programme was given by the St. Cecelia Club. Among those present were Mmes. Elmer Grey, Roy Kellogg, F. G. Crandall, Zobelin, Maynard Force Thayer, Cole, Fyfe, Misses Ouelett, Christian, and Smyser.

Mrs. R. B. Miller and daughter, Miss J. L. Miller of Madeline drive, have returned from a European tour of fourteen months.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Flint of Los Angeles have taken a bungalow at Oak Knoll for the winter. Mrs. Flint was formerly Miss Margaret Gray, niece of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gray of Oak Knoll.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hixon of La Crosse, Wis., who have spent many winters in Pasadena, have taken Columbia Hill, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Daggett, for the winter and will arrive here this week.

Gen. and Mrs. W. A. Kobbe of Del Rosa street are entertaining their son, Capt. Ferdinand Kobbe, who recently arrived from Alaska.

Mrs. Samuel T. Lockwood of South Madison avenue was the hostess Wednesday at a luncheon, where covers were laid for twelve.

Mrs. Frances Swann of Torrington place, East Colorado street, returned Wednesday from an eastern trip, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Boise, of Scranton, Pa.

Mrs. J. B. Robinson of Santa Barbara street arranged a pretty juvenile party Wednesday in celebration of the eighth birthday anniversary of her son, Barton. Masters Earl Barnes, Oscar Gray, Eric St. Clair, Miles Cobb, Wilbur Hastings, Wilbur Green and Raymond Brooks were present.

Mrs. Roy Kellogg of Maple Way entertained with a small tea Wednesday, arranged in honor of her mother, Mrs. C. A. Batterson, who will soon leave for the north. There were eighteen old friends present.

Mrs. F. G. Lockwood of South Madison avenue entertained the twelve members of her card club Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Krattak of North Michigan avenue celebrated the first anniversary of their wedding day Wednesday evening by entertaining friends.

Mrs. G. W. Drew of North Madison avenue gave a prettily appointed luncheon in honor of Mrs. Augustus Macdonald and Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Smith of Guanajuato, Mex.

Mrs. Harley F. Newall of North Hudson avenue was the hostess Wednesday at a five hundred party, where the score cards were in the form of Dutch girls in quaint costumes. Handsome prizes were awarded.

South Pasadena.

QUANTITIES of large shaggy chrysanthemums were used to decorate for the reception given Friday evening by the superintendent of schools, George C. Bush, and wife at their home No. 1511 El Centro street, in honor of the new teachers, the faculty and teachers only being invited. A musical programme was presented by Harriett B. Vail and Miss Harriett Wishard. Refreshments were served.

Mrs. Peter Hockenberry, No. 1040 Adeline avenue, has as her house guests her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Sellers of Wabash, Ind., and Miss Lulu Fenner of Noblesville, Ind., who will spend the holidays in this city.

The Fortnightly Five-hundred Club was entertained Saturday evening at the home of Mrs. O. A. Blatner, No. 826 Brent avenue. Prizes were won by Mr. and Mrs. William Carlin, and guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. William Carlin, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Waterman, Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Ritchie, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Bryant, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Harland, Mr. and Mrs. Chester R. Brasier, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bingham, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Tower.

Mrs. L. McEniry and daughter Margaret of Cleveland, O., are the guests of Micheal S. McEniry, No. 500 El Centro street.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Leavitt and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sutton were guests at a dinner party given last evening by Mrs. Albert Judd at her home, No. 1527 Ramona avenue.

Mrs. Alice N. Keith entertained the Knocker's Club, of which she is a member at her home, No. 1015 Fremont avenue, Wednesday afternoon. Present were Mrs. Roy Stephens, Mrs. James R. Mathews and daughter Barbara.

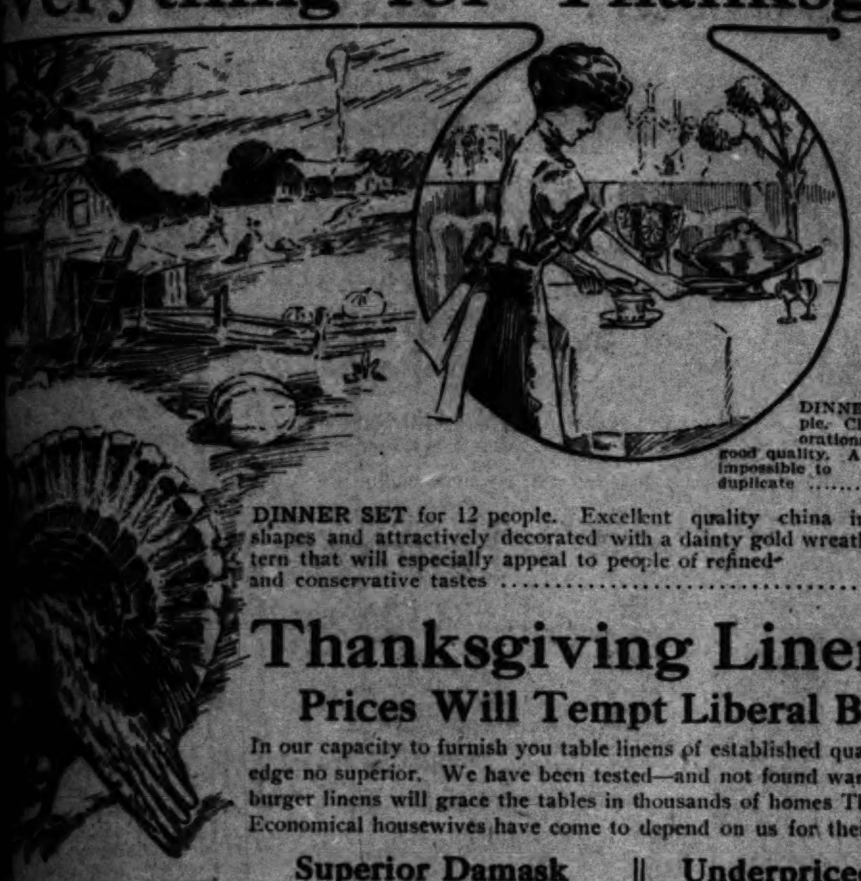
verything for Thanksgiving at Substantial Savings Here



In preparing the dining room—and the home in general, for that matter—for Thanksgiving day, remember how much better The Big White Store is able to serve you! The larger stocks—the special preparation of months—the ability to make the lowest prices—the quick service and delivery—all concentrated towards making Thanksgiving shopping a pleasure and a profit! Think of that—and shop here Monday! You will congratulate yourself later on the saving of money, time and energy!

Decorated Dinnerware Underpriced

Saturday's selling was an unqualified success! From the time the doors opened throngs of eager, delightedly enthusiastic people were looking, comparing and buying dainty dishes to grace their Thanksgiving tables! It's time for unbounded enthusiasm when you can buy exquisitely decorated china—not one or two patterns only, but 200 or 300—at about half the cost of plain white ware! Time to match up your broken sets and buy new china lavishly. Such opportunities come but seldom! We bought the entire surplus stock of the biggest pottery in this country at a price far below the cost of manufacture and pass the benefit along to you. This assortment is so large and so varied that you can readily match the china you are now using, no matter what the decoration may be, or at least find something to blend with it pleasingly. Here are some suggestive prices:

Little Home Aids On How to Be Beautiful

BY MADAME MAREE.

Questions on Beauty topics will be answered by mail when stamped envelope is enclosed.

For a Lovely Complexion.

Many complexions are ruined with cheap soaps and harmful face powders, which clog the pores, produce blackheads, pimply conditions and coarsen the skin. I often recommend cerol for massaging, as it cleans and clears the skin, acts as a food to the delicate tissues, and does not grow hair. You can prepare this cream in your own home, at little cost, by dissolving three ounces of cerol in a pint of water which has been brought to a boil, stirring well until of a thick consistency. Any druggist can supply cerol, and you will find it the smoothest and most delightful cream you ever used.

Answers to Queries.

Myra: That unnatural hairy growth is easily removed with powdered delol. Get an ounce from the druggist and mix a little with enough water to form a stiff paste, then spread thickly on hairy parts and in three minutes scrape off and the hairs are gone.

Lucille: The best Lister solution is made with powdered boro lister, and is especially good for sore or aching feet, or burns or wounds of any kind. To prepare, get an ounce of pure boro lister powder from your druggist and dissolve in a pint and a half of boiling water; when cool add eight ounces of alcohol. This is an antiseptic found in nearly every home and is splendid as a tooth wash or for catarrhal conditions.

Ida: Harsh winds often make the skin red and ugly, and I find an amarol solution is the simplest and nicest lotion of all. To prepare, get two ounces of amarol from your druggist, then dissolve in a pint of hot water and it is ready. Liberal applications after washing and drying the face and hands soon make the skin soft and pink, giving it a satiny glow.

Elsie: Artificial helps are easily detected, but if you use the Vaucaire treatment, which feeds the starved and shrunken tissues and builds up from the inside, you will soon have a pretty figure. To prepare this treatment, make a syrup with a cup and a half of sugar and water to make a pint and stir in an ounce of galiol (true) which you get at the drug store, then take one tablespoonful twice a day. This is the original and famous Vaucaire treatment so popular among French women.

Reader: Your friend is right. Unless immediate attention is given to your hair you may soon find even a switch insufficient. Shampooing twice a month for a while with egol and using beta-canthol as a tonic greatly stimulates the scalp and hair follicles and soon produces a luxurious growth of long, glossy hair. Any druggist can supply these ingredients at a small cost; and to make the tonic, pour a half pint of alcohol in a half pint of water, then add an ounce of beta-canthol. Apply every night for a month, then once a week.

A queer name for a sale, you'll say. Do department managers make mistakes in buying. Sure they do—the buyer who didn't wouldn't keep dependable merchandise coming to you at prices under the market. On the whole, we consider our buyers to be just as wide-awake, shrewd and keen for a bargain as any on the street. Yet they've made some mistakes. Some have overbought, tying up money that should be turning over and over.

Quick Relief From Asthma

Ascatco Prevents Choking Attacks, Clears Nasal Passages—Assures Free Breathing.

HAS CURED THOUSANDS.

Its Success in Respiratory Affections Almost Beyond Belief

The most surprising results ever accredited to any remedy for asthma, bronchitis and catarrh are those accomplished by the new specific—Ascatco. Thousands of chronic asthmatics have been cured by it, and these cures, after a lapse of years, are found to have been permanent. Choking attacks at night are prevented, nasal passages are cleared and the cause of the disease is removed surely and thoroughly. Ascatco is taken at home in 7-drop doses, twice daily, without interference with duties, without stomachic derangement and without the necessity for climatic change. Its action is so rapid that beneficial results are noted by the patient almost immediately.

Ascatco may be procured in two sizes (full month's treatment, $2.00; trial, 50 cents), at all good druggists, particularly The Owl Drug Co. A free sample will be sent by mail to anyone who will write to the Ascatco Laboratory, 21 West 38th St., New York City.

"Cawston Guarantees His Willow Plumes"

THIS announcement made at the beginning of the season created the greatest sensation ever known amongst Ostrich Feather manufacturers all over the United States.

The cheap willows being sold had caused great dissatisfaction amongst the wearers owing to the knots coming untied.

Stores selling them could not guarantee them as they had no means of retying them.

Cawston with his Factory at So. Pasadena employing 200 workers; the most expert in America; not only makes a superior article but is in a position to do repair work of the finest kind.

Your Old Feathers

Can be made over into Willow Plumes and dyed any shade. Bring them to Cawston's City Store. Remember the number as Cawston has only one.

$55 Ladies' Tailored to Measure Suits $27.50 for one day only, Monday, November 21st. We send you this news with the assurance that never before were such values brought to your notice, never before in the history of tailoring in Los Angeles were you able to have made to your measure by one of the best men tailors in Southern California such beautiful and stylish creations at such a price reduction. In fact, it would seem extravagant and careless on your part to disregard such an unusual procedure.

The cloths consist of the best and newest imported serges, worsteds, basket weaves, etc., in a full range of the latest color effects, secured by our Eastern representative at a fraction of worth for "Spot Cash," from a hard pressed New York jobber. The amount of yardage is limited, however, and to be fair to all we are compelled to state that but one suit to a customer will be the rule. Linings and fit guaranteed. BETTER COME EARLY!

Everything You Need for Thanksgiving

There are a few special occasions every year, when the Dinner-feast becomes the most important function on the day's programme in every family. This is preeminently true of Thanksgiving.

We have as completely stocked departments of fine Cut Glass, imported French and English Table China, etc., as we are generally recognized and known to have in flat and hollow Silverware, pierced silver encased pieces, casseroles, chafing dishes and kindred useful and decorative articles for the table.

Our entire Second Floor Exhibition Salon sparkles with highly artistic ware, of which we have made a special exhibition with a view of showing the most decorative and correct in these lines, especially suited for the coming festal days of Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's.

No gift is more personal, more acceptable, more valued, than a single piece, a set or larger group of such wares as will forever enhance the beauty and rich taste to be displayed in and by the household.

We invite connoisseurs as well as those who must rely more upon our judgment and advice. As to the correctness and dependability of our recommendations, we are proud to point to our unexcelled record of over forty years of square dealing in Los Angeles.

A Lively Land of Toys and Dolls

With Santa Claus in Possession

Santa Claus is the most enthusiastic man in the Toy Department. He says that he never had such a wonderful collection—and he's right. You must see the line. Bring the children and show them this fairyland; even the old folks enjoy it.

Make an engagement with Santa Claus between the hours of 2 and 5. He's a jolly old fellow and he's glad to talk to the children to find out what they want for Christmas. By the way, ask the children to write Santa Claus a letter and put it in his mail box on the 3rd floor.

THE HESS TOYS 50c—They are wonderful hill climbing toys, as low as 50c and a dozen other prices.

TOOL CHESTS—Beautiful ones in splendidly finished boxes at 25c, 39c, 50c, 65c, 89c, and up to $3.95. These are particularly desirable for the fine tools.

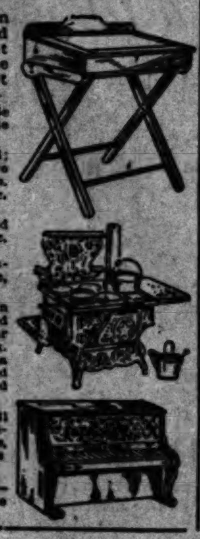
BILLIKEN DOLL $1.25—Plush body, unbreakable head.



Thanksgiving Linens at Broadway Prices

That means advantageous buying for the Broadway has a great reputation for linens, both as to quality and lowness of prices.

PATTERN CLOTHS

These are of all linen. Note the sizes and prices:

72x72 inches, each	$2.75
72x88 inches, each	$3.50
72x108 inches, each	$4.25
22-inch napkins to match, per dozen	$3.75

White Damask $1.50

Satin finish damask, 72-inch. This is a double damask in rich designs.

$1 DAMASK

It is the wonder of all who see it. 2 yards wide. Firm, closely woven, all linen. Satin damask in a good line of pretty patterns. Note well the fact this is an imported damask and all linen. Yard $1.

60-IN. WHITE DAMASK 65c

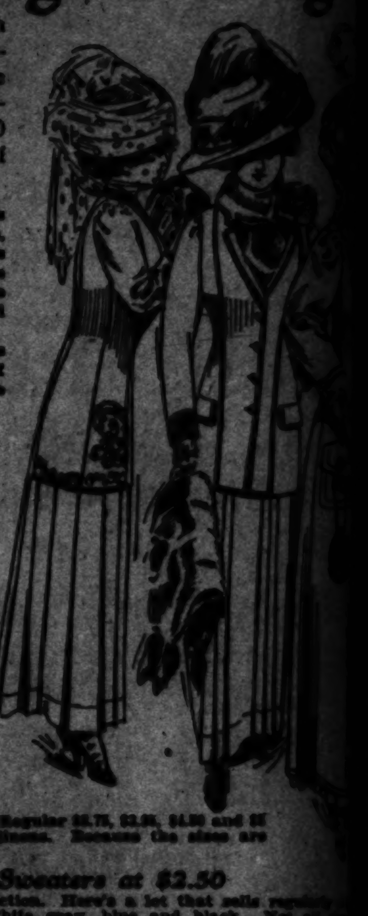
Extra weight union linen damask in fern, snowdrop and wild rose designs. Very practical for hotel or restaurant use. 3rd floor, yard 65c.

Thanksgiving

The garment section is to be alive with interest Monday, for these 100 garments are to go on sale at $12.95. The season's very best and newest garments are now selling at $15, $17.50 and $19.50, and worth every cent of the marked prices.

The careful tailoring and the correctness of the styles together with the fine materials, which include serges, cheviots, broadcloths and fine Scotch mixtures, as well as the fancy woolens. These all go to make the sale so important that the hundred should be closed out before the day is well over.

Coats are satin lined throughout. Skirts in the new plain pleated models. Choice of black and the desired shades. Sale price $12.95.



Novelty Coats & Covert Coats $12.50

Because of unusual buying circumstances we are able to mark these beautiful coats at $12.50. Made of fine plaid back cloth, scotch mixtures and hard finished covert cloths. They're half satin lined. Choice of black and the desired colors.

Separate Skirts . . . $5.00

They are much underpriced—black panamas, fine or heavy serges and pretty novelty cloth. Charming styles, perfect in every line. All sizes and extra sizes. $5.

$3.75 to $5 Dress Waists . $2.50

Big one-day clearance in the waist section. Regular $3.75, $3.95, $4.50 and $5 waists, made of sheer batiste, lawns and linens. Because the sizes are somewhat broken, out they go at $2.50.

$2.95 to $5 Sweaters at $2.50

Odd sizes accumulate fast in the sweater section. Here's a lot that sells regularly $4.50 and $5. Made of pure wool yarn in white, gray, blue and black. Not all pay $2.50.

Sale of Art Linens 50c and 75c Pieces . . 29c

Center pieces, tray cloths and stamped covers. Some with scalloped edges, others hemstitched. Drawnwork and embroidery patterns. 50c and 75c qualities for a Thanksgiving special. 300 pieces at, each 29c, 3rd floor.

$1.25 to $4.50 Pieces Odds and Ends at . . . 98c

Sofa cushion covers—embroidered center pieces, edged with cluny lace—satin damask stand covers—laundry bags, etc. Regular prices have been $1.25, $2.50, $2.75 and $4.50. About 50 pieces to be closed out for a Monday flyer, while they last, 3rd floor, 98c.

TORCHON LACES, 8:30 TO 10:30 . . . . 2½c

Yes, the regular 5c torchon laces. English torchons at that. 1¼ to 3-inch widths. Marked 5c. You'll find them most desirable for underwear. Aisle 1, Monday, 8:30 to 10:30, yard 2½c.

CONEY SKINS—A FEATURE 95c

One of the prettiest and most desirable skins for dress and millinery trimming. This is the full size skins that can be adapted so readily to a hat, or for trimmings, by cutting them into strips. Of course, the saving is important. These are in brown and black. One woman bought enough of these to make a fur coat. Each 95c.

November Sale Laces—Monday—Important

Several items of newly procured laces that were bought under the most advantageous market conditions, together with the closing out of certain lines of trimmings that have been most popular this season, form the basis for this November sale of laces. We mention some important items here.

Special Purchase Laces and Insertions . . 10c

Normandy Vals and Point de Paris Laces you'll find so practical for holiday fancy work, pin cushions, etc. Edges from 2 to 5 inches. Insertions from 2 to 3½ inches; also practical for under muslins. Aisle 1, yard 10c.

New Allover Laces Tokio Silk and Oriental $1.45

A large variety of colors, including Persians, that are very much wanted, particularly in the shades we show. Some very important values at $1.45. Aisle 1.

New all-overs at $1.95 are here in color range to match most any sample. We've just received a most attractive line, including Oriental, Jap silk, metal and Persian designs.

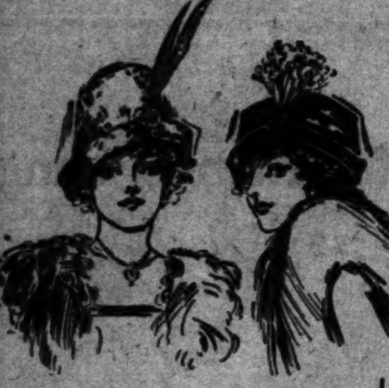
18-Inch Oriental Allover Laces 69c

A variety of dainty patterns for yokes, waists, etc. Included are some fancy white tucked nets that were originally marked much higher. These reduced for this special offering, making an attractive sale price, yard 69c.

High Grade Trimmings Regularly 49c to $10 Yd Half

We aim to close out all lines of merchandise from one season to another. These trimming laces have been exceedingly popular. Now while the season is at its height we give you the benefit of the reduction, rather than at the end of the season.

Beautiful bands that range in price from 49c to $10. These will all be included in the sale at just half the marked prices.



Sale Axminster Rugs All Sizes

From the very largest to the smallest size Axminster rugs, they've all entered this sale.

It's impossible for us to remember when we've made such an offer before, for Axminster rugs, even at regular prices, are the bread and butter stock of the Rug section. Read this news carefully, for the savings are well worth while. Rich Oriental and floral effects and a broad assortment from which to choose.

THE DRAMATIC WEEK.

management of Pantages for the week starting Monday afternoon. It is an ideal bill of the varieties and should amuse, entertain and instruct for topping the bill is the first appearance here of a tremendously interesting specimen of the Simian tribe in the person of "Alfred, the First," a young and well-trained Chimpanzee. There are so few of these wonderful beasts in this country and only three performing Chimpanzees that the engagement of "Alfred, the First" is in the nature of a genuine novelty. A reception will be held upon the stage every afternoon in order for students, children, teachers and others interested in natural history to meet the Chimpanzee face to face and get more closely acquainted. The Simian can dress and undress himself; get into bed and blow out the lamp; dance while playing an organ; smokes, skates, walks a tight rope blindfolded and accomplishes a difficult trick bicycle act.

The artistic and dramatic portion of the entertainment will be cared for by that fine actor of Irish characters, Edwin Keough, accompanied by the dainty Helen Nelson and a capable supporting company in the playlet, "A Bit of Blarney." The play is scenically perfect, has some beautiful costumes and elaborate electrical effects.

Allen and Lee, billed as "advanced comedians," and fellows of infinite jest, have a rapid-fire equipment of up to the minute parodies, songs and dances; Billie and Maud Keller have a comedy offering in "A Matrimonial Agent," Delmar and Delmar are a duo of European acrobats and gymnasts, and the Biograph will show a new series of animated pictures.

Luna Park is now in the first week of its existence, and is presenting, twice daily, a complete and varied list of attractions. It is the only outdoor amusement resort in the United States which remains open, and is one of the largest and most complete of those which are open at any time.

From a variety of diverse features one may perhaps single out the unparalleled diving and swimming exhibition of Emma Newkirk, the brilliant music of Nkilausse Schilzony's Hungarian Band, the varied arts and crafts to be found in the Japanese village, and the instructive diversion of the new Zoo and the remodelled and restocked aviary.

For those who cannot resist the dramatic call, even upon a visit to a park, entertainment of their kind has been provided. The Hyman vaudeville circuit, now playing Luna Theater as part of its chain, will present four acts of high-class vaudeville and new groups of first-run motion pictures.

Miss Newkirk's recently-issued world challenge to any swimmers of the fair sex remains unanswered. Those who beheld her work in Luna Lake possibly know why no answer has been given by her astute rivals.

Oriental arts at their finest are displayed in "Tokio," and the big colony of little brown men and women are to be found demonstrating crafts which both useful and ornamental.

MOTION-ART.

UNUSUAL BALLET IS "GISELLE."

PAVLOWA AND MORDKIN AND THE STORY THEY TELL.

"The Fairies of the Forest" Is Subject of Extraordinary Story Which the World-Famous Russian Dancers Tell in Their Singular Dancing Performance.

One of the group of big ballets presented by Mlle. Anna Pavlowa and M. Mikial Mordkin and the Imperial Russian Ballet is "Giselle." The technical difficulties presented and the tremendous demands made by it upon the artists are such that it is seldom attempted, and it may be said, has not been successfully presented since the days of Grisi and Taglioni until the present revival.

Giselle is a dainty piquant French romance in two acts with a sombre vien of tragedy underlying every moment. A quaint legend of the period of Louis XV, when the French peasantry expressed the dreamy romance of their uncultured souls through belief in wood nymphs, fairies, goblins and witchcraft, furnished Theophile Gautier, the poet with the material for the libretto. Adolphe Adam, the composer, breathed life into the poem and clothed it with entrancing music—the result of their joint labor being a work that justifies its popularity and which will live forever.

The opening scence represents a village in the heart of the wine growing district. It is vintage time and gaiety is the order of the hour. Here dwells the simple, lovely Giselle, a maid beloved by all, but especially by two village lads, Hans, the gamekeeper and Loys, a youth of mystery. Loys came into the life of the hamlet unknown and unannounced, accompanied by a boon companion, Wilfried, from whence no one knew and for what purpose no one could fathom, unless it might be to pay court to the beautiful Giselle, a task he set about assiduously.

Together Loys and Wilfried took up their adobe close to that of France's fairest daughter. Their manly character and pleasant way soon won them a place in the hearts of the villagers—that is all save Hans, who regards the advent of Loys as detrimental to his own quest for Giselle's hand.

Such is the status of affairs when the curtain rises, disclosing Hans surveying the home of the object of his affections and that of his rival, close by. Loys's door swings open and he emerges with Wilfried, who is pleading with him. Scenting an opportunity to penetrate the mystery that surrounds Loys, Hans secretes himself and listens. Wilfried's words and demeanor make it apparent that Loys is his superior and that Wilfried seeks to dissuade him from his purpose. But just at the moment when it appears the fates had given Loys's secret into the gamekeeper's hands, Loys orders Wilfried to begone and say no more. Wilfried moves unwillingly away and Loys proceeds to Giselle's cottage. He knocks softly the door and she comes forth joyously to meet him. Showering evidences of affection upon him, Giselle tells Loys of the terrors the night has had for her; she has dreamt again and again that he had deceived her.

Loys, red faced with confusion, protests his honest and undying love. "Take heed that you never do deceive me," she cries, "for if you do I shall surely die."

Hans, who has witnessed this scene and whose love for Giselle is such that he is consumed with jealousy, can restrain himself no longer. He rushes to Giselle and upbraids her. "I love him and all the world may know," cried Giselle, and Hans departs in anger, vowing to take revenge.

Nor is his revenge long delayed

The grape gatherers troop by, heading for the vine-clad hills, but Giselle, in her happiness, stops them. Her high spirits find expression in dancing. All are carried away by the dance and join in it. The festivity is at its height when Giselle's mother, Berthe, arrives. She stops her daughter and warns her not to succumb to her passion for dancing lest it possess her after death. Then she relates the ancient legend.

With wonder written on their faces the village lads and lasses hang on her words as she tells of the mad moonlit revels that follow the stroke of midnight when the fairies of the forest emerge from their graves to do the steps of the dance of death. Beautiful as the moonbeams that play about them, soft as the whispering nocturnal breezes that make music for them, graceful as the forest branches that vagrant eddies toss in sympathetic rhythm, these bewitching sprites are cursed. In the presence of their irresistible woe to the traveler who meets them. To dance with them is his fate—to dance and dance and dance madly on until death ends the spell.

The mellow sound of the hunter's horn cut short the old woman's story at its climax. A party of noblemen and grand ladies wearied with the chase, clatters toward the village. The peasants hasten to meet them, but Loys falls back. A bevy of grape pickers merrily seize him, insisting that he should join in the welcome to the huntsmen. Loys vainly seeks to escape to the shelter of his cottage. He is good-naturedly struggling with the villagers when Hans arrives. What he heard pass between Loys and Wilfried but a short time ago, coupled with Loys's present attitude, fills him with suspicion. The moment he has long sought has arrived, and he slips into Loys's cottage to investigate for himself.

The hunting party proves to be that of the Prince Regent and his daughter Bethilde, whose attendants lead them to Berthe's cottage where Giselle meets them and makes tender of her homely hospitality. Bethilde, taken with Giselle's rare beauty, interests herself in the girl. She questions her as to her life, her occupations, her pleasures. Berthe answers for her that her daughter is very happy indeed. She has no griefs, no cares.

"But has she any loves?" questions Berthilde.

"Ah! yes," Giselle blushingly confesses, and pointing to Loys's cottage says, "There is the home of my fiance. I love him so much that all the world would be changed and I would die if I found he loved me no more."

Bethilde is much interested in the young villager, for is she too not about

MELODY NEWS.

LIZA LEHMANN TO APPEAR HERE.

ENGLISH SONG-WRITER WILL OFFER OWN MUSIC.

Bevani's Will Conclude Record-Breaking Engagement at the Auditorium with "La Boheme" as a Special Feature—General Musical News Discussed.

BY JULIAN JOHNSON.

Of much more than ordinary interest to local music-lovers is the coming of Liza Lehmann this week. The celebrated English song writer will be heard at Simpson Auditorium Friday evening, with a quartette said to be capable and artistic.

Mme. Lehmann—how hard it is to get away from that French prefix when we are describing a feminine celebrity—has long been recognized as one of the few living composers whose genuine inspiration is beyond dispute. Her work may not be so large in quantity as that of some of her masculine contemporaries, but none of them have songs of more beautiful quality.

I'm not certain, but I believe this will be Mme. Lehmann's debut in Los Angeles.

She plays her own accompaniments, and needless to say, they convey indisputable authority.

The quartette traveling with her is composed of Miss Blanche Tomlin, Miss Palgrave-Turner, and Messrs. Hubert Bisdell and Julian Henry.

The programme to be presented includes the famous song-cycle, "In a Persian Garden," "Abou Ben Adhem and the Angel," sung by Miss Palgrave-Turner; "Five Little Love-Songs," by Mr. Bisdell; "An Incident of the French Camp," Mr. Henry; "The Pearl and the Spring," and "Everybody's Secret," Miss Tomlin, and "The Nonsense Songs," cycle from "Alice in Wonderland."

Operatic Finale.

It is with genuine regret that a large convocation of music lovers will part with the Bevani Opera Company, which will commence its fourth and final week at the Auditorium today.

For three weeks, to a gratifying steady patronage, Mr. Bevani has given consistent, even and dependable productions of the master-pieces of music-drama.

Five singers, at least, have made a permanent impression. They are Regina Vicarino, who, all things carefully considered, is a most extraordinary coloratura soprano; Eugenio Battain, a tenor whose unfailing reliability and mastery of all roles makes him the one absolutely indispensable figure of the organization; Achille Alberti, veteran baritone, whose intelligent and dignified impersonations and sonorous voice production are rarely duplicated on the modern stage; Ettore Campana, baritone whose naturally great vocal organ seems to have destined him for a high place in the operatic world, and Margaret Jarman, a beautiful young Los Angeles girl, possessor of a striking stage presence, a contralto voice of splendid promise and altogether unusual dramatic ability.

The feature of the closing week will be three performances of Puccini's "La Boheme." It is hard for any company playing at "popular" prices to meet the royalty demands of the thrifty Ricordi family, in addition to other expenses, but business here has warranted the expenditure.

Mimi will be sung by Giuditta Franchi, and Marie Scherser, as yet unheard here, will be the Musetta. Other principals will be Battain, Campana, Secci-Corsi and Bevani. "La Boheme" will be presented on Tuesday and Thursday nights, and at the Saturday matinee. The orchestra will necessarily be enlarged. I am told that these same astute Ricordis will not permit their cherished property to be played unless forty men are in the pit.

For the other performances of the week, casts are about the same. Monday night "The Tales of Hoffman" will be given. Wednesday afternoon there will be a "Faust" matinee with Scherser as Siebel and Sacchetti as Faust. In the evening the all-star "Rigoletto" will be given again.

Thursday afternoon there will be a Thanksgiving matinee of "Il Trovatore," with Guiliani appearing as Manrico.

Friday night, "Lucia;" Saturday night, La Traviata."

Enterprising Pasadena.

The Pasadena Emergency League, on the evenings of Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 28 and 29, will give "Pinafore," and a society vaudeville performance, as a benefit.

The performances will take place at the Norton Operahouse under the direction of Edgar Temple and Edwin S. Tarbox. More than 100 society folk of Pasadena will take part.

Heading the cast of principals will be Helen Bertram, soprano; Edgar Temple, tenor, and Laura Wallace, soubrette.

Forty members of the High School student-body will do a "sea specialty," whatever that may be.

The sailor's hornpipe will be danced by six pretty girls.

The cast of "Pinafore" follows: Josephine, Helen Bertram; Little Buttercup, Laura Wallace; Hebe, Margaret Torrey; Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., J. S. MacDonnell; Ralph Rackstraw, Edgar Temple; Dick Deadeye, George A. Clark; Capt. Corcoran, Ben H. Leslie; Boatswain, John R. Bragdon; Boatswain's Mate, C. A. Rasey; Lone Fisherman, T. P. Rothwell.

Orpheus Opening.

The opening concert of the Orpheus Club's sixth season will be given Tuesday evening, November 29, in the Auditorium.

This fine band of singers, under the baton of Mr. Dupuy, has made a place for itself in the musical life of the city second to none. This promises to be the most successful of its seasons. The club will be assisted by Rudolf Friml, pianist, who will offer several of his own compositions.

The Los Angeles Choral Society will close its nominations for candidates next Tuesday. Director Ernest Douglas will be pleased to enroll more new members at the choir-room of St. Paul's before that date.

The society now numbers seventy-five voices, and will give the Mendelssohn Hymn of Praise and Stanford's "Awake, My Heart!" about December 8.

At the 18th recital of the Von Stein Academy, given at the school's new quarters on Tenth and Hill streets, this programme was given interesting rendition: Dorothy Garrison, Sonatina Op. 36, No. 1 (Clementi;) Ruth Kimmel, "Leota Waltz" (Kroegman;) Ruth Kimmel and Dorothy Garrison, duet, "The Little Patriot" (Kroegman;) Golda Clemenson, (a) "L'Avalanche" (Heller;) (b) "Happy Farmer" (Schumann;) Louise Berg, "Serenade" (Rubens;) Pauline Hollingsworth, "Al-

THE CONCORD

A new Colonial pattern of elegance and distinction, characteristic of the period---shown in Los Angeles for the first time as a complete pattern.

The designer's motif for this very elegant, yet simple pattern, is the desire to meet the taste of the one who wishes for a chaste outline in simple, graceful lines.

Those who are looking for refinement and elegance in Flatware cannot fail to be attracted to this pattern. We predict it will be the largest seller of any silver pattern in the year 1911.

Everything that's needed for table use we have on sale. The weight of the different pieces is heavier than the average. The prices are very attractive. We invite your comparison and criticism on this, our newest pattern. Our prices are as follows:

The Harmonia Club gave an "Afternoon in Norway" last Thursday. The leader was Mrs. Carro Satterwhite, while the hostess was Mrs. W. T. Howard.

Mrs. J. C. Thamer read a paper on the Norwegian school of music, and in the general Norweigian programme which followed Miss Eleanore Strong, Miss Nora McPherson, Miss Helen Smyser, Miss Willie Smyser, Miss Ada Shryack, Miss Lelia Webster and Miss Hazel Peterson took part.

Mrs. Concepion M. de Aguilar will give a concert at Blanchard Hall on Friday evening. The Schoneman-Blanchard orchestra will assist, and there will be a varied programme of classics and popular selections.

The faculty of the College of Musicians including Mr. Wylie, violin; Mr. Grunn, pianist; Mr. Simonsen, 'cellist; Miss Kavanagh, dramatic reader, and Senor Calvo, vocalist, will give on entertainment at the Magnolia Avenue Christian Church next Friday evening. The proceeds will be devoted by the "Baraca Boys" of the church, to lifting the indebtedness on their unique "Bungalow Annex" to the church proper.

The Levy programmes for the coming week hold a number of interesting features. The newcomers are headed by the Porlini trio, of male singers from Italy, who present a creditable oleo of Italian, Spanish and Sicilian songs. They are clever entertainers, possessing the requisite voices for grand opera and turn their attention to this character of composition.

Lillie Lillian, her last week at the cafe, promises an unusually brilliant group of selections from her favorite composers. She has chosen the leading numbers from "The Soul Kiss," "The Chocolate Soldier" and "The Merry Widow."

The Mirimba band made notable in this country during the recent tour of the Harry Lauder road show, have become a fixture at Levy's; eight to ten encores nightly testify to the popularity of these youngsters, who on a peculiar instrument seem able to play equally well a lullaby, a classical number of a modern air.

Dorris Wilson, comedienne, is also a new feature of the Chantant.

Special orchestral programme afternoon, at dinner, and through out the evening by the Kammermeyer orchestra.

Highly successful was the musical evening given at the Gamut Club under the auspices of the Woman's Guild of St. John's Church.

Participants in the programme were Mrs. Grace Carroll Elliott, Mrs. H. Hennion Robinson, Mrs. George Varnum, Mrs. Irving J. Mitchell, Miss Fischer, Miss Edna Zyl Modie, Roger Miller, Miss Ruth Deardorff and others.

The West Coast Conservatory of Music has moved to Oakland, and the headquarters of the school will be there. Martha A. Gray will, however, have charge of the Pasadena branch and classes.

Pupils of R. J. Polak were heard in a violin and piano programme of merit and diversity at Blanchard Hall, on Thursday evening.

Miss Zetta Gibbon, a talented and pretty young mezzo-soprano, gave an interesting recital at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach, last Wednesday evening.

BITS OF VERSE.

The Song of the Wanderer.

I sing the song of the open sky,
Of the shimmering, deep-voiced sea;
Of the tropic lands, where the palm frond stands,
Of the dripping Florida key.

I sing of the northern ice plain;
Of the yelping, dashing pack
As they leap away in the year-long day
At the whip that the sledgemen crack.

I sing the song of the desert,
Where the drifting sand whirls high;
In the bones of the bold is my story told
As they lie 'neath the brazen sky.

I have sat by the pampas campfire;
I have been to the ends of the earth;
From the Niger's fall to the Taj Mahal
Have I wandered o'er its girth.

So I sing to the sturdy "drifter,"
And his song of the open sky;
Drink a health with me to the tumbling sea,
And the lands where he goes to die!
—[Henry Stuart Dudley in Smart Set.

Grown Old With Nature.

If true there be another, better land,
A fairer than this humble mother shore,
Hoping to meet the blessed gone before,
I fain would go. But may no angel band
Lead on so far along the shining sand,
So wide within the everlasting door,
'Twill shut away this good, green world. No more.
Of earth! Let me not hear that dread command.
Then must I mourn, unsoothed by harps of gold,
For sighing boughs, and birds of simple song,
For hush of night within the forest fold;
Yea, must bemoan, amid the joyous throng,
These early loves. The heart that has grown old
With Nature cannot, happy, leave her long.
—[John Vance Cheney in St. Louis Times.

Chaucer.

Child of the dawn, we hear thy loving laughter
When May and the lark are welcoming the morn,
And over daisied fields, past rows of thorn,
And down a pilgrimway, where knight and squire
With lowlier folk from many a merry shire
Are telling tales, childlike we follow after.
—[Wm. L. Corbin in Century Magazine.

Mr. S. Goldberg

the head designer of this establishment, has made a study for years in all the fashion centers of designing styles for ladies. Those who desire something original in a suit or coat, will receive Mr. Goldberg's special attention.

OPENING
LADIES TAILOR
THE HOUSE OF SATISFACTION
720 So Bdwy 2nd Floor

Special Attention

There is no need of waiting weeks or months to get a tailored suit finished when we have made contracts with a large number of competent tailors who have had wide experience in many reputable fashion shops, which will enable us to complete a suit within 48 hours, if necessary, to come within our trade mark, "Satisfaction."

Opening Tomorrow

Monday, November 21, 1910

We extend a cordial invitation to all the ladies of Los Angeles and vicinity to attend the opening of this establishment, which will be one of the largest ladies' tailoring and style houses on the Pacific Coast.

Our establishment is in very commodious quarters, with all modern conveniences for our customers and covers a floor space of 5000 square feet.

Many new and original models will be shown, and several hundred exclusive suit patterns of the latest weaves are here for your careful inspection.

For the Occasion

On this eventful day, to make our establishment known and to be popular among those ladies who are in the habit of wearing high-grade suits or coats, made to order, we are offering a plain tailor-made suit of the very best material and workmanship to every lady who visits this establishment on the opening day at the price of

$35.00

We know a good many ladies have already procured their fall suits, but you will use one more when you see these beautiful, exclusive models which are different from anything you have had before, and the prices we are offering on our grand opening should induce every lady to buy one more garment instead of waiting for early spring.

We Wish to Call Your Attention

We wish to call your attention to our trade-mark above, or the word "Satisfaction," which we are going to adapt in every respect and to give the best attention and the best materials, trimmings and workmanship, and not a single garment will leave this establishment unless it comes within this trade-mark, "Satisfaction."

SPECIAL FRANKING STAMPS.

Postmaster-General Seeks to Restrict the Abuse of the Mails.

By substituting special official stamps and stamped envelopes, so that an accurate account can be kept of the transactions, Postmaster General Hitchcock hopes to check serious abuses that have grown up, or else have never been eliminated, as the result of the franking privilege for congressional and the penalty envelope and label for departmental mail, says the Washington Star.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the estimated postage value of free congressional mail sent under frank was $518,385.45, and of free departmental mail sent under penalty envelope or label, $5,219,661.65, or $5,738,047.10 for both, an amount that nearly equals the total postal deficit for the last fiscal year. Based on the special weighing of 1907, the total weight of franked congressional mail was 4,531,060,474 pounds.

These weights, as well as the estimated amount of postage that would have been collected on them had the matter not been free, are problematical, however.

Under the present system there is no certain way for the Post Office Department to determine the exact figures, nor is it able to easily determine the many abuses that arise from a privilege that enables the transmission of immense amounts of mail matter free and almost without question.

In his endeavor to bring the department to a business basis, to secure an accurate accounting system and to curtail expenditures, the Postmaster General believes the franking and free penalty envelope privilege offers the best field for his endeavors.

He is convinced that the introduction of a more exact method of dealing with this problem as he proposes will prove of tremendous advantage in the work of placing the postal service on a strictly businesslike basis, the only way, he thinks, the department can ever hope to make it really self-sustaining.

That there is likely to be objection to his plan to obtain control of the free service rendered by the postal service he is prepared to admit, but he believes when all the facts are made known the objection will speedily fade away, for it is said there have been some astounding abuses to eat up the public money since the franking privilege came into vogue.

Some of the newest sashes are finished with a single end and a rosette at the waist line. This rosette is placed quite as frequently at one side as at the front or back.

THE LADY OF THE SPUR. By David Potter. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia. (Price, $1.50.)

THE novels that bloom in the fall tra-la are very much the same as those that blossom forth from the book stalls in the spring. The bookstore windows are bedight in their gaudy covers, and within the dens of the book-selling banditti, one finds great pyramids of these colorful romances. But in a week they are all gone and new masterpieces have taken their places. Their days of wheedling are indeed numbered; but so alluring is their red-and-gold smile that, ere we know it, we have been separated from a dollar and a half, only to learn how an evening suit makes love to and marries a decollete gown.

I have nothing in particular against these inane romances; they are really quite harmless when one considers them. They are not burdened with style, and one seldom encounters a word of more than three syllables. The people who appear in their pages are carved crudely out of wooden blocks and act with the same dexterity and naturalness as a jumping-jack when the string is pulled. They are simple enough, too, and their conversation is a naive mixture of gaudy adjectives and bourgeois morality. They never do anything or say anything which makes any demands on one's emotional nature; nor do they create mental activity of any sort on the part of the reader.

The physiological effect of these books is a soothing and pleasurable sensation, co-mingled with a slight irritation. For instance, the same result may be obtained by pouring warm water down one's spinal column and at the same time tickling one's Adam's apple with a feather. The psychological explanation of why books of this type are read, is found in the intellect's natural antipathy for rumination and the mind's instinctive combat against the unconsciousness of sleep.

Reading light novels is indulged in for the same purpose that one plays rag-time on the piano, invests an hour in a game of solitaire, composes poetry, works out acrostics, or wades through the barber-shop weeklies. In short, light novel reading is for the purpose of pushing the clock's hands around. There are many ways by which a man might efface a rainy afternoon, but in most cases there is some evil after-effect or some laborious demand made upon the mind. For instance, he might drink a pint or two of chloroform. He might take a gun and sally forth to some crowded thoroughfare and hold up people. He might jump into the river; or, worse yet, attend grand opera. He might even read a book of Henry James's.

But all of these methods for killing time would be followed either by dire consequences or, at any rate, by a great mental exertion. So what does your bored individual do? He shoots pool if he is at large, plays checkers with the turnkey if he is jailed; or else reads a popular novel.

Of these time-dispellers there are many. Frederick P. Ladd's "The Lady of Shenipsit" is a harmless and cleanly little love story which is, to borrow an adjective of the book-reviewers, "charming." New England is the locale, and there are many amusing scenes of New England village life with all its appurtenances and accessories. Ladd writes with feeling, and while there is considerable moralizing around the names of Grace Bickford and John Kingsbury, there is plenty of interest of a mild sort.

"The Scales of Justice" by George L. Knapp, is an almost-thriller with the "third degree" as a sort of hub. The hero is that standard fascinating young Solomon whom, we encounter so often in fiction but who somehow escapes us in real life—the brilliant sleuth-reporter. Arthur Kern is an almost superhuman toreador of virtue, and his journalistic abilities are of the same exalted order as his virtues. It is through his efforts that a man falsely condemned of murder is acquitted. "The Scales of Justice" is not a complex fiction, but it serves its purpose faithfully. In the course of the narrative, many literary falls are taken out of the practice of the "third degree."

Robert Barr can always be counted on for first rate anti-soporific fiction, and his new book, "The Sword Maker" is as lively as it is uninspired. The scene of this romance is in the country surrounding the Rhine; the time, three centuries ago. Those were the wicked and semi-fabulous Germanic days, when the robber barons plied their nefarious business. These lusty boys who lived in their strongholds along the Rhine had a little way of plundering all the argosies that attempted to sail up the river, the result being that Frankfort and other cities were not as happy as they might have been. Things were in an unsavory condition and the emperor, in senile and selfish dotage, let matters stand. Seeing the condition of things, a trio of archbishops took the young Prince Roland and incarcerated him at Ehrenfels for safe keeping until the throne was vacant.

Now, young Roland was not content with prison life. Not he. He had no difficulty in bribing the jailer, and came and went as he desired. What did the young Prince do? He became a sword maker, and with a band of followers swooped down upon the baronial castles and plundered them with neatness and dispatch. The lady? Of course, Geraldine, there was a lady—a very beautiful lady. She was Countess Hildegrunde von Sayn.

More castles and royal children are to be found in "The Hidden Princess." This is a slender and frivolous tale of a young lady who had a wicked father, and who consequently was brought up in her grand-parents' castle. The story is loose-jointed and the plot is sparingly and thinly spread over the pages, like the butter on five-cent sandwiches. ftktro?aR gw tdte ldGorio?ao]aotTL- I It has the advantage of only imperceptibly exerting the faculty of cognition. Nor will the psychic titillation require any violent pathological reaction. Once the father attempts to kidnap the child, but the emotional ebullition caused by this incident immediately subsides. The interest in the story would seem to center around the love episode of Kara who is masquerading as a milk-maid, and a young painter, who finds in her the inspiration for his art. The rose-colored spot-light, if you please; and, professor, a little Chopin music.

Another wholesome and mildly entertaining book is "A Man's Man" by Ian Hay. It is entertaining and witty and, curious to relate, the writing of it does not show the signs of the sweat-shop. Rather does it attest to a large degree of culture and education on the part of the author. It is a relief to find a book written in pure, clean-cut English among the vast amount of ungrammatical flapdoodle that comes from the press nowadays, with single verbs and double subjects, with "s" added defiantly to "toward" and "forward," with verbs divided by adverbs, and "most" used for "almost." The book opens with a thrilling boat race in which the hero wins; then he goes galloping around the country because of an unhappy love episode. Finally he comes back and finds himself guardian of a girl whom his uncle had once adopted. The minute Joey and Hugh are brought together our suspicions are aroused; and when we read a little further, our suspicions have developed into a conviction. Before very long, however, this conviction turns into a moral certitude; and guardian and guarded melt into a nuptial Buss—which is exactly what the uncle wanted all along.

A tale somewhat out of the ordinary run is David Potter's "The Lady of the Spur." It is a breezy slapdash combination of love, adventure and mystery. The hero of the present yarn is a highwayman who impersonates a respectable man and steps into his shoes. Now, this respectable man whom the highwayman is impersonating, owns a large estate which a member from another branch of the family is endeavoring to get away from him. Enter the romance: The daughter of the claimant appears upon the scene and the hold-up imposter immediately falls in love with her. There are many exciting details in the book, the most entertaining of which is the one where the highwayman thwarts the efforts of his enemies to kill the lord of the manor.

OUT-OF-DOOR BALLADS.

FRONTIER BALLADS. By Joseph Mills Hanson. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price, $1 net.)

A READING of "Frontier Ballads" will show that Hanson is a young man of the West. Three qualities of the author's make-up are manifest in his verse: virility, the love of the Western prairies and mountains, and the ardent patriotism of the undefiled American. In "My Creed," the prologue to the volume, he says:

"I hold that the silent sea and plain,
the mountain, wood, and down,
Are better haunts for the feet of men than the streets of the roaring town,
And that those who tread for the price of bread in the thronging hives of toil
Will stronger grow with the more they know of the kiss of the virgin soil."

And again:

"Three stars that shine on the trail of life can make man's pathway bright;
And one is the strength of the Living
God, that stands in his heart upright,
And one is a noble woman's love, on which his heart may lean,
And one is the sight of his country's flag, to keep his courage keen."

The volume is divided into three parts: Soldiers' Songs, Prairie Songs, and River Songs. Several of the songs were first printed in magazines and many new ones have been written for this book. "The Ballad of Sergeant Ross" is one of the best and most virile, and was written some twelve years ago when Hanson was striving ineffectually to become a business man under the tutelage of a wealthy relative. His escape from "the thronging hives of toil," back to his beloved Old Northwest, the land of "the balm of the summer's calm" where when the summer's calm is not working he may listen to "the chords of the blizzard's hymn," has been celebrated by increased literary activity. "Frontier Ballads" is his third volume.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Elinor Glyn, the immoral virgin of modern literature, is in private life, Mrs. Clayton Glyn, the wife of an English squire and justice of the peace. She is described by those who know her as being striking in appearance, tall and slender, with a very white face surrounded by masses of auburn hair. She dresses with an apparent desire to complete self extinction, for what one sees in her face, even when sitting next to her at luncheon, is the most fugitive of glimpses. She applies the same elusive tactics to her personality, and one acquaintance of hers says that it must require a successive cycle of lives fully to understand her. She is said to be addicted to spiritualism; to be sensitive to unfair criticism; and to love luxury. She writes her books reclining on a soft sofa, not far—in winter—from a roaring fire. By preference she writes at night, and a favorite Persian cat is present.

"The Heins of the kissing business" is the name given to Robert W. Chambers, the author of "Ailsa Paige" and "The Danger Mark" on the ground that Mr. Chambers has invented, described and copyrighted more than fifty-seven varieties of kisses. "Before three chapters have been read," continues the writer of the article in question, "some one will be kissing madly, passionately, brashly, neatly, bravely," or in some other fashion. This essayist intimates that Mr. Chambers builds his novels around various kisses; and he instances, as among the best and most plummy, the famous "rail fence kiss" in "Ailsa Paige." He winds up by saying that our modern novelists, like Chambers and David Graham Phillips, are over-working osculation to the point where those in the next generation will probably omit it altogether.

David Graham Phillips, whose recent novel, "The Husband's Story" has been more vigorously attacked than almost any other book of the year, said in a recent interview that, while he stands by whatever he writes, it must not be taken that whatever sentiments are expressed by characters in his books are his own personal views. The American woman, he went on to say, is a burden rather than a help in the domestic problem, and the fault lies largely with the wealthy and middle-class women, who neglect their opportunity to be of some account in the world. "Laziness is the inherent tendency of most human beings. If you and I had the money to spend that is put into the hands of most American women, we perhaps would do what they do—vegetate. The remedy lies in the necessity of work for woman. She should be bred to feel the same economic independence as man, that she is responsible to the world for herself, not as a woman, but just as a human being. There should be the same moral status for both."

When the "Confessions of a 'Best Seller'" appeared in the "Atlantic Monthly" about a year ago, many attempts were made to discover the identity of the author through this passage: "In order to qualify myself to speak to my text, I will say that in a period of six years, that closed in January, 1909, my titles were included fifteen times in the list of best-selling books," and again: "I was astonished by its sale, which exceeded a quarter of a million copies in this country; it has been translated into French, Italian, German, Danish, Swedish and Norwegian." The author is now officially announced to be Meredith Nicholson.

The Spirit Trail
By KATE and VIRGIL D. BOYLES

THE last struggle of the Sioux for the lands granted them in the Laramie Treaty of 1868 forms the background for this love story of unusual power. During this struggle the daughter of the Indian Agent is kidnaped—while her lover is in jail convicted of murder. His escape through the aid of a frontier missionary, and his rescue of the girl furnishes enough excitement for the most captious fiction reader. It is the best Indian story of many years and the illustrations in color by Maynard Dixon are in every way worthy of the text.

ART AND ARTISTS.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

Austin's White Umbrella.

"THE most picturesque country in the world!" is Charles Percy Austin's dictum on Mexico. "The most colorful, the most paintable. Spain? Madrid? They don't compare with Mexico and Mexico City. Why, life in the enchanted land south of California is a perpetual pageant, an ever-shifting kaleidoscope of brilliant color."

The painter has just returned from a two months' jaunting and sketching trip in "the enchanted land," where he furled and unfurled his white umbrella many times. As proofs that his enthusiasm is not misplaced he has brought back with him to his Sichel-street studio a score of sketches in oils, water colors and pastels, and hundreds of photographs taken by himself.

The sketches will be exhibited later in the season. There will be street scenes, markets, churches, all incomparably "different" from their kindred in the North, and all glorified by the Midas-touch of the Southland's sunshine, which has a splendor that transcends the sunshine anywhere else in the world—acording to Mr. Austin. There may be glimpses of the bullfights, too, in the exhibition, for the painter, though the gentlest of men, confesses to a penchant for these barbarous orgies of blood. He went to them all—solely I incline to believe, in the artist's insatiable quest for the picturesque.

Mr. Austin spent a good deal of time in Puebla, a city of some size founded hundreds of years ago by the Spanish, and growing gradually and gracefully older ever since its first beginnings. "As I traveled without a guide," said he to me, over the sketches, "I was not able thoroughly to assimilate and make my own the valuable information handed out by sacristans and caretakers, though they probably spoke excellent Castilian. I saw Mexico very much from the outside—looking at a great deal, but not learning much in the way of statistics. However, for the painter, I suppose, what the eyes have to say is of greater importance than politics or history. I don't know," he went on musingly, "although there is a poignancy about the condition of the lower classes—to wit, the Indians—that one can't seem to get by—I don't know that I would want to see 'barbarous Mexico' reformed, for as it is it is so thoroughly picturesque.

"I stopped in Puebla on the recommendation of our good mutual friend, Hector Alliot, and spent the first day in the center of the city, wondering what there was in especial about the place to go so far off the main line for. French dry goods stores, American bars and shoe stores, English bicycle agencies, and fearful and wonderful art nouveau restaurants made a modern hodge-podge which was all the more bizarre when you saw on the streets the humble and hardworking Indian, man, woman and child, in rags of all colors, sombreros of all ages, and with burdens and merchandise of all weights and varieties. These were crying their wares or dog-trotting along with the peculiar step that Borg so ably seized in one of his Central America pictures.

"It was a marked contrast which made me think socialism rather than painting. I didn't like it. 'Come,' I said to myself, 'let's get out of this to the suburbs or barrios, where the peon has it all to himself and where an American is as conspicuous as a playing fountain of real water in Los Angeles.'"

I laughed, a trifle ruefully, and Mr. Austin smilingly added: "I can't think of a comparison more startling than that. 'Fountains are getting to be a rocking-horse of mine. Mexico City has some fine ones."

"Los Angeles is still young," I suggested. "In time—"

"In time our break-neck pace in 'doing things' may make us sufficiently thirsty to feel the need of a fountain or two, eh? ''Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished.' Well, to return to Puebla. I got out on the hill on the north of the city just as the bells were ringing for church. That Sunday morning move came almost involuntarily—perhaps it was merely the manifestation of the first-day sketching habit ingrained in the Los Angeles painter. From there I saw churches enough for all the bell-ringing that burst forth, I assure you, graceful bell towers and nice round domes covered with these fine blue and yellow tiles that belong to Spanish-Moorish architecture alone. They rose out of the general two-story level of the dwelling houses with their pink and sky-blue walls and windows with iron balconies, and from this point of vantage I had a rear view of the old Fort of Guadalupe, where General Zaragoza beat back the French in '62.

"From this point, too, I saw the towers cut across the rising slope of Popocatapetl. In the foreground were some nice old trees on the banks of a wandering stream, crossed by one or two fine old gray bridges. In the grass at the edge of the stream were old women kneeling and washing clothes, and laughing and singing, and on the grass, too, were effective spots of clean linen spread out to dry. An occasional train of burros or a cumbersome cart crossed a bridge and proceeded into the open country, passing, perhaps, a pair of Indians very much interested in themselves and nothing else.

"You began to dream a picture or two. Fine skies—for it was rainy weather, like February in California—could fill the upper part of the canvas. You might touch in the snows of the gigantic mountain, if the clouds that, as they say there, 'are born on the summit,' would part for a time and give you a glimpse. Wouldn't that picture be a stunner?"

"Stunning enough to be labelled 'California Landscape,'" I admitted.

"On the road from Vera Cruz I came upon other motives for pictures, some of them simply wonderful. The train dropped us into the Tierra Caliente in two sudden flights, descending three thousand feet in seventeen miles, I was told. The second of these stages was down and around the sides of a deep valley. There the vegetation was altogether tropical. The flashing water seen through the rich greens of the bananas and liveoaks, with the immense but entirely tree-covered mountains in the distance made velvety blue-green by the mists, recalled the descriptions in 'Paul and Virginia'—so entirely idealistic were the views."

"As 'entirely idealistic' as California," I declared, my eyes lingering over the last sketch in the artist's bulky portfolio.

My remark was a gauntlet flung for a tilt in argument—but Mr. Austin and I were still good friends when we parted. I soon found the weak link in his suddenly assumed and unaccustomed armor of defense—unswerving loyalty to California.

American Painter's Triumph.

E. Murray Mackay, the American painter who has been resident in Paris for some years, has just completed a portrait of the landscape artist, George W. Picknell, also an American, who has spent some years in the artistic fishing town of Etaples, France, seeking inspiration for his work. This portrait is attracting more than the usual interest among the painters themselves, for in it Mackay has grasped the "moment." To do this great facility and precision are necessary.

Mackay was born in Sebewaing, Mich. After studying at the Art Students' League in New York he came to Paris and entered the ateliers of Jean Paul Laurens and Jacques Blanche. Some years were spent in travel, and then for a long period Mackay lived in Holland studying the works of Frans of the population will thus be situ- Hals, and in Madrid for the purpose of learning the technique of the great master Velasquez.

Eugene Torrey's exhibition of military pictures opened last Friday afternoon in the large gallery of the Blanchard building, and will continue till the end of the present week. These pictures, in oils and water colors, are from sketches recently made by the artist at Camp Atascadero, a few miles south of San Francisco, where he spent two busy and delightful weeks, the guest of Gen. Bliss.

In conjunction with this unique exhibition of military pictures, Mr. Torrey is also showing many of his European studies in oils and water colors, pictures painted in France and Holland.

Some idea of the interest of the military pictures may be gathered from the titles of a few of them—"General View of the Parade," "Black Horse Artillery," "The Bivouac," "The Tents," (showing two miles of tents housing 8600 men,) "The Firing Line," "The Council of War," "A Battery in Action," "The Guard House," "The Major's Camp," "The Dispensary," "The Picket Line of Horses."

Young military men of Los Angeles are acting as "guides" to the exhibition. They explain to visitors the meaning of the various pictures. Besides this "guard," in full military regalia, Mr. Torrey has added another novel and appropriate feature to the exhibition—a "canteen" erected in the smaller gallery, where a group of charming young women serve liquid refreshments that are pleasant but innocuous.

A more extended notice of the pictures will be given in next week's Art and Artists.

At Friday Morning Club.

About fifty pictures, the most of them good and some of them masterpieces of painting, were shown in the rooms of the Friday Morning Club, in the Woman's Club Building, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the past week, and were viewed by thousands of women who belong to the various clubs of the West.

More than half of the pictures shown were by Western painters, a round dozen were from the brushes of famous Eastern American painters, and a small number came from abroad. The pictures were well hung and well lighted, the large lecture room of the club being converted into the main gallery.

Edward W. Redfield showed "The Quarry;" Frederick Waugh, "Bailey's Island;" John C. Johansen, "Edge of the Woods;" Leonard Ochtman, "Autumn;" D. J. Gue, "The Waning Moon" and "The Approaching Storm;" Lee Lufkin Kaula, "The Iridescent Vase," a figure study; Charles Warren Eaton, "Pines at Knocke;" George Melville Dewey, "Essex Marshes"—taking it all in all the most remarkable group of pictures by great American painters ever exhibited in Los Angeles.

The following western painters exhibited: Benjamin Chambers Brown, "Sea Breezes" and "California;" Franz Bischoff, "Cliffs at Laguna;" Frank Coburn, a night scene in Los Angeles, "The Lights of Hope;" E. Irving Couse, "The Pottery Maker;" William Swift Daniell, a water color from Eastlake Park; Ralph Davison Miller, "La Crescenta;" Hanson Puthuff, "Topanga Canyon;" Warren E. Rollins, two remarkable Indian pictures, "The Land of His Fathers" (reproduced in The Times some months ago) and "The Historian;" DetleffSamman, copy of a picture by Rubens; Frank P. Sauerwen, "Indian Head," "The Bathers," etc.; Granville Redmond, "The Golden Hour;" John M. Gamble, "The End of Day," "Wild Heliotrope," "Wild Buckwheat;" F. J. Girardin, "The Rising of the Mist;" Mrs. S. G. Harris, "Scene in Belgium."

ART NOTES.

An exhibition of eight or ten of Jean Mannheim's recent portraits opened yesterday in Herbert Hallett's gallery in the Blanchard Building, to continue for two weeks. Among the pictures shown are striking portraits of Col. J. B. Lankershim and John W. Mitchell.

Warren E. Rollins will soon start for San Diego to execute several commissions, studies of the mission. Mr. Rollins will show pictures at Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, this winter.

The arts-crafts exhibition at the Ebell Club will open on November 28. Hector Alliot, Mary Gearhart and Leta Horlocker will give art talks on the opening day.

The largest art museum west of Chicago is planned for Seattle. The Washington State Art Society is fostering the project. Five acres of ground in the heart of the city have been donated for the building site, and $350,000 has already been raised for the cost of erection.

E. Irving Couse has returned to New York from Taos, N. M., bringing with him eight large canvases which he has painted during the summer.

F. S. Church is painting a decorative panel for a church in Grand Rapids, Mich.

SON OF HEAVEN'S TOMB.

Philippine Hard Woods Ordered for the Mausoleum of China's Late Emperor.

[London and China Telegraph:] A magnificent mausoleum is to be built to mark the resting place of the late "Son of Heaven"— the Chinese Emperor, Kwang Hsu. The forests of the Orient were searched for the best and most durable wood, and, after much competition, a Manila lumber company has won what is described as the richest commercial prize of recent years in China. The preliminary contract for the material has now been signed by two of the Chinese imperial princes, and it provides in the first place for the shipment of 50,000 feet of Philippine hard wood. On its arrival at Peking work is to start forthwith on the mausoleum among the tombs of the Ming dynasty near the capital. For the huge pillars of the mausoleum giant trees will be taken from the Mindanao forests. Some of them, already cut, are sixty feet high and four feet in diameter, weighing over seventeen tons.

Appropriate Present.

The kindergarten teacher in a certain Sunday-school, who is also a public school teacher well on in years, announced to her class of little ones that as she was tired and much in need of rest she would not teach them during the summer.

The children's sympathies were aroused and they collected in the class a sum of money to buy their teacher a gift.

One evening the mother of the boy who was the leading spirit in the movement, asked:

"What are you going to buy for your teacher?"

"I'm not quite sure," replied the small boy, "but we saw something in the florist's window today that we thought she'd like. It was a pillow, all made of white flowers, and right in the middle in purple it said 'At Rest.'"—[New York Times.

ODD PERSONAL EVENTS.

Miss Arline Klaus of Chicago, who is visiting her sister, Mrs. Charles H. Barreuther, in Winstead, Ct., climbed an apple tree to get some fruit. Suddenly the limb on which she was standing broke. Her hair became entangled in a limb and she came to the ground, leaving her hair dangling in the tree. Others in the party thought she had been scalped. She wore a wig, which saved her life.

Maine's fattest man, Charles L. Carey of Windsor, although he tips the scales at 362 pounds, works like a beaver every day on his farm.

Torribio Cortezzio, who has been in this country fourteen years, recently applied to Judge Scott at Easton, Pa., for naturalization papers. He said on examination that he had never heard of Theodore Roosevelt, but knew that Taft was President. He got his paper.

S. H. Putnam of Wendell, Mass., who is 87 years old, has just taken out a hunter's license. Mr. Putnam is one of the best known fox hunters in that section of the State.

Charles Pabst of Jamaica, Long Island, 91 years of age, voted at the recent election. He began voting for Presidents when Franklin Pierce was a candidate. Mr. Pabst is French German by extraction and came to the United States 65 years ago.

Miss A. D. Winship, the 79-year-old freshman at the Ohio State University, won a prize for excellence at the summer school at Tower Hill, Mich.

Tom Riley, a Butte miner, who has been in the Montana State Prison for twelve years on a life sentence for murdering Patrick M. Largey, president of the Butte Savings Bank, has made good use of his time. He has studied law and minerology and at the present time is ready to take an examination to be admitted to the bar.

Miller is the commonest name in Uniontown, Penn., there being sixty-one families with that name listed. The Johnsons and Johnstons come next, the Williamses third and the Smiths fourth. There is but one John Smith in the town.

ACTIVE WOMEN.

Baroness Aletta Korff, an American girl and a Bryn Mawr graduate, who is the wife of an official in Finland, is reported as saying that one of the first things the women of Norway did with their ballots was to get the government to start schools of domestic training for girls.

Dr. Lydia DeWitt, formerly instructor in pathology and embryology at the University of Michigan, has recently been appointed assistant city bacteriologist of St. Louis. She is the first woman to enter the Health Department of that city.

Marie von Ebner-Eschenbach has just celebrated her eightieth birthday and the Goethe Society bestowed its new medal on her as the leading German poetess of the day. A special fund will be collected which will be disposed of according to her judgment.

Through the work of the Countess of Aberdeen it is said that all of Ireland, from one end to the other, has been stimulated into an active and aggressive fight against the ravages of tuberculosis.

Kate Langley Bosher, the author of "Mary Cary," has returned from a motor trip through England and Southern France. She is now at her home in Norfolk, Va. Her story of the little orphan girl is to be brought out in a new gift edition this fall.

The recent marriage of Mrs. Henry de la Pasture to Sir Hugh Clifford, an Englishman, has again brought into prominence one of Great Britain's renowned women authors and playwrights with whose success this country is well acquainted.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

President Taft has personally presented to Lieutenant Gordon Johnston, of the Seventh Cavalry, the medal of honor awarded to that young officer by Congress. Lieut.-Gen. Wood and other high army officers, in full uniform, were present at the ceremony in the White House. Lieut. Johnston was awarded the medal for gallantry in action against the Philippine Moros at Buddajo in 1906. He led the charge against the outlaws and was wounded in action. His bravery, however, led to success for the American arms. Twice before this event Lieut. Johnston had been recommended for recognition by Congress. It is the purpose of President Taft to award all such medals in the future in person.

Lieut. James W. Hayward, U. S. A., has been commended in general orders by Maj.-Gen. Duvall, commanding the Army of the Philippines, "for conspicuous gallantry and efficiency in the engagement against hostile Moros at Bud Dajo, Island of Jolo, March 7 and 8, 1906." Gen. Duvall has also publicly commended First Sergeant James H. Washburn and Private Frank Mailey, Troop B, Second Cavalry, who he says distinguished themselves at Jolo, Jolo, June 22, 1910, by their conduct in assisting in the rescue of a comrade from drowning.

Brig.-Gen. George B. Davis, Judge Advocate General, will reach the retiring age of 62 years on February 14.

Brig.-Gen. Daniel H. Brush is the only general officer who will retire for age in 1912, he reaching the retiring age on May 9.

Rear-Admiral C. H. Arnold, who was transferred to the retired list on November 14 on account of age, has had nearly twenty-three years service at sea since he entered the navy in 1863.

Maj.-Gen. J. Franklin Bell, former chief of staff of the army, accompanied by his aides will sail for the Philippine Islands December 5 to relieve Maj.-Gen. William P. Duvall, now in command of the Philippine division. Gen. Duvall will retire from active service January 13.

Brig.-Gen. Frederick K. Ward, promoted to brigade rank in February, will be relieved from command of the post at Fort Riley, December 4, preparatory to retirement for age March 19, 1911.

Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder, in command of the fleet of sixteen battleships now on a cruise to England and France, is believed to be on his last cruise. On the return of the fleet in January he will transfer his command, it is believed, to Rear Admiral Hugo Osterhaus who was Admiral Evans' chief of staff on the start of the voyage around the world.

OVER THE SEA.

The Prince of Wales visits Stoke Flemming, a little village near Dartmouth, every Sunday, and enjoys an 18-cent tea at a famous lunch shop in the village where tea with clotted cream, raspberry jam and rich cakes are served. The young cadets from Dartmouth College, having discovered it, now resort to it every week. Most of them gorge on jam and cakes, but the Prince of Wales takes the wiser course and has a sober tea of bread and butter and cream and one slice of cake. Then, while his comrades are busy chalking up their accounts to be paid at some time in the future, the young Prince settles his bill and goes home.

The Emperor of Austria is to be honored by the city of Berlin by having his name given to the square near the new operahouse. The Kaiser Franz Josefplatz, as it will be called, is situated on Unter den Linden, and is surrounded by the palaces of William I. and the Empress Frederick, the Frederick William University and the Royal Guards.

Michel Ball, royal hangman of Hungary, has gone on strike "because his salary does not suffice for his appetite during these expensive times, and humanity has cut down his fees to almost nothing, too many condemned criminals being pardoned."

Prince Henry of Prussia, the German Emperor's brother, more and more resembles his late uncle, King Edward. The cut of his beard, the grayness of it, and the contour of his face now make that resemblance more striking than ever. He is not quite as portly as his distinguished relative.

PROFESSIONAL MEN.

Rev. Edward F. Lee of New Hampton, Iowa, will soon sail for Java, under contract to spend five years as a teacher in a school at Batavia, built by Chinese merchants for the education of their sons. He was selected by Bishop William F. Oldham, Methodist, who has charge of the vast territory which centers in the vicinity of Singapore.

Miss Mabel Strawbridge Macher, daughter of Mrs. M. S. Macher of the Lenox apartments, Lenox Park, Baltimore, has volunteered to go to China as head nurse of the University of Pennsylvania Medical School in Canton.

Rev. A. T. Pierson will leave shortly upon a tour of the world. It is Dr. Pierson's intention to visit foreign mission fields of Asia, and he will reach London in time for the Keswick convention in July, 1911. The itinerary will include India, Burma, Ceylon and probably Egypt.

Dr. Alfred Mercer of Syracuse, N. Y., who is the oldest active physician in Central New York, was tendered a dinner on November 11 by the local Academy of Medicine, that being his 90th birthday. During the fifty-seven years he has followed his profession he has served as health officer, a member of the city and State boards of health, and from 1875 to 1899 was a member of the faculty of the College of Medicine.

Rev. Dr. J. F. Ghormley, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Portland, has the unusual record of having been instrumental in securing a new church building in each of the fourteen cities in which he was pastor. A Christian church in Portland is in process of construction and will cost $60,000. He has just celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his ministerial career.

Ample Testimony.

"Let me tell you, gentlemen," said the earnest vegetarian, who was lecturing before the Butchers' Association, "that there is more energy contained in a single banana than there is in five pounds of the best beefsteak."

Instantly a storm of protesting and derisive hisses broke forth from the indignant audience. But above the noisy rasp could be heard the stentorian voice of a husky-looking individual shouting: "The man is right! The man is right! But he fails to allow enough energy for the fruit. I know from my own personal experience that a mere fraction of the outside of a banana contains sufficient energy to take the best wrestler in the world off his feet."—[Chicago News.

HOUSES AND LOTS—BARGAINS

SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 20, 1910.

On All News Stands, On Trains, 10 Cents. 5 CENTS.

300,000 in the world has an undeveloped vicinity of so much promise. The San Fernando Valley alone is capable of supporting a vast population and its fertile reaches have as yet been scarcely scratched. The foundation for a high value in Los Angeles real estate is to be found in the absolute certainty that Southern California is destined to be one of the most densely populated areas in the world. It is the opinion of the writer that the highest front foot price asked for business property in this, the metropolis of the future empire of the Southwest, is a bargain figure for the man who can afford to buy and hold a good downtown corner. Parcels of realty in San Francisco are held at $10,000 a foot, and these bay city holdings are rarely over 100 feet in depth. On the other hand, the top price asked for Los Angeles business realty is $6000 a foot, and this is for property averaging 150 feet in depth. Frontage, almost within a stone's throw of the city's commercial center can be bought now at prices which in a few years will appear ridiculously small. All this close-in property will be almost priceless for apartment sites before another census.

Looking to the Future.

The meetings of the Southwestern City Planning Conference in this city have been full of instruction and have doubtless awakened a new impulse for the practical conservation of the artistic, humane and idealistic interests involved in the future growth and upbuilding of Los Angeles. Such topics as tenement house reforms, improved housing conditions, movements for the development of park facilities for the poor and the like have somehow become inseparably associated with the metropolis of the country and other large Eastern cities, and it sounds strange to Western ears. Some of the speakers at the conference have, however, made it pretty clear that there is room for improvement in general living conditions in certain quarters, even of Los Angeles. It would appear almost preposterous that there should be people here housed in places where the Southland air and sunshine were not available in full measure, yet we are assured by men and women who have made a study of the local situation that there is such a thing as "tenement house" life, with all it implies, right in Los Angeles. Ignorance rather than poverty must be held to account for this unnatural condition of affairs. A lively topic throughout the meetings of the city planners was the model village for the poor, which is planned near Elysian Park, at the head of Cottage Home avenue. The models of suggested house types attracted particular interest, and the people back of the project declare confidence in the ultimate consummation of their plans to build a village where children may be brought up under ideal conditions, even where parents are more than ordinarily poor. One big fact has been taken into careful consideration by the friends of the movement—and that is the certainty that with the completion of the Panama Canal will come to Southern California a horde of immigrants, poor in purse and undisciplined in habits of sanitary living, who will be ready material for the formation of slum districts, such as are the despair of the Eastern cities. The city must indeed be prepared to intelligently handle this situation when it arrives, for it would be but little short of disgraceful for Los Angeles to ever have a serious congestion problem.

The question of the cost restrictions commonly enforced by owners of subdivisions against lot buyers who desire to erect residences has been pretty thoroughly thrashed out in Los Angeles courts on various occasions, invariably with the result that the validity of the contract terms has been sustained. Last week, however, the question was given a unique turn in a case between the owner of a west end tract and a builder on the property. The latter, while erecting a house on the front of his lot conforming to all the restrictions had also under construction a structure which he alleged to be a garage. The man who brought the action advanced evidence that while the so-called garage looked the part as to exterior, it was in reality a house, being fitted with a bath, kitchen and living room. In the role of a dwelling it was held by the judge that the place was not up to the restriction in the point of cost. The builder was accordingly enjoined from ever using the place for residence purposes. The decision will be of considerable interest to many builders who contemplate establishing servants' quarters in garage buildings, for there is every likelihood that the verdict of last week will be invoked as a precedent by owners of high class tracts.

Two Striking 1910 Improvements.

RENTAL LIST IS LARGE.

Leasing Department of Local Firm Reports Two Hundred Thousand Dollar Business.

Robert Marsh & Co. report through their rental department the following leases, aggregating $200,000: Octavius Morgan to Fred C. Stillwell, ten years' lease on hotel now under construction on the northeast corner of Eighth and Hope, at a total rental of $70,000. Robert Marsh Co., to Chas. M. Rasmussen, three years' lease on cafeteria at No. 317 West Eighth, at a total rental of $10,000 Forve-Pettebone Company to C. F. Weber & Co., five years' lease on loft at No. 512 South Broadway, at $9000. Robert Marsh & Co. to Lottie T. Logan, five years' lease on hotel at No. 317½ West Eighth, $9000. Port Costa Milling Company to C. F. Weber & Co., five years' lease on warehouse at No. 1709 San Fernando street, $7500. Robert Marsh & Co., to J. W. Ward, three years' lease on store at No. 619 South Olive street. Z. L. Parmelee Company to Pacific Coast School of Railroading, three years' lease on loft at No. 720 South Broadway. Robert Marsh & Co. to M. T. Peck, three years' lease on store at No. 621 South Olive street. L. Y. Pratt to E. C. Smith, three years' lease on store at No. 611 South Olive street. M. Meyerfeld, Jr., to Wm. R. [illegible], five years' lease on Hotel [illegible]ford, South Main street, $54,000.

WHITTIER ACTIVITIES.

Real estate deals aggregating nearly $100,000 are reported from Whittier during the past week. Among the most important of these was the sale of a 27½ acre orange grove belonging to Z. H. Osmun, of East Whittier. The property was sold to George H. Kibler, a recent arrival from Iowa, for $30,000. The deal was made through J. Howard Johnson. The same dealer also reports the sale of a five-acre lemon grove in East Whittier for O. B. Griffin to E. W. Lawrence for $19,000 and of a seven-acre tract for Richard H. Harris to George E. Osmun, for $6000. The firm of Baldwin & Bell report the sale of thirteen and one-half acres of unimproved land in the Orchard Dale Tract to H. T. Reed, of Long Beach, for $9233 and of ten acres to Mr. Burge, for $6900. D. E. Gooch has sold to Macy J. Smith, four acres of five-year-old Valencias for $7000. C. C. Sidwell has sold to D. E. Gooch, fifteen acres of soft-shell walnuts on the Los Angeles "good roads" near Pico Station, the consideration was $9000. The firm of Baldwin and Bell report also the sale of two lots in Whittier to Dr. George Wonburg, of Marshalltown, Iowa, for $8700. Dr. Wonburg is planning to build a thirteen-room residence.

STRUCTURAL TAILORING.

CLOTHING A STEEL SKELETON.

AIR RIVETTER YIELDS TO MAN WITH THE TROWEL.

Two Stories of Terra Cotta Facing Finished on Alexandria Annex. Auditorium Hotel Presents Handsome Stone Facades on Both Fifth and Olive Streets.

The fourteen-story steel skeleton of the Alexandria Hotel Annex on South Spring street is being clothed as rapidly as the workmen engaged in laying the terra cotta and brick can handle the material. The date when the entire front will present a completed appearance is not far distant, although many months additional must elapse before the elaborate interior decoration is finished. Two stories of the front are laid and the south wall with its three large courts has been encased to a height of six stories.

The Annex was designed by the architects of the Alexandria itself, John Parkinson and Edwin Bergstrom, who planned the Security block and the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank Building, two mammoth and imposing structures on the same block of Spring street, the latter being now under construction. At the northeast corner of Fifth and Spring streets the eleven-story Chester Building designed by the same architects will be started in December.

The Alexandria with its huge addition will be one of the most modern and magnificent hostelries on the continent. Fully $1,000,000 will be expended in the Spring street addition alone, a permit having been taken out by the owners A. C. Billicke and R. A. Rowan, for that amount. The date of beginning the construction of the proposed Fifth street addition to the hotel extending along Fifth street to a frontage of 100 feet on Broadway has not as yet been determined.

The Auditorium Hotel at the northwest corner of Fifth and Olive has been practically completed as to exterior, and it is declared by the architects, Neher & Skilling, that the interior will be finished in time to permit of guests being admitted by January 15. Both the Olive and Fifth street facades present an imposing and finished appearance and the corner bids fair to soon be one of the most attractive in the city.

The building fronts 162 feet on Fifth by sixty feet on Olive and is six-stories and basement in height. It will contain 140 rooms in all. The street fronts are handsomely faced in stone, this extending around the two large courts on Fifth street.

The lobby will be ornately finished in marble and mahogany, as will also the ladies' parlor opening just off it. A feature of the decorative treatment will be richly decorated panelled friezes. The appointments will include electric passenger and freight elevators and vacuum cleaning.

The hotel with its site will represent an investment of $300,000. R. D. Wade is the owner and Frank Green, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, is the lessee. The first published account and picture of the Auditorium Hotel appeared exclusively in The Times of February 5.

LEASE CLOSE-IN SITES.

Rental Men of Leading Realty Firm Report Active Demand for Store Sites.

R. A. Rowan & Co., report the following leases: Mrs. Ellen Michener, three-story building at No. 218-220 West Fourth street, to Frank Van Batten and Clyde O. Connor, for ten years. The place will be used as a barber shop. Dr. W. W. Schiffman, dentist, from the Main Street Company, part of the upper floor at No. 427 South Main street, for four years. The store at No. 759 South Hill street for Juana Larronde to Messrs. Montgomery and Tone, who will conduct a grocery and fruit store.

The storeroom at No. 123 South Broadway to J. H. Staten, for a confectionery store. Joseph Burkhard, for five years, two-story building, to be erected at Nos. 406-408 West Pico street, to the B. F. Goodrich Company, of Akron, Ohio. The building will have a frontage of fifty feet on Pico. The Title Insurance and Trust Company, the southeast corner of Fifth and Maple to H. L. Donnelly, for three years. Mr. Donnelly will open a clothing store.

Mrs. Jeanette G. Donovan to C. F. Kohler, the photographer, for a store to be erected at No. 535 South Main street. Storeroom at No. 114 South Broadway to Jerry Kovacich, restaurant man of the city. R. C. Hulbert, a lease on the premises at No. 1040 South Main street from Emeline Childs. He will open a tire business.

ECLIPSE IS TOTAL.

Best Previous November Permit Figure Already Far Behind Present Month's Record.

The total eclipse of the best previous November building record in the history of Los Angeles was accomplished yesterday with over $250,000 added as a spur to construction circles in the future. The total for the month can not fall far short of $2,250,000, for there are nine business days still to be accounted for in the permit activities of the building apartment.

The total was helped to the extent of $850,000 by the taking out of permits by Parkinson & Bergstrom for the new $650,000 Los Angeles Athletic Club Building at Seventh and Olive and by Paul C. Pape for the ten-story Broadway Investment Company block at Second and Broadway. The rest, which of itself is equal to the total for the corresponding period of last year, is represented for the most part by permits for residences, apartment houses and small stores.

The building activity of the year to date is represented by 9596 permits and $19,731,543 valuation. With a month and a third still to be heard from The Times' prediction of $21,000,000 for the entire year bids fair to fall short by $500,000 or more. The calendar year record of 1906, the biggest previous annual total, is already over $1,500,000 behind.

BUYS ON SOUTH GRAND.

A. Lofton, a retired capitalist of Little Rock, Arkansas, has purchased the southwest corner of Grand avenue and Thirty-seventh street, for $4500. The buyer contemplates the erection at an early date of a handsome building on the site. The sale was made through the agency of Mines & Farish.

PIONEERING.

BIG THEATER TO START AT ONCE.

PLAYHOUSE IS FORERUNNER OF OTHER IMPROVEMENTS.

Building Movement Headed Toward Water Front—Block Designed by Los Angeles Architect, Leased to Angeleno Tenant and to Be Built by Angel City Contractor.

SAN DIEGO, Nov. 19.—Within the next few days a building permit for the new Speckels theater will be taken out. The permit will be for $500,000. Before November ends this permit will swell the total building values for the year to $2,600,000.

The contract for the construction of this building has been awarded to the F. O. Engstrom Company of Los Angeles and bond guaranteeing completion by October 15, 1911, has been given. Contractors say this will be record time for the completion of a structure of such large dimensions. The successful contracting firm has ordered an extra equipment of steam shovels to begin work on the basement, which, by extending under the sidewalks on two streets, is to be 200 by 235 feet in area. Work of wrecking the old buildings on the site will begin as soon as the tenants can vacate.

The architect of the structure is Harrison Albright of Los Angeles and L. E. Behymer of the same city is the tenant.

The erection of a six-story building on this site, Second and D streets, is the forerunner of other extensive improvements planned for that thoroughfare to extend from the Union building as far down toward the water front as the proposed site of a union depot for the Santa Fe and San Diego & Arizona railways.

Announcement that the Spreckels company will begin this improvement immediately has awakened new interest in realty circles. Among recent sales reported by Fintzelberg & Steinmetz are the following: For John Weed to F. W. Bradley, 100x100 feet at the corner of India and Maple streets, $2500; for P. Goutent to Mrs. Thomas Ibs, 50x100 feet at the corner of Fifteenth and L streets, $2500; for the Mission Hills Company to Joseph Dietan, villa lot in Mission Hills, $650. All these properties are to be improved.

James McCory has purchased of E. J. Kallright, two lots in Coronado, for $800. The purchaser, who recently came here from the East, is having plans prepared for a residence.

Newcomers from the bleak winter regions of the Middle West and North continue to buy here. Wells & Lane this week sold to T. B. Frost the fine villa home of J. Corcoran at Chula Vista, for $5000. Mr. Frost has brought his family here from Atlantic, Ia.

A. C. Pratt has sold his fine residence on Golden Hill, near D street to J. B. Nickum, a retired business man of Portland, Or., who paid $7000 for the property.

Mrs. Mary Loree of Vancouver, B. C. has bought the Clinton J. Lester residence on the east side of Ninth streets, between Cedar and Date, for $9000.

Building operations continue to keep contractors busy. Among several contracts recently let are included the following: Wednesday Club House, exterior plaster with pergolas and an auditorium to be finished in cedar, $11,500. This building was designed by Mrs. Hazel Waterman, a woman architect who has planned a number of handsome structures in this city. The building will be located at the corner of Sixth street and Ivy Lane and will be used as a meeting place for a woman's club and other societies.

Plans have been completed for a two-story residence to be erected at Kalmia and Third streets for F. L. Botsford, at a cost of $7500. The exterior will be heavy timbered cornice and shingle sides.

A contract has been let for the construction of a two-story residence for J. H. Bradshaw to be built on Lyndon way at a cost of $6500.

DEALERS OPTIMISTIC.

Outlook for Coming Months Declared by Agents to Be Unusually Promising.

SOUTH PASADENA, Nov. 19.—Recent developments have been of such a nature that the South Pasadena real estate dealers have grown optimistic over the outlook for an active market during the coming months. Investors are active, building activity is notable, and money is available for all legitimate demands.

The Sparks Realty Company reports the following recent sales: Al Olsen of Los Angeles to P. F. Mahoiney, lot 40x135 feet, Mission street, between Orange Grove avenue and Adeline street, $1000. SAYS THEY'RE ALL COMING.

E. P. Bryan, senior member of the realty firm of Bryan & Bradford, returned during the week from a month's visit in the South and East. Mr. Bryan spent considerable time in the Middle South, Chicago and New York, and talked with many people in these places. "Farmers, merchants, professional men, everybody you meet almost in the East and South, wants to come to Los Angeles," said Mr. Bryan yesterday. "This city is mentioned ten times to any other city's once," he said. "The census returns, I do not think, really astonishing easterners as much as one would think, for the growth of Los Angeles has long been an accepted fact everywhere. Let the proper literature dealing with the Southland's resources, agricultural and industrial, together with our climatic, scenic and educational advantages be once given a general distribution throughout the country and thousands who are halting between coming and not coming will be out this way as soon as they can sell the 'old place' and get here."

A charming home, well built and worth considerably more than we are asking for it just now. The location is in a fine part of Wilshire, the lot an east front, and the neighborhood unexcelled. There are seven splendid rooms and a closed-in sleeping balcony; hardwood floors and good basement and furnace; laundry, etc., complete. You will be delighted with the cosy, well-planned rooms and the beautiful finish throughout is as good as any ten-thousand-dollar home we know. Price only $6250.

BEAUTIFUL WEST ADAMS HEIGHTS HOME. ASTONISHING VALUE.

[illegible]

This modern ten-room residence is on one of the best streets of West Adams Heights. The lot is 50x150 feet, with good homes and wide spaces on either side. The house is of cement plaster and part frame construction, handsome in appearance, with ornamental porte cochere and wide cement drive. There are hardwood floors throughout the house, and breakfast-room, in addition to den and other usual living-rooms, downstairs; above stairs are five fine bedrooms, a very complete bath, sleeping balcony, etc. The price is fully $1000 under exact duplication valuation, and good terms may be had.

At the above ridiculously low figure we are offering this handsome twelve-room home, finished in selected hardwood, and located in the most exclusive residence section of Los Angeles; surrounded by most attractive homes, this is without doubt the most pleasing in architectural design and general appearance. Built by the owner for his home, nothing which contributes to a livable one has been omitted, and the construction is unsurpassed. The principal living-rooms are finished in quartered oak, heavily beamed and paneled, with every conceivable built-in feature, perfectly planned; the second floor contains four airy sleeping rooms in white enamel, with running water in each, numerous commodious closets, delightful sleeping balcony, and two completely equipped bathrooms. Conveniently arranged kitchen, cellar with furnace, and Ruud heater, and large garage, complete a home which for location, construction and general desirability cannot be equaled by many $30,000 homes in Los Angeles.

For the first time in years we are offering a beautiful home in St. James Park at a sacrifice. It consists of ten large rooms and four baths. The lot is 85x150, on a corner, directly opposite the park, and will make an ideal apartment site if one cares to remove the building at some future date. The grounds are highly improved with old trees and shrubs and the house is modern in every particular. Let us take you to see one of the show places of Los Angeles, and you will readily realize the snap we are offering.

MOST ELEGANT HOME ON BEAUTIFUL WILSHIRE BOULEVARD.

[illegible]

Located near Vermont ave., on a corner lot, 220x150 feet, the largest corner on the boulevard, and the house consists of twenty of the most handsomely finished rooms we have ever seen, every one in carefully selected hardwood, and the large ballroom is the most magnificent one in any private residence in Los Angeles; the lower floor is in crotch mahogany and quartered oak, and the finish is simply unexcelled. The dainty reception-room, decorated by a well-known artist, has hardware of solid gold and hangings of the same rich color. The lighting fixtures on this floor are thoroughly in harmony with the other handsome details, and represent an expenditure of more than $7500. All the living-rooms are most spacious, with superb appointments which must be seen to be appreciated. The four bedchambers, with dressing-rooms, on the second floor are each provided with fully tiled baths, equipped with the latest and most expensive ideas in modern plumbing. On this floor will also be found a very dainty reception-room and cosy den. Ballroom and serving rooms occupy the third floor, with elevator service to the pantries and wine cellar. The handsome garage follows the architectural lines of the house, and contains man's room and bath, with ample space for two machines.

The construction is unequaled, and expense was not considered in working out every detail which could possibly enhance the comfort or beauty of the home. The interior finish and decorations are most satisfying, the harmony of the general scheme of decoration being flawless. If you are interested, let us show you the handsomest home in Los Angeles.

ALTHOUSE BROS.,
Members L. A. Realty Board.
201-205 Story Bldg.
Sixth and Broadway.

Right now is the very time to select your future home, and Althouse Bros. are most competent to help you in making your selection. We have never before had so many real bargains to offer you in up-to-date desirable homes. But the indications are that values will go steadily higher—buy now, while you have the advantage of a wider selection and low prices.

SIX ROOMS—BUNGALOW.

[illegible] This superb little home is just as complete in every respect as a much larger and more expensive one. The location, in the West Adams district, is all that could be desired; the arrangement and design is simple yet convenient and in very good taste; the Gruby tile mantel in the living-room would do justice to a much more pretentious house; artistic buffet; built-in seats and bookcases; hardwood floors; pass pantry leads to fully equipped buffet kitchen; screen porch, laundry trays and other conveniences; the bedrooms are airy and pleasant, have large closets and are well supplied with windows. You will find nothing so entirely satisfactory at this price. [illegible]

WILSHIRE BUNGALOW.

$3275 For a seven-room bungalow on a corner lot in the Wilshire district, this one will meet every requirement. The price is exceedingly reasonable; the construction and material are of the best; all floors are hardwood; from front cement porch you enter reception hall with living-room adjoining on the right, large open fireplace in this room, beamed ceilings and built-in seats and bookcases; dining-room is especially attractive, with its many windows and splendid buffet; den with built-in writing desk; white enameled buffet kitchen, with fruit and cool closets; fine big bedrooms in white enamel finish and French papers; bath all in white; cement basement. A delightful bungalow home. $3275

SEVEN ROOMS—ARDMORE.

$5750 The class of homes on Ardmore st., represents the very best in Southern California design and architecture, and this handsome seven-room bungalow is right up to the standard, from the cement front porch, trimmed in white stone, to the cement basement and good-sized garage. The living-room is finished in mahogany, with imported, silk-finish paper on walls and a splendid white stone mantel with tapestries above and art glass windows either side; den has casement windows and built-in writing desk and bookcases; dining-room is in mission finish, with leather paper to plate rail, large circle bay window; buffet kitchen, woodstone sink; three charming bedrooms in white enamel; rear hall; linen closet; large attic for storage. $5750

SEVEN-ROOM RESIDENCE.

[illegible] One of those substantial, homelike homes that have made the Wilshire district so noted as a desirable residence district. The downstairs rooms are finished in weathered oak; living-room paneled in green and brown, white stone mantel, archway to dining-room; dining-room is just back of living-room and has French doors to side porch; den is a front room, with large white enameled kitchen, with linoleum on floor and woodstone sink entire width of room; screen porch with two laundry tubs; bedrooms are finished in white enamel, with French papers in dainty designs; full length mirrors; the white enameled bath has tile floor and full length mirror. [illegible]

WILSHIRE—TEN ROOMS.

$6975 There are many attractive features in this splendid residence that make it, together with the very valuable property on which it is located, one of the best buys you could make. Fine large living-room, with beamed ceilings and mission finish, handsome stone mantel, built-in seats and mirrors; arched doorways to dining-room and library; library also in mission finish, with walls paneled in Japanese grass cloth, dining-room paneled in oak to plate-rail, buffet with leaded-glass doors and fine mirror; sunny buffet kitchen with walls lined with cupboards; hot water heater; cement basement; garage; rear stairway to second floor and white enamel bedrooms with maple floors and white enamel finish; large balcony; linen closet; bath with medicine closet; mirror and newest sanitary fittings throughout. $6975

ST. ANDREWS PLACE.

$8500 This is one of the most comfortable and artistic homes you have ever been in, there are so many little conveniences that very few builders ever think of. Reception hall has built-in seat, weathered oak finish downstairs; living-room in Craftsman effect with large Gruby tile mantel, bookcases either side extending width of room; den has many windows overlooking very pretty rear yard, set in lawns and flowers; dining-room is a front room with very broad buffet; white enameled pass pantry to kitchen, lined with cupboards and windows; back porch has cement floor; beside the laundry chute there is paper chute to basement and furnace; large upstairs hall and linen closet; big bedrooms, one front room has two closets; fine bath; Ruud water heater. [illegible]

EAST FRONT—WILSHIRE.

[illegible] You couldn't have bought this property for $500 more a short time ago—its value is no less now than it was then—but the owner finds it NECESSARY to sell—it's your exceptional opportunity. The cement porch is trimmed in blue brick; the living-room extends full width of house and is finished in mahogany, mission tile mantel extending clear to the beamed ceiling; dining-room finished in weathered oak with broad strikingly simple buffet; breakfast-room with French doors to porch; pass pantry, with drawers and cupboards; white enamel kitchen with windows all one side, screen porch, toilet and broom closet; four large bedrooms; sun-room; bath with tile floor and oval lavatory, large attic, finished solid; house piped for furnace. [illegible]

AN ELEGANT RESIDENCE.

[illegible] One of the many very attractive homes to be found only in the best part of the Wilshire district, this property will not remain at such a very low price for long. Everything about the house gives the impression of elegance combined with good taste. From the cement front porch with its blue brick trimmings you enter a splendid living-room finished in mahogany and extending full width of house, has big circle bay window at one end and a full-length mirror; den also finished in mahogany with leather paneling, art-glass windows and bookcases, with leaded-glass doors; dining-room paneled in weathered oak to plate rail; fine large buffet kitchen; servant's room and bathroom complete with toilet; house piped for furnace; hardwood floors upstairs as well as down; bedrooms finished in white enamel; very large closets, one has running water and built-in drawers; excellent bath with tile floor. [illegible]

EAST FRONT RESIDENCE.

$11,500 The greatest care has been taken in the construction and arrangement of this beautifully appointed ten-room home in the Wilshire district; splendid outlook from broad cement front porch; large reception hall and handsome open staircase finished in curly birch; living-room paneled about six feet in Tabasco mahogany, with imported tapestries above; den finished in Peruvian mahogany; dining-room paneled in quarter-sawed oak with expensive tapestries above; elegant buffet with beveled plate glass and copper doors; pass pantry, kitchen has innumerable conveniences; bath and servant's room downstairs; five well-aired bedrooms with exquisite French wall hangings; tile bath with oval pedestal lavatory and oval mirror; sleeping porch; furnace; cement basement, beautiful grounds and surroundings. $11,500

MAGNIFICENT WILSHIRE CORNER.

$30,000 An east front residence and one of the finest to be found in the Wilshire district. Of blue brick and plaster, a wide cement porch across the front and side makes an ideal living-room, with a full view of the mountains; grounds are beautifully terraced and laid out and improved by landscape gardener; numberless shrubs, flowers and vines; garage that harmonizes with house; finish of the interior of this house is the very finest; tiled vestibule entrance, hall paneled high in curly birch; den, which is a front corner room, paneled in mahogany, has green Gruby tile mantel with bookcase either side; living-room in Peruvian mahogany; brown Gruby tile mantel and brown decorations, giving a very artistic, soft effect; front window in living-room is 18 feet wide; dining-room paneled to plate rail in quarter-sawed oak; simple, elegant buffet, window either side; buffet kitchen, complete in all appointments; cement cellar, furnace; hardwood floors throughout; staircase in hardwood; 5 large bedrooms and glass-inclosed sleeping porch, can be opened entirely on two sides; bedrooms in white enamel, unusually large number of windows; full-length mirrors; large closets and cedar clothes press; two baths, walls and ceiling tile, with mosaic floors; third floor finished, servant's room, bath, large billiard-room. This is a fine corner, just at the crest of the hill, thus overlooking the country on all sides. $30,000

FOR SALE—HOUSES.

ARTISTIC NEW BUNGALOW.

In buying a home one of the important questions to be considered is the general surroundings. No matter how attractive your house may be, the effect is destroyed if the houses on each side are not attractive. How would you like to live in a row of typical California bungalows—where the bungalow next door is different, but in the same class as you own? We own an entire block 1000 feet long on which we are building a bungalow row that will be a California show place. The lots are above the sidewalk, houses are fifty feet back, in front of which there will be one continuous green terrace of 1000 feet, dotted with flowers and shrubbery.

Now here is the description of a bungalow in this beautiful setting which is hard to beat: Just completed, six large rooms, a front cement porch that is so big that it is a whole room in itself; large wainscoted beamed living-room with unique gray stone fireplace; three airy, sunny bedrooms with many windows; complete cabinet kitchen; hardwood floors in every room but kitchen, artistic electric light fixtures, plate rails, stunning built-in buffet and bookcases, bedrooms white enameled and beautifully tinted. It is thoroughly artistic and comfortable. High ground means health, beautiful view, excellent location; only twenty minutes out, with fine car service. If you are looking for something first-class, don't pass this up. Price is $3500, only $550 cash, balance like rent. Phone for appointment to see it.

NOTICE TO HOMESEEKERS.

The modern house, No. 1821 Westmoreland boulevard, which has been in course of building for several months, is now completed and on the market.

It contains 12 spacious rooms, besides 3 bathrooms, halls, pantries and closets. Is finished in imported woods of five different kinds. Hardwood floors throughout, and with a liberal use of art and plate glass; no pains and money has been spared in trying to make it thoroughly desirable.

The exterior is of the semi-colonial style of architecture, with stone foundation two feet above grade line, with stone porches and massive stone chimneys. The garage, in keeping with the house, contains three finished rooms. The property faces the east, is located about 100 feet north of Washington street and can be seen from 10 to 12 a.m. or by appointment. REMEMBER THE LOCATION, 1821 WESTMORELAND BOULEVARD. BEAUTIFUL HOME ON HIGH GROUND

IN CHAPMAN PARK.

NEW WILSHIRE HOME.

Here is the one that is most complete and very finely built, to stand the test of the most exacting purchaser.

You enter into a large hall, which has a beautiful staircase leading to a mezzanine balcony in the rear, and forming a very attractive and useful feature to a usually stereotyped looking part of the average home. To the right is the large blue dining room finished in a very light-colored fumed oak. To the left is the large brown living room, with the same finished woodwork and in the rear of this room is the green library, finished in mahogany.

This house contains 5 large bedrooms, 2 baths, shower, 4 lavatories, breakfast room, billiard room or nursery, 15x40 feet, on third floor; sleeping porch, large basement, clothes chute, speaking tubes, fine garage and lawn, and everything absolutely complete. The lighting fixtures are all hammered copper and very artistic. For terms

CONTRACTORS—

And Builders

WHY NOT?

HAVE AN INCOME?

Instead of an outgo?

Improve that vacant lot with some kind of building.

Make it pay you, instead of you paying it.

We make a specialty of building flats and apartment houses. We plan them so as to bring the highest income with the least possible expenditure.

Now, if you are contemplating building, we want you to call and see us.

If we can't convince you that we can save you money, time and inconvenience, why, there's no harm done.

We make liberal loans for building purposes.

FOR SALE—
IN THE TREND OF PROGRESS.

ON THE VENICE SHORT LINE.

THERE IS NO OTHER SPECIFIC SECTION IN THE whole Southwest today where the profit to be realized in so short a time will be as great as that derived by the purchasers who now invest their money in property along the VENICE SHORT LINE. Property on the line of the subway that is now being offered for sale can never again be purchased at such ridiculously low prices as are now prevailing, and it can be truthfully stated that in one year from now every piece of property we are now selling will be quoted at exactly twice the present price. It is hard for even the most optimistic person to realize what it will mean to be within 15 minutes of the heart of the city, to be able to enjoy all the pleasures of a country home and at the same time retain and have all the conveniences of the city.

ONLY—$[illegible]—ONLY.

A BEAUTIFUL PLACE
FOR A BEAUTIFUL HOME.
If you are planning to put up a beautiful home, you want to secure the right location. I invite you to visit Oxford Square. Compare it with any other property you know. I say it is the finest residence district in Los Angeles, and so do many people who have bought there and erected handsome homes. You will agree with me. Oxford Square is in upper Pico Heights, passed by the Pico Street car-line. The new subway will run directly through the property. The large lots front on 70-foot, oil-tamped avenues, with cement walks, gutters and curbs, and wide parkings planted to palms, flowers and ornamental trees. Graceful electroliers line the streets. It has every convenience heart could wish. Lots for handsome homes can be purchased here at $1500 up, and only a small cash payment need to be made to secure one.

CLOSE IN ACRE
If you want one of the few remaining acres at Somerset, bring $10, and bring it now. I have only a few left, and they are selling off daily. When I say HURRY, I mean it. Somerset is only 30 minutes away by trolley—a pretty, suburban place, with schools, stores, telephones, and the usual conveniences. The soil is a rich sandy loam; abundant water is furnished free. Conditions are just right for a profitable garden, for chickens, fruit trees, etc. You can have these things and still work here in town, for transportation facilities are excellent. $10 secures an acre. $10 monthly pays for it. Excursions every hour daily and up to 3 p.m. Sundays.

FOR SALE—
JOIN THE BUNGALOW CLUB.
Limited to twenty members. Apply early. Applications considered in the order received.
The first easy step toward acquiring an ideal home
AT VERY LOW COST.
Two years were spent in developing the Bungalow Club plan and in finding a location that was just right.
The requirements were convenience to electric cars, fine street improvements, modern utilities and beautiful natural surroundings.
All these were possible, but always at a prohibitive price or with building restrictions based on cost instead of beauty of design.
The ideal site was finally discovered. All the conditions were fully met. Artistic bungalows are now under construction, and we invite the attention of homeseekers to the Bungalow Club, to its plan and to the beautiful site reserved for its operations.
The Club plan eliminates many items of expense and profit that the home buyer usually pays. It insures proper artistic development of adjacent property. It insures profits from the increased value of remaining lots, which profit all goes to Club members, further reducing their low first cost. This profit (guaranteed) will be important. There are other economical features.
Arrange to secure one of these Bungalow Club lots and DO IT EARLY.
You can build now or when convenient.
Or you can have one of the bungalows already built, with full privileges of Club membership.
REMEMBER THERE ARE SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO THE FIRST FEW MEMBERS. SEVERAL LOTS ALREADY SOLD.
Write or call for full particulars at the office of
THE BUNGALOW CLUB.

HOLLYWOOD—
For Sale, Exchange or Rent.

FOR SALE—HIGH CLASS MODERN HOME WITH LARGE BEAUTIFUL GROUNDS. LOCATED—132 North Lemona Ave., Hollywood, 250 ft. north of Hollywood Blvd. in Morgan's Hollywood Tract, the acknowledged high-class district, 100x167—fine street, cement walks, good lawn, trees, shrubbery, etc. Strictly modern highclass home, built for a home and not to sell; selected lumber, perfectly planned. Nine large rooms and bath, 2½ stories and cement finished basement, with furnace—downstairs, parlor, sitting room, dining room, reception hall, kitchen and screened porch, hardwood floors, beamed and decorated ceilings, large fire place, French plate windows. Upstairs—4 large bedrooms, and hall and outside sleeping porch, extra large bath room, 1 servants room on 3d floor and room to finish another. Also fully equipped solar heater, water, gas and electricity. Complete built in book cases, buffet, cupboards, linen closets, and seats. This house in perfect condition, cost over $8000 to build two years ago. Large garage, shop and sleeping room, graveled driveway. Palms and Acacias in front, several Poinsettias, 12 ft. bearing lemon trees, oranges, peaches, figs, Japanese Persimmons, blackberries, etc. Rose garden with 58 selected bushes—also other choice shrubbery. Owner traded ranch property for this magnificent home, and offers it at the forced sale price of $9000 on account of a top-heavy mortgage. There is $3500 against the property which can run two years and if sold before November 22 it will save the owner a lot of money and he will take $3000 for his equity, part cash. This is a great bargain. People who appreciate a really high-class home in this beautiful highly restricted Morgan Tract, will do well to look this up at once.
Remember, $8500 takes it, if sold before November 22. Part cash.

Ocean Park.

FOR SALE—$7500 IS THE LOW PRICE I can deliver the finest, most artistic and extra choice genuine bungalow on the beach at Ocean Park. This lovely home is built out of imported Douglas straight and curly grain fir, from the State of Washington. The rooms are all paneled with 2 to 5-ply polished veneered fir wainscoting, 22 to 24 inches wide, and 4 to 6 feet high, and from that to the ceiling it is finished in the most expensive and lasting fabricorra, tinted green. The beamed and paneled ceilings, from which hang beautiful electrical brass fixtures with the magnificent 5-ply large fir door, and the massive 8-foot Dutch tile fireplace and hearth, with the beautiful opening door windows on all sides, make this one of the most charming homes to be had. The bedrooms have lavatories; large closets and shelves in them; gas and electricity and one room an extra large trunk room. There is a light and large cabinet kitchen with a rear screen porch, with 2 porcelain wash trays and also a toilet and maid's room, while on the rear of the lot are 2 rooms for tools. Then there is the gem of the Japanese garden, containing the Tori, or Temple Gate, and 2 solid stone temple Japanese lanterns, 12 inches to 5 feet high; also the old style water buckets costing $60. Then the Ide, or "well," with beautiful rare vines running over it, while the white porcelain crane stands near it, with large old tree trunks, covered with moss and flowers. There are rare pieces of Japanese gems in the garden over 300 years old. The gentleman or lady of refinement and culture or of wealth or home lover, will be captivated with this gem of a home, and buy it.

NOT HARD TO FIGURE.
The 677 2-3-acre alfalfa ranch just east of Riverside can be purchased at about $88 an acre unimproved, and it is worth from $150 to $225 per acre.
Raw land not as good as these acres are being sold from $180 to $225, without water, and unimproved.
It will take more than $60,000, and 2 years' time to bring similar acres to the high state of cultivation these acres are now in.
The income now is 10 per cent. net on a value of $150,000.
The price until Dec. 1 is $65,000 cash.
An auto accident has made this price possible.
There has been more than $50,000 spent on improvements; 600 inches of water, more than a dozen big wells, with Fairbanks-Morse and Commercial engines installed at an expense of more than $20,000.
Whoever secures this ranch secures the best bargain in California.

FORT HILL ORANGE LAND.
1700 ACRES.
1700 ACRES.
This new subdivision, containing 1700 acres, is only 1 mile south of the business center of the thriving city of Covina. As an orange-producing district, Covina stands third in the State. There are 14 packing-houses. No finer groves can be found in the State. A trip through this famous region will satisfy the most skeptical, that the climatic, soil and water conditions are all that could be desired.
The soil is a fertile sediment loam of exceptional depth.
At the price we are offering this land at it cannot be beaten for an investment; you can double your money in less than two years. Bearing groves adjoining have sold for as high as $2500 per acre. The owner of a 3-year-old grove adjoining this tract has a standing offer of $1100 per acre. As a location for a home it's ideal. Beautiful view of the mountains and a clear, bracing atmosphere the year around. Covina is a thriving little city of beautiful homes and has easy access with Los Angeles by the Pacific Electric and Southern Pacific railroads. If you want to see this land, take Covina line cars to El Monte and call at our office there. For further information, call at our city office. Price $250 per acre. Terms, 1-3 cash, balance 2 years at 7 per cent. Lots of 10 acres and up. Unlimited certificate of title, by Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

ALFALFA AND WALNUT LAND.
We have several tracts of choice alfalfa and walnut land in the El Monte district, fronting on the new boulevard to Los Angeles and 14 to 18 miles from the city. Go out and let us show the thrifty alfalfa and walnut ranches surrounding these tracts that we are offering. You will be convinced that there is no better land to be had anywhere, and none in Los Angeles county at the price we are selling at.
The great foothill district to the north creates a demand for all the alfalfa grown in the valley. This land produces easily 10 tons of hay per year. Water easily developed or stock can be purchased from a local water company. No scarcity of water here. Lots 10 acres and up.
Price $250 to $300 per acre. Terms, 1-3 cash, balance 3 years at 7 per cent.; unlimited certificate of title.

FOR SALE—
STATE LAND IS NEVER advertised for sale by the State. The irrigation company wrote me THEY WOULD NOT ADVERTISE FOR A FEW days yet, until Congress gives them permission to take water from COLORADO RIVER. So I am paying to tell you of some bargains that can NOW be had by BUYING State land. I have spent much time searching records and making abstracts of State land that can be purchased now at $1.25 per acre, $25 cash payment, 25 cents an acre in six months, $1 stands at interest, 7 per cent., indefinitely. Some of this land is near Colorado River, some is further from river and nearer R.R., where water will be pumped, to raise alfalfa, fruit, etc. I could give you the names of many of your bright business men who have bought some of this land on account of bright future coming because of water, oil, scientific dry farming. Sections that cost $1000 are selling now for $5000 and will go above $60,000. Land is safe and sure. No residence or improvements required. This land must be irrigated to feed many coming to California. Any man or woman in the State, married or single, can take 640 acres or less. No final proof for State land. No need to come here at any time. I direct you fully. You pay officials. If railroads had helped make State land laws you might have had to come here often. Maps and directions to see the land. Money put up in escrow is no security that your friend will not get the land free. To those who pay $10 fee, with order for marked maps and particulars of three pieces of State land, I trust them to further pay me 25 cents an acre as soon as they are officially notified that land is on record in buyer's name, provided they so promise. And if first don't suit, I will continue to send three numbers three times without further fee. All who have taken got the first piece seen and are well satisfied. Choicest pieces will be sent in order of receiving fee. Nothing free. It has cost me plenty. Bank references furnished as to me being reliable and for square deal. Many think this new country being opened up far superior to Imperial $100 land, that many bought for $1.25 not long ago. Some will hesitate and regret later. Some will buy and prosper. Will you? Three State officers sign your deed. Will you order today? Read this again and write now and inclose [illegible] check with order. JOSEPH CLARK, 1221 E st., Sacramento, Cal.

TROPICAL FRUITS
YIELD LARGE PROFITS

Millions are made by Tropical Fruit Growers in Old Mexico every year. The people of the United States spend more than a QUARTER MILLION DOLLARS every day for bananas alone and each year the demand increases 25 per cent.

100 per cent. is but an ordinary annual profit from Bananas. Ten acres properly cultivated should easily return $1500 to $3000 a year, while oranges or lemons produce even more. The cost of production is small and crop failures are unknown. Bananas mature and profits begin in from ten to sixteen months after planting—making it the quickest as well as the largest orchard producer in the entire fruit line.

MILLIONS MADE EVERY YEAR

If you want to share in the Millions Mexico is annually giving her Banana Growers, you will have to get possession of some of the limited Banana Land quickly, for the Banana industry is attracting investors of all classes and it is only a question of time until Tropical Fruit Plantations in Mexico and especially in the Rich Gulf State of Tabasco will be selling for sums far beyond the reach of the small buyer.

10 ACRE TRACTS—$25 PER ACRE

Write us today for particulars how you can become the owner of ten acres of this rich profit producing Tropical Fruit Land, part of it cleared, improved and planted in any Tropical Fruit you can select for only $25 an acre on Easy Payments of only $10 down and $5 a month. We plant, cultivate and market your crops, turn the profit over to you, or apply it on the improvement of the balance of your land, or the purchase of additional acreage.

Truly here is one of the greatest opportunities you have ever had to make an investment that should yield you $1500 or more annually within a very short time. You can do this easily, without leaving your home or present occupation. Only one hundred ten acre tracts will be sold on these terms. Write us today for Free Booklet, bank references, and full information.

FOR SALE—

THE OPPORTUNITY
LOOKING FOR THE MAN.

$17.50 PER ACRE
FOR ORANGE LAND.

Orange land in that best of all regions, the Porterville district. Sounds like a fairy tale, when the lowest price one generally hears of ranges above the $100 mark. Yet here is another instance of one man's necessity becoming another's opportunity and a sure golden one at that—believe it. The property in question we offer for immediate sale contains about 2400 acres, of which over 1000 acres are prime orange land, as good as is to be had, that's selling at upwards of $300 per acre, and about 1400 acres of hill land that is good for grazing purposes. Water is to be had on the land—there being now some wells and springs developed. The property lies near to railroad. Now, Mr. Man, waiting for a bargain, why don't you look this up? All the information at our command will cost you nothing, but see us quickly, because GREAT bargains like this are soon snapped up.

FOR SALE—
THIS IS YOUR LAND.
JUST WHAT YOU HAVE BEEN LOOKING FOR.

I am going to give you some details concerning my Fresno Valley lands. Read them, and then ask yourself if this isn't YOUR LAND—just what you have been looking for. It is located just south of the city of Fresno crossed by the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe Railways, each having stations at the property. The soil is rich. Ditch water costs 75c per acre per year. Water for pumping can be had at only 16 feet, from pumps already installed—and it goes with the land. There is a good town right at the property, with schools, stores, telephones, free rural delivery, etc.—just a few minutes' ride by train from a large city. Some of the successful crops are alfalfa, corn, tobacco, peaches, apricots, grapes, figs, walnuts, vegetables and berries. Conditions are perfect for dairying, general farming, poultry and hog raising. Part of the land is already in alfalfa and other crops. There's the story of this land—a story which investigation will prove true. Now you can buy it for only $40 an acre up. Just make a small cash payment, and get your land under cultivation. Your future payments can be met from the profits from your crops. I could not afford to sell it on long time payments unless this were true. Come to my office. See my exhibit of products. Get my illustrated booklet, and learn about my FREE EXCURSIONS.

FOR SALE— 20 ACRES.

Only 35 minutes' ride from Los Angeles, within two blocks of car line. 8 acres in one year old alfalfa. 1½ acres in table grapes, also following: Berries and fruit trees on the rancho, blackberries, Loganberries, orange, pear, peach, apple, and Satsuma plums, 1 acre in English walnuts, 70 cords of blue gum trees standing, one 4-room California house with bath, one California house with 5 rooms, barn 40x70 feet, all outbuildings, two wells, furnishing 70 inches of water, pumping plant with 8 H.P. Fairbanks & Morse gasoline engine, power sawing and cutting outfit, 800 feet of irrigating cement pipe, two plows, double and single harrow, McCormick mower and rake, one cultivator, three horses, one Jersey cow, one surrey, one single buggy, one single wagon, one double wagon, and all necessary harness for stock. Property all fenced, in fact would make an ideal place for gentleman's country home. Price is $12,000, but for quick sale will take $10,000 on the following terms, $2000 cash, balance in mortgage at 6 per cent. if over three years 7 per cent. My only reason for selling, I want to turn all my property into interest bearing paper, being unable to continue business, otherwise money could not purchase the above. FOR SALE—

RIGHT KIND OF ALFALFA LAND.
GOOD SOIL, CHEAP WATER.
NEAR RAILROAD.

160 acres two miles West of Winchester, seven miles from Perris, one-fourth mile from Santa Fe railroad, where switch can be obtained. The soil is a rich sandy loam, and decomposed granite. There is an abundance of water at fifteen feet from the surface. The land is smooth, just enough fall to irrigate nicely. $10 per acre will prepare the land and seed it. It was all farmed to grain this season. There are three acres of five year old eucalyptus, and a small pumping plant on the place. I selected this land for an alfalfa ranch after a careful search of the San Joaquin valley, and Southern California. Circumstances are such that I do not care to develop it and in order to close it out at once will accept $62.50 per acre. One-half cash. You know what can be done. There is not an acre of good alfalfa within 20 miles of it for less than $250 per acre. I am positively certain there is not a buy equal to it any place.

San Fernando.

FOR SALE— BY R. J. WIDNEY.

SAN FERNANDO VALLEY.

If you knew the people
Who are buying in San Fernando Valley
And the prices they are paying for land
You would not overlook an opportunity
To invest in this section,
Particularly if you could find
A property a little under-priced.

San Fernando Valley acreage
Will shortly command a premium.

Every man who buys
Even at the current market prices
Will make money rapidly.
And those who buy under the market
Are simply securing a property
That if necessary they can turn
At a profit in a very short time,
If desired.

Bargains of this nature
Are very scarce and hard to get.
I have a few such, ranging in price
From $2700 to $125,000;
In size from 15 acres to 1700 acres.

Included in this list
Are some rare bargains in Orange and lemon orchards.

If you have money to invest
In San Fernando Valley,
You should look over my list
Before purchasing.

OWENS RIVER—

FOR SALE—
OWENS VALLEY.
The greatest opportunity for the California farmer is awaiting him in the Owens River Valley. This remarkably fertile spot possesses more attractive features than any other land in California.

So unusual are the conditions that a description of them sounds like gross extravagance and a deliberate attempt to deceive.

Corn 12 feet high, with 18-inch ears and running from 70 to 90 bushels to the acre. Potatoes that will run 200 to 300 bushels to the acre and superior in quality. Onions in the same proportion. Alfalfa that will cut as high as 3½ tons to the cutting. Timothy with 12-inch heads. A country with the world's prize for honey and a reputation for producing the finest working stock in this State. These are a few of the attractions of this valley.

On top of this it is the most ideal climate in California. The hottest day in eleven years was 102. Some years it has only gone as high as 98. The scenery is beautiful.

The water condition is such that it leaves no room for doubt. There is doubtless no spot in California, outside of, possibly, some of our artesian belts, where the water is so bountiful.

The apples that the Owens River Valley is producing today are equal to the finest apples in the Northwest and a man who will plant his holdings to apples and pears will be assured of an independence.

There is no doubt that the Owens River Valley offers the greatest opportunity today. In a few years this Valley will be looked upon as the garden spot of California.

ENELL

OFFERS A CHOICE ORANGE GROVE

IN UPLAND.

On beautiful Euclid ave., 20 acres full-bearing navel trees. One of the best groves in the colony. The enormous crop of choice fruit on the trees speaks louder than words, and more convincing as to the worth of this property. The quality of soil, the care of the trees and all that pertains to successful orange culture is all plainly demonstrated. The orchard speaks for itself. The appearance of the property is unmistakable evidence as to what it is. We invite experienced orange growers and local investors to inspect this property. There is an attractive modern residence facing this beautiful avenue, and electric cars at the door. The price of this property is $40,000. One-half cash and reasonable terms on deferred payments. This includes the fruit which is estimated 12,000 boxes. To fully appreciate the value of this property investigate orange groves anywhere and everywhere, and see this. Correspond with

FOR SALE—
A $17,500 GROVE FOR $15,000.
OWNERS WILL KEEP THE CROP IF YOU DESIRE, AND ALLOW $2500 FOR IT, REDUCING THE GROVE TO $12,500. THIS IS A RARE BARGAIN IN A HIGH CLASS GROVE.

10 acres ten year old trees, Navels, 900 trees. Trees are all just the same size, thrifty and perfect in every way. Have always been well cared for, never damaged by frost. The land slopes just enough for good irrigation, the soil is the very best, the water costs $7 per acre per year, and is from the Gage canal, through cement flume across the high side of the ranch. One inch of water to 5 acres, which is sufficient to irrigate every 30 days, and is always ready. This is a splendid grove with good groves all around it, and on one of the most beautiful boulevards in California (Victoria avenue). There are no drawbacks. It will bear the most rigid investigation. It will increase in value for the next 10 years, and is a genuine bargain at the price—$15,000.

FOR SALE—
THE FOLLOWING LETTER EXPLAINS ITSELF.

MESSRS. HAMBRIGHT COMPANY.
LOS ANGELES, CAL.,
GENTLEMEN:—

In giving you my 10-acre orange grove for sale last month at $12,000, I felt that the price was $3000 under value, but was anxious to make a quick sale and now I have determined to get away from here not later than the 10th of December, therefore have decided to make a cut price to you to $10,500., which certainly makes this the cheapest grove in California. The fruit is coloring beautifully.

Very truly,

This grove is set to 14-year navels, has from 3000 to 4000 boxes on trees, good 8-room house and large barn, 20 shares of Riverside water, location on beautiful Magnolia ave., Riverside. Do you want this bargain? If the improvements were burned down and trees dug up, this 10 acres would be worth the price, property will sell for $15,000, before spring.

BUSINESS CHANCES—
For Sale.

AN ENERGETIC BUSINESS ASSOCIATE with at least $250 cash is what we want. Ours is a prosperous mercantile concern. We are continually extending the business; profit comes mainly from the business done by numerous branch establishments; we make this "ad." plain as much for your benefit as for our own. If you are not the person we want then you do not wish to waste your time talking to us. If you have $250 or up to $10,000 ready cash that you can invest now and are active and ambitious and have at least a little knowledge of business (just enough to make change correctly is all that is positively required) we want you as an associate and can put you in one of the new opening branches of our business that you handle practically as your own and in your own way. Similar circumstances are now paying others from $200 to $3500 a month. Following our special extra plan we will guarantee your success by personally depositing cash immediately in the bank in your name that will give you your money back and twenty (20 per cent.) profit on your investment (this is positively free from any call back by us or anyone else or necessity of you making good in any way.) Our man's time is valuable and you can make yours so by taking a hand in our business immediately and keeping your part on the move. We depend on you to make a profit for us. You can open up business right from the jump. It is up to you to see that the help under you do their work properly. We frankly state that we have no time to waste on people who have not the ready cash now or who are slow. We show you that the business now doing settles the questions that there is demand for more establishments in our line. One who does not know a good opportunity when they see it or who is afraid of work may not reach out for business; if you know one and are willing to get right to work earning money for yourself, come in to see us. We want the association of workers, men and women, who have money. See our Head Clerk, Sales Department, office 619 CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BLDG., S. Broadway, near 2nd st.

BAKERS' AND CONFECTIONERS' SALES BUREAU, M. A. Bley, Mgr., 426-428 Mason Bldg., corner Fourth and Broadway.

THERE ARE GOOD OPENINGS FOR three or four kinds of business in Perris, Riverside county, Cal. The best of all is a comparatively small modern dry goods and notion store, with a stock large enough to hold the largest portion of the trade that now goes to a town 12 miles away and to Los Angeles. Which I think amounts to from $40,000 to $50,000 a year, possibly more. The income tributary to this village amounts to $1,500,000 a year and is increasing rapidly. There are over 400 depositors in the local bank, as an old dry goods man, retail and wholesale, I am positive that this is a very good opening for a live, up-to-date man, with a capital of from $5000 to $6000 to start with, to be increased to $10,000 within a year. Such a man with above capital can turn his stock rapidly. The one modern storeroom that I am holding for this business is 25x75 feet, this with two or possibly three stores are in two-story brick buildings, some will not be ready for use before Oct. 30. The one store will be held for dry goods and notions only, and is not for rent with capital of less amount than amount mentioned above. There are good openings for several other kinds of stores, but no general store and will not rent to conflicting business. Free water and acetylene gas at about cost. T. H. SHARPLESS, Perris, Riverside Co., Cal.

WANTED—$15,000.
If this advertisement were printed on a $1000 bill it could scarcely be less valuable to you; if you have business standing and are in a position to furnish $10,000 to $15,000 for an interest in a substantial established corporation solid as a rock; principal will double in two years; NOW EARNING 18 PER CENT., will net permanent income in the near future, 30 to 40 per cent.; a sure foundation for a big fortune; this is no idle dream, but a crystallized fact that can be substantiated by actual proof; this is not a "mining or oil scheme," or "green fields that are far away," but a substantial successful business right here in "good old Los Angeles." Bank references given and required. Particulars submitted to principals only, who know a good thing when they see it, and are prepared to act. Every statement contined herein will be proven beyond a question of doubt; quick action necessary, investigate at once. Address for one week, F, box 26, TIMES OFFICE.

FOR SALE — LUNCH ROOM, MODERN equipment, good downtown location; absolute bargain, $1100. LOS ANGELES REALTY CO., 215 Byrne Bldg.

BUSINESS CHANCES—
For Sale.

LISTEN. I AM HANDLING A FAST-SELLing article. I control the output, a monopoly. Have sold in Los Angeles over 80 per cent. of the customers I have approached, and this field not yet one-fifth worked. If I can cover the United States in the next two years properly, I can return every cash dollar for every $100 invested. I need a little money, not much, to enlarge and make rapid sales. I am prepared to guarantee this money, absolutely, both as to dividends and principal. I put a real estate trust deed in the bank made in your favor, subject to your order, against your investment. If you have $250 or more earning less than 30 per cent a year, and are willing to invest it under an absolute guaranty, ask for details. This is a square business proposition. Address L, box 71, TIMES OFFICE.

"INVESTING FOR PROFIT" IS WORTH $10 a copy to any man who intends to invest any money, however small, who has money invested unprofitably or who can save $5 or more per month, but who hasn't learned the art of investing for profit. It demonstrates the REAL earning power of money, the knowledge financiers and bankers hide from the masses. It reveals the enormous profits bankers make and shows how to make the same profits. It explains HOW stupendous fortunes are made and WHY they are made; how $1000 grows to $22,000. To introduce my magazine write me NOW, and I'll send it six months FREE. H. L. BARBER, 20 Jackson Blvd., Chicago.

IF YOU HAVE A GOOD AUTOMOBILE AND can run it, and have $1200 to invest without risk you can double it or better in a few months. I have done very much better than that in past three months without a car and the proposition is in very much better shape now. I have a little more than I can handle with present capital.
This is not a permanent proposition but will clean up in a few months, but I can probably follow it with something just as good and if present deal is mutually satisfactory can make arrangements to continue. Address M, box 10, TIMES OFFICE.

FOR SALE—
An exceptional opportunity to buy an established
WINE, LIQUOR AND GROCERY BUSINESS.
Located on a fine corner, doing a fine
CASH BUSINESS.
Has no opposition for many blocks. The business is getting to be too much for me to handle, and as I would not take a partner I have concluded to sell, but it takes money, about $15,000, as I carry a heavy stock. Address K, box 286, TIMES BRANCH OFFICE.

ATTENTION, BAKERS! HERE IS A money-maker; well-established bakery, oven costing $400; all baking utensils first-class; a large workroom; 3 good living-rooms, grocery and confectionery; one horse and bakery wagon; on corner lot, 50x135; beautiful lawn; room on front of lot for another building and for a bungalow in rear; located on one of the best thoroughfares in the city, in the growing southwest; party doing a large business. WANTED—$15,000—

If this advertisement were printed on a $1000 bill it could scarcely be less valuable to you; if you have business standing and are in a position to furnish $10,000 to $15,000 for an interest in a substantial, established corporation, solid as a rock, principal will double in two years, NOW EARNING 15 PER CENT., will net permanent income in the near future 30 to 40 per cent.; a sure foundation for a big fortune; this is not an idle dream, but a crystallized fact that can be substantiated by actual proof; not a mining or oil scheme, or "green fields that are far away," but a substantial, successful business right here in "good old Los Angeles." Bank references given and required. Particulars submitted to principals only, who know a good thing when they see it, and are prepared to act; every statement contained herein will be proved beyond a question of doubt; quick action necessary; investigate at once. Address for one week, F, box 38, TIMES OFFICE.

THE BEST COLLECTION OF ORES EVER exhibited in Los Angeles from the mines of one company is drawing large crowds daily to 320 S. Spring St., where the ores can be seen in the window. While there step inside and see specifications of the complete Smelting Plant recently purchased by the company. The company is controlled by well known Los Angeles business men. It owns its properties outright and has purchased a smelter which will put it on a producing basis. Here is your opportunity as the company desires the cooperation of a few more good men. Most thorough investigation requested as to titles, engineers, reports, and standing of directors and officers. Call or write for information. Ore exhibit 320 S. DEVELOPMENT NOTES.

The Globe Exploration Oil Company has finished its well No. 5 on section 15, 21-22 and is getting about 200 barrels per day on the beam, of thirteen gravity oil. Another well will be sunk to a greater depth in search of a lighter sand.

The Dominion's well No. 1 on section 15, 21-22, is making 100 barrels of heavy oil on the beam.

The Fox Oil Company on section 15, 21-22 has shut off the water in its well No. 2 at 1600 feet and will go down after the light sand.

The Result Oil Company on section 26, 21-22, has gone into a water sand after going through a thin oil stratum at 1270 feet, and will pull the casing and perforate for the oil it passed.

The Poinsetta Oil Company has landed its 12-inch casing at 1700 feet on section 19, 21-22, and is going down with the 10-inch. A heavy oil sand was struck at 840 feet.

In the case of David S. Bachman and Charles A. Son against Julius Fried, J. M. Dunn, Parker Barrett, Consolidated Midway Oil Company, et al., Judge Mahon of the Kern county Superior Court granted the defendants' motion for a non-suit on the ground that the plaintiffs, who sued for damages for forcible ejectment, had failed to show that they were ever in possession of the disputed land, the fractional section 30, 12-24, on which is located the celebrated Consolidated Midway gusher. The plaintiffs introduced testimony to show that they had made improvements on the land in pursuance of a lease from the locators, that they had erected a derrick and had a man hired to look after the property. They did not show, however, that this man actually lived on the land or that they had a building there in which anyone could live. The judge stated in giving his decision that he considered it necessary, in order to establish possession, that the plaintiffs must prove actual occupancy. The case will be appealed.

COALINGA HOLDS UP.

OCTOBER PRODUCTION.

COALINGA, Nov. 18.—The report of R. W. Dallas, secretary of the Coalinga branch of the Producers' Agency, is in, and shows a small increase over the September production, being just 1070 barrels greater than the former month. The general condition of the field was not so good as the former month, October showing fewer wells suspended. Less producing and more than one-half less new rigs. The report also shows work suspended upon fifty-six new rigs.

During the month of October, however, there were thirty-five less wells producing, and the showing that the production was greater by more than 1000 barrels is a good one and proves that the field in general has not fallen off.

The report of Secretary Dallas for Coalinga is tabulated as follows:

	South Field.	East Side.	West Side.	Oct.
Wells suspend'd	9	14	32	55
Wells drilling..	17	19	71	107
Wells producing suspended ...	0	27	142	169

A. J. Pollack, superintendent of the operations of the Canadian Coalinga and Vancouver Coalinga companies, came down from San Francisco this morning, accompanied by Thomas F. Langlois, a wealthy Canadian capitalist, who is interested in the Pollack companies here.

On 8, 21-15 the Canadian Coalinga Company has completed the building of the camp, and everything connected with it is of the very best. The rig is a combination rotary and standard, 270-horse-power boilers have been placed, and one of the best camps in the field has been completed. Drilling will be started in a week or ten days.

The British Coalinga, on 16, 20-15, is 2255 feet deep, with eight-inch casing, and drilling with a rotary. This is probably the deepest rotary hole in the State.

A new camp has been started on 14, 20-15, the Vancouver Coalinga, and will be constructed in accordance with the other properties. Drilling will commence there in about thirty days.

These Canadian companies are going right ahead with development work, and are a very desirable acquisition to the Coalinga field.

Repairing Fire Damage.

FULLERTON, Nov. 18.—Workmen have almost completed the rebuilding the rig for Well No. 62 of the Santa Fe Company, which suffered the loss of $60,000 worth of property on October 25, when the explosion of gas occurred. No. 32, a pumping well, which also suffered the loss of its rig during this fire, has a new rig in process of construction and will soon have work resumed in the manner of drilling. Well No. 36 has all of the debris cleared away and the efforts of the drillers to sink this prospect deeper will soon be resumed. The loss suffered by this company by the fire and explosion mentioned above will reach the figures originally given of $60,000.

SUPPOSED OIL LANDS RESTORED AND STILL OTHERS WITHDRAWN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

VISALIA, Nov. 18.—At the General Land Office there has been received from Washington, dated November 11, an order withdrawing lands in the tract known as Petroleum reserve, No. 14, and restoring to entry several sections noted in withdrawal order No. 2, of California oil lands. The decision is one which will largely affect the oil interests and is one of more than usual moment.

According to the text of the order those lands which are restored are rated by the director of the geological survey as not valuable for oil purposes and are therefore again opened to homestead entry.

The land restored includes all of township 13 S., R. 10 E. In township 13 S., R. 11 E., all of section 19, all of sections 29 to 32 inclusive, the west half of the west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 33 and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 34. AGENCY'S BIG BUSINESS.

THE FUTURE LOOKS FINE.

It is announced that within the past thirty days the officials of the Independent Agency have secured contracts that aggregate 20,000 barrels of oil a day, and it is said there is almost as much more new business in sight.

This taken with the business which the Agency will get through the Associated, places the organization in the best position it has occupied since the unusual production of the northern fields occured. In addition the Agency has succeeded in holding all its old business. The Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Canadian Pacific together with their steamers are rapidly being equipped to burn oil exclusively. The oil market is widening appreciably.

SCENE OF ACTIVITY.

SULPHUR MOUNTAIN OIL.

A number of eastern and local parties have visited Sulphur Mountain in the past week, this part of the Ventura county field particularly attracting the attention of oil investors and promotors on account of the high gravity oil that is produced on all sides of it. Sulphur Mountain, in the center of the district is the last part to be developed, it having been practically inaccessible until good roads were built on it by the county. The present road is as good in most places as an asphalt pavement, and is of great scenic beauty.

The property of the Atlanta Oil Company, situated on the south slope of the mountain, is considered an exceptionally good holding by all who have seen it. The Liberty well No. 2 is down more than 1500 feet and making fine progress. The Puritan Oil Company holds the drilling record for this field, having put down 800 feet of twelve inch casing in the past thirty-three days. The one remaining idle holding on the mountain, owned by the Sagar-Loomis Company, of San Francisco, it is said will soon be developed.

GUARANTY IS WAITING.

WATCHING THE AUGUST.

The directors and stockholders of the Guaranty Oil Company are keeping close tab on the daily report of the August well close to the south side of its property, and of the American Oil Fields drilling on the opposite side. The August is now more than 2000 feet down, and has every indication of coming in a gusher, the gas pressure being very strong. The other well is about 2700 feet deep, and the probabilities are that the August will first penetrate the oil sands.

As soon as the shallowest part of its territory is ascertained, the Guaranty will start drilling with an expert rotary crew and patent rock drills. Its property consists of 120 acres in the southeast quarter of section 31,32-24, Midway, and is surrounded by the big wells and gushers for which that part of the field is famed.

Preston Goes to Pyramid

A. E. Preston, who for seven years has been with the Union Oil Company of California, the largest oil company in the State, has severed his connection with that organization and accepted the management of the field operations of the Pyramid Oil Company. Mr. Preston is recognized as one of the most competent oil experts in California, and his extended experience with the Union Oil Company has made him thoroughly familiar with every phase of the oil business in every field of California.

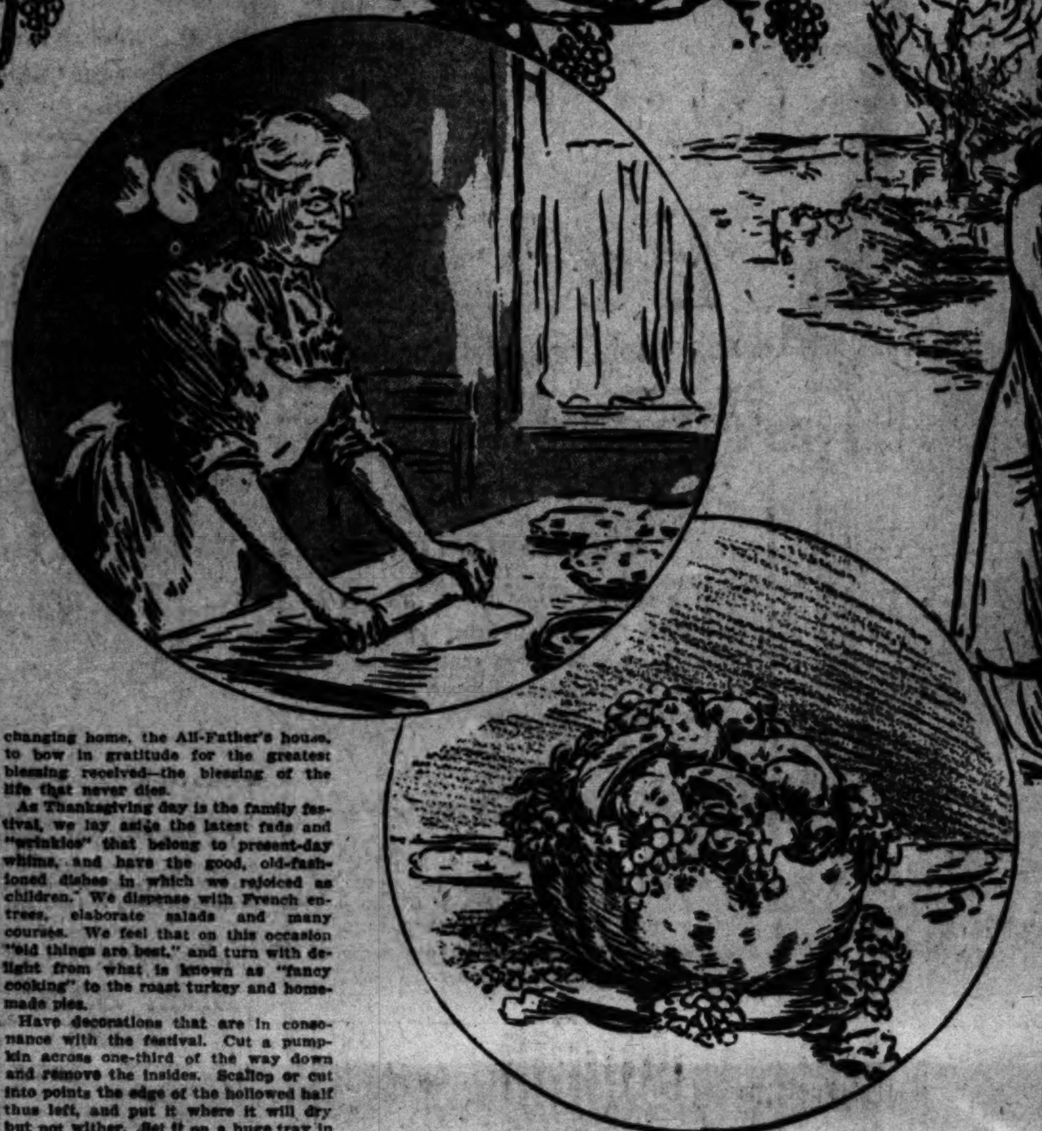
SCHOOL for HOUSEWIVES

By MARION HARLAND

The THANKSGIVING DINNER



"Cut a pumpkin across, remove insides, dry and fill with fruit."

"The festival means the homecoming of all the children."

IT IS strange, but true, that the various joyous festivals which we celebrate are always new. Every year they return and bring with them the same enthusiasm with which we greet the ever-recurring miracle of the spring. Each May is as wonderful and beautiful as if we had never seen one before. Christmas comes back, with the planning of gifts, the delightful surprises and the holy joy that it has always brought. Thanksgiving, the great home festival, finds us once more ready for the happiness that belongs to it.

It speaks well for human nature that we are waiting and willing to observe this feast when the government issues the suggestion that we do so. There is much talk about man's willingness to accept all and be thankful for nothing, but surely the fact that Thanksgiving day is celebrated each year is proof that we do sometimes pause to enumerate your blessings. Not so often as we ought—but there is one day in the year in which some of us do force ourselves to "forget not all his benefits." There is a side of the festival that we should keep in mind. We cannot remember all the mercies, but we are enjoined not to forget them all.

Thanksgiving is one of the few festivals that enforce upon us no giving of presents or paying off of obligations. Christmas, New Year's day, birthdays—all remind us that we should give to others, and as money is not always plentiful and gifts not always easy to procure, we sigh with a sense of the obligation imposed upon us and with the appreciation of our inability to meet it as we wish we could. But the last Thursday in November makes no such tax upon purse and ingenuity.

To be sure there is work connected with it, and this work falls upon the housemother. But to her it is a labor of love. The festival means the homecoming of all the children and children's children. There is something very beautiful in the custom which brings all back to the old home to acknowledge together their gratitude for mercies received. To one who looks into the beyond comes the thought that all families may some time meet in the unchanging home, the All-Father's house, to bow in gratitude for the greatest blessing received—the blessing of the life that never dies.

As Thanksgiving day is the family festival, we lay aside the latest fads and "wrinkles" that belong to present-day whims, and have the good, old-fashioned dishes in which we rejoiced as children. We dispense with French entrees, elaborate salads and many courses. We feel that on this occasion "old things are best," and turn with delight from what is known as "fancy cooking" to the roast turkey and home-made pies.

Have decorations that are in consonance with the festival. Cut a pumpkin across one-third of the way down and remove the insides. Scallop or cut into points the edge of the hollowed half thus left, and put it where it will dry but not wither. Set it on a huge tray in the center of the table, and fill it with rosy-cheeked apples, nuts, raisins and red and yellow bananas. Let clusters of raisins droop over the sides of the pumpkin shell. At the base, on the tray, heap clusters of Malaga and Tokay grapes. The effect will be very gorgeous and the result tempting to the palate. At one Thanksgiving dinner tiny dried gourds were cut open, as has been directed for the pumpkin, a hollowed half was put at each person's place and filled with salted almonds; or, if preferred, these may be used as bonbon dishes.

Flowers are expensive at this season of the year, and are really not so appropriate for the Thanksgiving feast as are bitter-sweet, with the berries still clinging to it, and a few branches of evergreens. If one wishes to heap about the pumpkin centerpiece red and white ears of corn, instead of the grapes, they are effective, if not good to eat. But whatever decorations are planned let them indicate harvest and plenty.

Children find the Thanksgiving dinner incomplete without cider to drink. Serve it very cold and pour from a large tankard or pitcher. Cider is never tasted at its best unless thoroughly chilled. Keep it, therefore, close to the ice for several hours before using, but do not dilute it to a thin acid by putting ice into the liquid itself.

A menu suited for the home dinner is: Cream of corn soup, roast turkey, cranberry jelly, oyster pie, sweet potato balls, creamed and baked onions, Spanish rice, pumpkin pies, fruits, nuts, coffee.

After the soup has been eaten and the plates changed, the turkey may be placed in front of the father of the house, and the oyster pie before the mother. The sweet potato balls are laid about the turkey on its platter, while the other vegetables may be passed from the side table—if one has a waitress. If not, the various dishes may be put on the table and served by the person near whom they are placed. Pass mild American cheese with the pies, and serve coffee and fruit after the pie course is removed. The family always linger long over the coffee and fruit course, nuts and raisins forming a combination that tempts one to take just a little more of one or the other, and talk on and on in an unconventional and delightful way.

It is hardly necessary to remind the housemother that at this time, if at no other, she may be somewhat lavish in her preparations. Even if prices of eggs are high, use an abundance of them in making the pumpkin pies. The last pumpkin pie I ate contained so many eggs and such rich milk that it actually melted in the mouth that waters in the recollection of it. One may have to economize on the common days of the entire year, but at Thanksgiving and at Christmas let us have only the richest and best that our larders can produce.

A pretty fashion of serving cranberry jelly is to pour it, while hot and liquid, into small individual molds. Lacking these, small muffin tins make an excellent substitute. Turn these individual forms of jelly out upon a chilled platter, taking care to make more than one for each person to be present, as on Thanksgiving day "second helps" are in order.

Cream of Corn Soup

Drain the liquor from 2 cans of corn and chop the kernels fine. Put them over the fire with a pint of water and simmer for fifteen minutes. Strain through a fine strainer and return the liquid to the fire. Season with salt, pepper and a heaping teaspoonful of sugar. Cook together 3 tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, and when they are blended pour upon them 2 cups of milk and a cup of cream to which a generous pinch of baking soda has been added. Stir until smooth and thick, add the corn puree, and as soon as the mixture is scalding hot take from the fire and pour gradually, beating all the time, upon the beaten yolks of 2 eggs. Serve immediately.

Baked Onions

Choose small or medium-sized onions for this dish. Cook in salted water until tender, drain, arrange in a baking dish, and pour over them a rich white sauce to which a beaten egg has been added. Sprinkle grated parmesan cheese thickly over the top of the onions and cook for fifteen minutes, or until light brown. Serve in the dish in which they were baked.

Sweet Potato Balls

Boil sweet potatoes, peel, and, while hot, press through the potato ricer. Add a great spoonful of butter and enough milk to moisten the mixture. Beat hard and whip in a beaten egg. Season with pepper and salt and form into balls. Roll each ball quickly in

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

IMPORTANT NOTICE

BECAUSE of the enormous number of letters sent to the Exchange, I must ask contributors to limit their communications to one hundred words, except in cases of formulas or recipes which require greater space. I want all my correspondents to have a showing in the Corner, and if my request in this respect is complied with it will be possible to print many more letters.

Salt and Digestion

IN YOUR remarks upon the communication received by you from "K. S. F." you ask, "Does salt assist or impede digestion?"

To begin with, I call your attention to the fact that natural salt found in fruits and grains is "organic," while common table salt is "inorganic." And just because it is inorganic (lifeless) table salt—otherwise known as "chloride of sodium," a mineral—is unassimilable. Hence, it is not a food, and it cannot assist digestion. All leading authorities upon physiology and diet are agreed here. If there exists any dissimilarity of opinion upon this point, it is merely as to the degree of injury which common salt does to the human system. It does not help to form any of the tissue, and so it must be eliminated from the body by the kidneys, bowels and skin. Even with the help of these it is not all of it removed. Some particles are deposited in the bone joints.

Salt tends to premature age and senility; it forms deposits in blood vessels and in joints; it robs the marrow of tissue cells; it is highly irritating to the mucous membrane lining the stomach; it is largely responsible for the inordinate thirst of some people immediately after or during mealtimes, which, when indulged in too freely, dilutes the digestive juices, thereby hindering normal digestion. It causes "bolting" of foods and gulping of soups, thereby defeating proper mastication and salivary digestion. It causes a waste of vital nervous energy, in that it taxes the depurating organs with useless labor. Finally, and in brief, salt is necessary for the human body, but only the assimilable organic and natural salts, such as are found in fruits, grains, nuts and vegetables, can be appropriated. When these foods are properly combined in the dietary they contain sufficient salt for perfect health. In answer, then, to your inquiry, I should say that common table salt is not only not an aid to digestion, but decidedly an injurious deterrent.

The two cases cited by you as seeming to indicate the necessity of table salt in the dietary point out the fact from the disastrous result that an imperfect dietary, not properly balanced, with probably an insanitary environment, were indulged in.

When the physiological functions of the body are perfectly understood and a properly balanced diet of natural foods is partaken of, and no violations of hygienic laws are allowed, perfect health is the natural result.

CHARLES F. (Berkeley, Cal.).

From the same quarter of our territory comes a vehement protest against the use of table salt from one who says of himself:

> I am just a plain working man who has studied the question of diet and the laws of health for many years.

In reference to my quotation of the schoolboy's definition of "Salt—what makes potatoes don't taste good when you don't put any on them"—our correspondent says:

> Potatoes without salt don't taste good, they say. That shows that our natural taste has been spoiled, or that potatoes are not the right kind of food. What, then, it may be asked, would be the best kind of food for human beings? The answer is simple: Anything that tastes good in its natural state. A raw potato does not taste good. Nor would you like to bite into a chicken that had just been killed. Marion Harland has told us often that Americans, as a nation, are eating too much meat. Yes! But why not go one step further and stop eating our fellow-creatures? This would solve the problem of high meat prices and we should be healthier and happier in the end.
> Eat rice and potatoes, if you like, but for goodness' sake don't eat anything "what looks out of a pair of eyes"!
> H. B. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

The letter is too long to be printed entire.

Shall the case now go to the jury? Or are there still other arguments and pleadings to be heard?

Has the world been at fault through all the ages in believing that "salt is good"?

Bar-le-Duc

> "Mrs. M. E. L." asks for a recipe for bar-le-duc. I have bought from grocers the imported currant jelly put up in Bar-le-Duc, France. It is put up in odd little jars, and is simply a boiled-down syrup. Holding it up to the light, you can see fine, large specimens of the fruit scattered through the conserve. These taste like fresh currants, but the syrup (which is not a jelly) is insipid to our taste. I added the juice of half a lemon to each tumbler we used, stirring it in with a spoon. If I intended to keep it for more than a day or two, I should not add all the lemon juice at once, but just a little in the sauce dish.
> FRANCES (Wis.).

Let me thank you, in this connection, for the "heartsome" letter embodying the foregoing paragraph. It is too intimately personal in tone and detail for the general reader, but it is heartily appreciated by her to whom it is addressed.

Two other friendly members prove themselves to be really "Constant Readers" by sending the recipe printed in the Exchange several months ago.

One considerately adds:

> Here is the formula clipped from your Corner many months ago. I have copied it into my recipe book and send the clipping, so there will be no mistake. I have hundreds of your recipes stored away where I can easily find them.
> As the holiday time is not very far off, would you care to have a formula for a real English plum pudding? If so, I shall be glad to send you one.
> I hope that "Mrs. M. E. L." will keep and try this bar-le-duc recipe. I used it last July, and it was perfect.
> LORETTA (Waukesha, Wis.).

Mrs. M. M. E. (Kalamazoo, Mich.) "has never tried the recipe, but trusts it may prove satisfactory."

Bar-le-Duc

Stem large ripe currants carefully. Weigh them and allow 2 pounds of sugar to each pound of fruit. Get two more cupfuls of juice from a reserved supply of currants. Put a cupful of this into your kettle, with 2 pounds of sugar, and cook five minutes, skimming closely. Then add a pound of whole currants and cook five minutes longer. Strain the currants out of the syrup and put into a bowl. Return the syrup to the fire and boil until thick and clear. Skim this; strain through a cheesecloth bag upon the currants; boil all together one minute and put into jelly glasses. When cold, cover with paraffine.

The plum pudding recipe will be acceptable.

Two Recipes

> May I ask for a recipe for a lamb stew and for chicken cut up in pieces with rice?
> A. F. K. (Chicago).

Lamb Stew

Cut 2 pounds of lean, coarse lamb into inch-long pieces or into small squares. Fry a sliced onion to a light brown in 2 tablespoonfuls of dripping or of butter. Strain out the onion and return the fat to the pan. Dredge the lamb with flour and cook for 3 minutes in the hissing fat, turning, to sear all sides of it. Empty meat and fat into a saucepan and cover with a cupful of weak stock, or with butter and hot water; cover closely and cook gently until the meat is tender. Take up and keep hot in a hot-water dish while you season the gravy with minced parsley, salt and paprika; thicken it with a roux of a tablespoonful of butter cooked two minutes with 1 spoonful of flour, then stirred into the gravy. Pour over the meat; keep over hot water for five minutes and serve upon buttered toast.

The stew is greatly improved by the addition of a cupful of canned green peas cooked tender, drained and put into the gravy before pouring the latter over the meat. Some drop into the boiling gravy a few leaves of green mint.

Stewed Chicken With Rice

Joint a pair of fowls, after cleaning and washing them. Leave for an hour in a "marinade" of lemon juice and salad oil. Drain without wiping. Put them into the inner vessel of a double boiler, adding no water. Cover closely and set in the larger outer boiler full of tepid water. Bring slowly to a boil and cook two hours at least. Test the chicken then with a fork, and if it be moderately tender drop into the kettle half a cupful of finely minced salt pork, the juice of an onion and a tablespoonful of minced parsley. Cook for an hour longer, or until very tender. Lift the chicken with a split spoon and lay in a hot colander to drain. There should be plenty of good gravy from the meat and the minced pork. If not, add a little boiling water. Return this gravy to the pot and add half of a large cupful of rice which has soaked for an hour in cold water. Drain before putting it into the gravy and cook fast until the rice is soft, but not broken. Put back the chicken and simmer three minutes—not more. Heap the chicken upon a platter and pour rice and gravy over it. Sift grated cheese over the surface. Set in the hot oven for one minute and serve.

You may cook the rice separately in plenty of boiling water and heap about the chicken when the latter is dished, pouring in the gravy last and omitting the cheese.

Sterilized Milk

> A while ago you spoke of sterilizing milk. How is this done? I notice, too, an item to the effect that to drink plenty of boiled milk will reduce flesh. What is your opinion of this? I wish to drink milk in order to put on more flesh.
> J. H. W. (Chicago).

To sterilize milk, bring to a steady boil and hold it at that for forty minutes. By then the bacteria in the liquid will be deprived of the power of reproduction.

It is a settled fact that if milk be boiled a few minutes and set away in a corked bottle wrapped in flannel it will remain warm for hours, but the germs will survive the process and multiply rapidly. Professor Tyndall found that he could not destroy the germs in an infusion of hay without boiling it for several hours.

I have never heard that drinking boiled milk would reduce flesh. It is possible that the chemical change in the creamy matter of the milk, wherein much of the nourishment lies, may have some effect upon the growth of adipose tissue.

Raw, unskimmed milk undoubtedly encourages this growth. Witness the plumpness of babies who are fed entirely upon a milk diet.

Work at Home

N. B.—I lay aside reluctantly a letter from a South Carolina correspondent who wishes us to mention her work at home. It is in direct violation of our rules to offer anything for sale in the Exchange, or to ask for salaried positions of any kind whatsoever. The reasons for this are cogent and are understood by all who are conversant with newspaper work in its various departments. Now and then the prohibition bears hard upon those whose need and whose merit move us to compassion and a desire to "lend a hand" to the struggling toiler.

I make this explanation because I am besieged by requests that I would secure customers or clients for women thrown upon their own resources to make a living for themselves and their children.

Mother's Recipes

> I am sending to you my mother's recipe for chowchow and for chili sauce. They are very fine, especially that for chowchow.

Chowchow

Two quarts of green tomatoes and the same of celery; 1 quart of onions, 1 dozen large cucumbers. (If you cannot get fresh, the pickled will do.) Twenty-four green peppers.

Cut these all up or chop, and sprinkle with salt. Let them drain overnight in a cloth bag. Next day boil in vinegar until cooked clear. Add, then, 2 cups of sugar and 2 oz of celery seed. Thicken with a small bottleful of salad mustard. I cut the cucumbers with a sharp knife, to keep from bruising them.

Pack down in small jars and seal.

Chili Sauce

Eight quarts of ripe tomatoes; 2 cupfuls of sweet mangoes (chopped); 2 cupfuls of onions; 3 of sugar; 1 of salt; 12 quarts of vinegar; 3 teaspoonfuls each of ground cloves and of cinnamon; 3 teaspoonfuls of ginger; 2 grated nutmegs.

Chop all very fine; boil three hours slowly; add the spice at the last. Put into glass jars and seal. Keep in a dark place, or wrap each jar in thick paper. Keep all pickles cool and at an even temperature.

Mrs. C. C. B. (Berwick, Pa.).

It will be noted that both of these recipes are for large quantities of the pickles. The housemother who would put them up upon a more modest scale must divide and subdivide the ingredients to suit her wishes. They are good "standbys" in the long winters. Green tomatoes may be bought in the city markets long after frost has nipped the vines, and the country housekeeper may store them for weeks in a dry cellar.

Churnless Butter

> I inclose a clipping which I found in an old scrapbook where it had lain for fifteen years at least. It may throw some light upon the mystery of "Churnless Butter."
> J. H. (Danville, Cal.).

The cutting is from an Auckland (New Zealand) journal. I extract the pith:

> "Lately we suggested that butter could be made by a less laborious process than by the old-fashioned mode of churning. The new method is this: Simply burying the cream in a stout calico bag in loose garden soil for twenty-four hours or so, then gently working the resulting lump in the butter tub for a few minutes, when it may be washed and salted in the usual way. To the general run of masculine minds the proposed method appeared utterly absurd, but the quicker perceptions of the ladies in many homes caused the plan to be tried with the most gratifying results.
> "The plan has now become well known in all the colonies, and wherever it is known is hailed with delight. By it a richer flavored butter is produced at a tithe of the labor required by the old process of butter making."

It is not fifteen months since one of our own members wrote out for us a minute account of her experiment with this very process. We believed the idea to be original with her, and referred the curious tale to the scientific men who honor the Exchange by reading what we houseworkers have to say. I could not comprehend then, I fail to comprehend now, why burying cream in the ground for a night and a day should convert it into "richly flavored butter." Yet in far-off New Zealand they have known and practiced the primitive method for fifteen years. This is a brand-new fashion (to most of us) of getting near to Nature's heart. Will our pundits expound the causes that bring about the change?

An Objection

> The introduction of domestic science into public schools and the movement in New York city of teaching "Babyology" in the schools are going to prove powerful agents in reducing many gross evils. Keep in mind the "fallen girl" and the "wild-oats boy," should you feel called upon to speak of these movements.
> I enjoyed your talk upon candle and lamplight, but our public dances, continual series of amusements in the evening, dissipation, fast living and a host of other strenuous society demands have taken away the beautiful work and beautiful readings of our former homes. The work done by our busy grandmothers would not hurt our eyes. It is fashion and fast living that make the glare of gas and electricity indispensable to our comfort.
> MARY McN. W. (Chicago).

Floor Filler

"I. M. R." (Battle Creek, Mich.) asks for directions for filling cracks in the floor with a preparation of soaked paper, etc. Here they are:

> Tear old newspapers into small pieces, cover them with hot water and boil slowly several hours, stirring often to break the paper fiber. When reduced to a pulp, press out the water. Make a paste of one quart of flour, three quarts of water and one tablespoonful of powdered alum, boiling well and mixing thoroughly; to this add enough of the paper pulp to make the mixture as thick as putty. Press this filler into the cracks as soon as it is cool enough to handle. It will quickly harden and will last for years.
> I have used this mixture and can recommend it. Mrs. L. M. B. (Chicago).

Those who have pressed me with inquiries for the formula herewith given will please clip it out and preserve it safely.

Also, another from the same city, which arrived by the same mail with the capital recipe for which we are indebted to "Mrs. L. M. B."

> For the benefit of "I. M. R." and her Battle Creek bride, I contribute these items found in my manila envelope file, marked—
> For Floors and Furniture
> Make a paste by soaking blotting paper in water and mixing dissolved glue with it. A little pulverized whiting, added to stiffen the paste, will increase its value. Pound and knead this to a stiff paste, adding, if you wish, a little coloring pigment to imitate wood. Work this into the cracks with a putty knife and smooth the surface even with the wood.
> This paste will not shrink, nor is it affected by heat or cold.
> 2. Dissolve one pound of glue in two gallons of water. Stir into this enough fine sawdust to make a thick paste; color to match the wood and fill the cracks.
> 3. Fill the cracks with putty. (But the putty comes out after awhile. We tried it!)
> 4. Soak finely shredded paper in water, and boil it to a soft pulp. To every two gallons add a pound of dissolved glue. Color to match the wood.
> My file is very full and contains much that might interest your Michigan bride and others whose needs are the same with hers.
> I should be glad to supply her with more items should she care to write to me for them.

PRINCE'S GIFT TO PARIS.

Oceanographic Institute Endowed by Monaco and Will Be Branch of the University.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

PARIS, Nov. 3.—In 1906, Prince Albert I, of Monaco wrote to the Minister of Public Instruction expressing his desire to endow a building for the study of oceanographic science in Paris, which was to serve as an annex, as it were, to the Oceanographique Institute and Museum at Monte Carlo. The Prince of Monaco promised to endow it with $800,000. This magnanimous offer has been accepted and in the course of a few weeks the building will be ready for occupancy. The formal dedication will be presided over by President Fallieres.

The Institute Oceanographique is situated on the historic old street of St. Jacques. The studies will comprise oceanographic physics, biology and the physiology of living things that belong to the sea. The Prince of Monaco has been made its honorary president, and ex-President Loubet is the vice-president, and America is represented by Prof. Agassiz of Harvard College.

The institute will be practically a branch of the Sorbonne and as at this renowned seat of learning, lectures will be given by many of the great authorities and professors to which the public will be admitted free of charge.

Adjoining this building is a vacant lot which has been purchased for the erection of a laboratory for the sole use of Mme. Curie, the discoverer of radium.

TOMBSTONE.

GREAT PUMPS DO THE WORK.

NEARLY SEVEN MILLION GALLONS OF WATER DAILY.

New Ore Body Recently Found on the Seven Hundred Level of the Tombstone Consolidated Mines Company—Arizona and Michigan Development Company in Trouble.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

TOMBSTONE (Ariz.) Nov. 18.—Since the great pumps on the 1000 level have been uncovered and added to the water raising equipment, there has been no trouble in keeping down the water at the main shaft of the Tombstone Consolidated Mines Company. At present 6,900,000 gallons a day are being raised. Success is attending the working of a new ore body lately found on the 700 level. The ore is notably high grade, reminding old timers of the palmy days of the camp. Much work is being done on outside properties and four carloads a week of ore are being shipped on outside account.

The Arizona and Michigan Development Company of Johnson Camp and the Dragoon Mountain and Northern Railroad Company are in dire trouble. A. J. Pidgeon, their president and general manager, has been arrested in Louisville, Ky., charged with misappropriation of $1800 of the funds of the mining corporation. The charge was made by Wm. R. Waters, a Louisville capitalist, head of the German Lithographic Stone Company, who was a late visitor to Johnson, where he went to look up the value of his holdings in the two corporations named. The whole affair seems to have been only another demonstration of the manner in which some mining corporations reach after wealth too soon. The mine had been equipped with a small smelter and then there was a claim that profit could not be secured because of the high cost of transportation. So a nine-mile railroad was built from Dragoon, on the Southern Pacific, but it did no perceptible good, the mine being closed down simply because its ore values were low and little developed and because a smaller smelter is not profitable to operate.

Very high grade carbonate copper ore has been struck on the 425 level of the Centurian mine, near Dragoon. This is one of the oddest mines in Arizona, valuable ore bodies being discovered around a series of caverns. Cool fresh air wells up to the miners from below in the lowest levels and the management is preparing to sink still deeper, assured that where the caverns are found there also will be found rich copper ore.

At Dragoon has been announced the suspension of operations on the Texas-Arizona mine, though it is expected that the company will soon start up again. Considerable good ore has been shipped from shallow workings and capital is needed for exploration at depth.

In the Huachuca Mountains there is a prospect for the sale of the famous old Mitchell claims, now owned by G. J. McCabe, a member of the County Board of Supervisors. The mine has large deposits of rich ore, carrying gold, silver, lead and copper, but it also carries zinc and other base materials, rendering useless a resort to the usual reduction methods. It is now told that a way has been found to successfully treat the ore and to save all its metallic contents.

SMELTER OUTPUT SLUMPS. CONDITIONS AT BISBEE.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

BISBEE, (Ariz.) Nov. 18.—Though the output of the Copper Queen mines is held at about the same figure, the output of the company's smelter at Douglas is running about 2,000,000 pounds of metal a month below the figures of last spring. Much of this is due to the fact that custom ores are not coming in such supply, though the Shattuck is sending down 190 tons a day of very rich ore and a part of the output is derived from concentrates from the Phelps-Dodge concentrator at Nacosari, Sonora. Nine furnaces are being operated, producing for last month about 8,000,000 pounds of bullion. The company is forever at work, however, on improvements to the great Douglas plant. An addition is being made to the smelter buildings for housing five MacDougal roasters, together with two reverberatory furnaces, each of the furnaces to be 100 feet in length. This new equipment is to be used especially in the reduction of concentrates, flue dust and fine ores. To serve the new furnaces there will be built a new stack, fourteen feet in diameter and 300 feet in height. Two new turbines are to be installed, each of 1100 horse power, to generate electricity to be transmitted by wire to the Tigre mines, in Sonora. Undoubtedly the Copper Queen is now producing copper more economically than any other mining company in the Southwest and the efficiency of the plant and economy of operation will be largely served by the improvements being made.

Extensive improvements and additions are being made to the reduction plant of the Greene-Cananea Company at Cananea, with an especial view to the proper handling of concentrates from the Miami concentrator, near Globe. It is probable that these concentrates will begin to arrive about February 1. Large additional ore bins are being built and work has been commenced on six MacDougal roasters, and on several reverberatory furnaces. In December the company will turn from Texas to California for its fuel oil, of which it uses 900 barrels a day. Economy in mine costs is expected to result from the operation of a new tunnel, through which ore now is brought from the Eureka, Elisa and Sierra de Cobres mines to bins on the mining railroad at the Capote siding.

The proposed consolidation of the Calumet & Arizona and Superior & Pittsburg properties does not seem to be settled in any way, though it appears to be favored by the management in each of the companies. A scheme of consolidation will be presented at the next stockholders' meeting. The mines and equipment have been inspected and appraised by James Douglas Jr. and Dr. L. D. Ricketts, upon whose report will depend the final status of the proposition to be submitted to the share owners. The first offer made the Superior & Pittsburg owners is said to have been on the basis of one share in the consolidated for five of their shares. But they wanted one share for two of the old stock.

Ready to Begin Work.

The Vallecitos Development Company is putting up a derrick and rig for its first well, and will soon spud in. Following that it will immediately begin work on a second well. Derricks are now going up all over the Vallecitos district, and business in the new town of Syncline is rushing. The Range 18 Oil Company's first well is going down rapidly, and so far there has not been an hour's hitch in the drilling. After the New Bedford it will probably be the first one of the new companies to strike the oil sands.

MAKING FIGHT.

AUBURY MAKES STURDY KICK.

WANTS CALIFORNIA MATERIAL IN PUBLIC BUILDING.

Supervising Architect of the Treasury Specifies Tennessee Marble for the Santa Cruz Postoffice—This State Produces All that is Necessary at Less Cost.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department of the United States is evidently continuing to discriminate against California structural materials and would seem to be determined to persist in that course, despite the showing that the California materials are superior and that the cost of construction of public buildings would be materially diminished by their use. At the same time the buildings would be more durable.

State Mineralogist Aubury has just ascertained that the Supervising Architect, James Knox Taylor, has sent out revised plans for the Santa Cruz postoffice, and that in the specifications it has been made impossible for the producers of structural materials in California to compete. The information has been given to the structural materials men of California, who have combined with the State Mineralogist to institute a permanent exhibtion of California products for the inspection of architects, builders and owners of real property, in the Ferry Building, in connection with the regular mineral exhibit of the California State Mining Bureau.

Architect Knox's plans provide that the marble columns in front of the Santa Cruz postoffice shall be of green veined statuary marble. There is no marble in the United States of American production of this description with the exception of that quared in Vermont. Consequently the expense will be incurred of bringing the columns clear across the continent and again an official act will discredit the California marble. The details of the lobby of the structure, as set forth officially provide that the marble base below screen and below wood panels under windows shall be of Vermont oriental marble; that the panels shall be of Tennessee gray marble; that there shall be Tennessee gray marble base below all cement plaster.

There is a large amount of paneling on the first floor. This, so Architect Knox dictates, shall be of gray Tennessee marble, red Numidian marble, black marble and white Alaska borders. The panels over the windows in the side elevation will be of Portola marble. A strong protest may be sent to Washington by the State Mineralogist and the California materials men, all of whom are much interested in seeing that in public buildings, in California at least, this State shall not be made the object of adverse discrimination.

Aubury has sent out to all builders and contractors, architects and realty owners in the State a circular notifying them that the names and addresses of every producer of California structural materials are on file in the State Mining Bureau and that the bureau will furnish them to all who are concerned. The fight in behalf of home materials produced at home has been made during a series of years with some success by Aubury. The California Development Board has adopted resolutions favoring the home products and endorsing Aubury's action. The Home Industry League of California is also behind Aubury in his fight for California materials in government and other buildings erected in this State.

Princess Makes Strike.

The Princess Oil Company, operating on the Muscio tract in the Santa Maria field, has struck a fine tar sand and heavy gas pressure at 1700 feet. Discovery on this property will prove up a large territory intervening westward to the Cat Canyon properties. The 320 acres holding of the Santa Maria Midway Oil Company is close to the Princess property. Albert H. Beach and other business men of this city are its incorporators, and they are rejoicing over this strike.

AN END TO LENIENCE.

Retail Merchants Determine to Prosecute All Shoplifters in Future. Detectives to Catch Them.

Heretofore the retail merchants of this city have been extremely lenient with detected shoplifters, giving them every opportunity to reform without a fine or jail sentence.

This leniency does not seem to have the desired effect in decreasing this type of crime; therefore the retail merchants have decided to prosecute all cases of shoplifting and other stealing to the full extent of the law.

They are determined to use every lawful means to put a stop to all amateur and professional work of this character, and have employed the most skilled detectives to apprehend every shoplifter and dishonest person.

WOMAN CAN KEEP CLAIM.

Notice was received at the local land office yesterday that the General Land Office had affirmed the decision of the Register and Receiver in the contest of Leo R. Bonesteel against Hulda H. Vaughn. Bonesteel alleged that proper reclamation work had not been done on a claim in the Imperial Valley, but the officials found that the requirements of the law had been complied with.

LOS ANGELES NATIONAL BANKS ARE IN A HEALTHY CONDITION.

The last call made by the Comptroller of the Treasury on the national banks for their statements was on November 10. The national banks of Los Angeles, as usual, were found to be in fine shape, gains being made all along the line.

The previous statement was called for on September 1, and the figures for the local institutions at the close of business on September 1 and at the close of business on November 10 are given below, as follows:

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE.

There is an Upward Tendency to Stocks, But the Closing Day Does Not See Much Trading.

The market on the Stock Exchange Saturday was very dull; in fact, the Los Angeles Exchange is getting into the same way of trading as is the custom with the principal exchanges in the East, Saturday as a rule being a very poor day many of the brokers being away for the week-end, and as it is a short day, trading is usually light.

Pacific Cons Stone was active in the public utility list and there was some inquiry for Home Preferred and Home Common.

The bonds and bank stocks were quiet, showing no particular change, except Associated Oil Bonds, which were stronger.

In the oil list, Cleveland Oil was strong. Consolidated Midway also strong; Mexican Common strong and Palmer Oil shows a decided strength having a gain of two and one-half points over Friday's trading and the bids coming in for these shares from several quarters were in blocks. The rumor that the Palmer is liable to increase its dividend will not down, therefore the shares are in demand. Union was strong, but showed no decided gain.

The market closed with decidedly a better undertone than has been evidenced for several days of the week just passed. The bears were in control for a good part of the time, but the bulls seemed to have got into form Saturday and the market picked up and closed stronger.

May Grain and Corn Are at Advance When Trading Ends—Oats Fluctuate Slightly, But Last Transactions Are at Precisely Same Figure as at Opening.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Purchases on the part of several local speculators lifted wheat to a firm close today, ⅛ to ¼ higher than yesterday. May wheat ranged from 95⅞@96 to 96⅜, and closed ⅛ net higher at 96⅜. May corn fluctuated from 46⅝ to 46⅞@46⅞, closing steady with 46⅞, a net gain of a shade. Cash corn was weak. No. 2 yellow finished at 52@52½. May oats sold between 33⅝ and 33⅞, with last transactions at the last named figures, precisely the same as twenty-four hours before.

There was a late rally in hog products. The end of the day left pork 5 to 7½ more expensive, lard, 2½ higher to 20 down and ribs at an advance of 2½ to 5.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Cash quotations were as follows: Flour, steady; winter patents, 4.10@4.65; straights, 3.75@4.50; spring patents, 4.25@4.45; straights, 3.50@4.70; bakers, 4.25@4.45; No. 2 rye, 75@75½; feed or mixing barley, 60@70; fair to choice malting, 77@81; flaxseed, No. 1 southwestern, 2.54; No. 1 northwestern, 2.60; timothy seed, 9.00; clover, 14.50; mess pork, per bbl., 17.50@17.75; lard, per 100 lbs., 10.50; short ribs, sides (loose,) 9.00@10.25.

NEW YORK COTTON MARKET.

[Special Service to The Times by E. F. Hutton & Co., Members New York Stock Exchange, 112 West Third street, Los Angeles.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Liverpool is not as good as expected and spot sales very small. The stock and afloat for Liverpool now is only 175,000 bales less than last year and promises to run ahead of last year and year before last by the end of December. Stocks at United States ports and interior towns are only 42,691 bales less than a year ago, and by the end of another week will probably begin to show an excess when compared with last year for the balance of the season. The week end figures this week are decidedly bearish for the first time this season, the visible supply of American showing an increase for the week of 277,404 bales against an increase of only 71,396 bales one year ago and 242,565 bales in 1908 which is in keeping with our predictions of one week ago. The market will be called upon to digest the census report at the opening Monday morning, but the main feature that is puzzling the local talent is the large amount of cotton coming here for delivery on December contracts. The people who are professing the greatest confidence in 20 cent cotton are not getting ready to take up any cotton in December and it looks as if it was going to be taken up by people who never have advertised themselves as bull leaders and who at the same time are supposed to be short of January and long of May.

Logan & Bryan's letter says:

"The speculator alone is interested in lower priced cotton. The spinner does not want a decline in cotton as it would disturb his dry goods market which is always slow to readjust itself. The banking interest, so long acquainted with the amount of money that cotton exports bring to our shores, has finally discovered that without cotton our resources would dwindle and we would have no balance of trade as cotton is more than half our entire exports in money value and, therefore, creates more money than all other articles combined. It is peculiar but true that banking interests of this city have barely begun to discover this fact. The producer, naturally does not want lower priced cotton and the consumer of cotton goods can hardly tell by the price of his shirt whether it was ten cents or fifteen cents per pound for the raw material. The speculator alone antagonizes the price and his only reason for such antagonism is that by comparison with previous years (except last year,) it is hard to find 14 to 15-cent cotton in November. He must know, if he cares to look it up, that the consumption of cotton has overtaken the production and hampered by the boll weevil. It is going to be a hard matter, even if nature is kind in the way of weather, to restore an equilibrium. Spindles have increased faster than cotton acreage and all pessimistic talk to the contrary these spindles are showing a profit to their owners, even under conditions like those of last year. When a sluggish goods market and an active and high priced cotton market were seen. Monday's ginning report will constitute over eighty per cent. of the entire crop, what the farmer has not sold he wants fifteen cents for. Some of them expect twenty cents and the farmer is in an impregnable financial position. Whatever figures the report shows Monday there will be buyers to take the offerings. If spot values do not yield our market cannot yield."

SHARES AND MONEY.

PRICES ADVANCE IN WALL STREET.

MARKET, HOWEVER, RETAINS PROFESSIONAL LIMITATIONS.

Union Pacific and United States Steel Practically Rise to Highest Figures of Present Movement and Reading Is Not Far Below—Easing Money Conditions Sustaining Influence.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The stock market retained its professional limitations today, but prices continued to advance. Union Pacific and United States Steel practically rose to the highest prices on the present movement, and Reading was not far below. The indications of easing money conditions made a sustaining influence. The current of the money movement toward New York was regarded as ending the crop-moving requirements of the interior and foreshadowing a recuperation of reserve holding of the New York banks. The private discount rate receded in London. The political programme in Great Britain, by providing for budget action before the dissolution of Parliament, takes from the situation the factor which proved disturbing in last year's crisis. The feature of the bank statement was the heavy transfer of deposits and loans from trust companies to clearing-house banks, occasioned by the decline in interest rates during the week. There were decreases in the weekly averages of "other banks and trust companies" of $[illegible] in deposits, $15,795,600 in loans and $1,[illegible] in cash.

This transfer seems to have neutralized in the actual showing of the clearing-house banks by loan contraction in other quarters, so that the loan increase only reached the nominal sum of $682,700. Evidently the shifting from the trust companies did not help to benefit the cash showing of the banks, the actual cash increase of over $8,000,000 comparing with preliminary estimates of only $2,000,000.

Bonds were easy. Total sales, par value, $1,[illegible]. United States bonds were unchanged on call.

New York Curb Stocks.

[Special service to The Times by E. F. Hutton & Co., members New York Stock Exchange, 112 West Third street, Los Angeles.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—For a Saturday the curb was very active with Chino and Inspiration, the leaders. Hayden, Stone & Co., were heavy buyers of each, the market closed strong. Inspiration sold off a fraction. We think purchases around these prices will show a good profit. Boston coppers were strong with a good undertone.

The following were the closing bid and asked quotations:

UNION LOBBIES BLOCK WORK.

PENITENTIARIES CANNOT OBTAIN PROPER MACHINERY.

Reports From Wardens of State Institutions Show Labor Tactics Responsible for This State of Things—Judge Willis on Prison Reform—Advocates Changes.

Labor unions which employ lobbies at all of the State Legislatures are responsible for the lack of machinery for the mechanical departments of the penitentiaries, according to a statement made to the Juvenile Improvement Association yesterday by Judge Frank R. Willis.

The magistrate said that he based his information on reports made to him by wardens in various States whom he called on during a recent trip through the East.

The judge was asked to join in the discussion of the feasibility of obtaining a reformatory for Southern California or of transforming San Quentin Penitentiary into a reformatory for first offenders.

He gave his experiences while a visitor at various institutions in the East, and said that the school at Elmira, N. Y., was the nearest approach to a model. In it the stripes have given way to the military uniform, the lockstep to the military step, and the lack of educational facilities has been overcome.

The judge placed his stamp of approval on the idea of getting a reformatory for all first offenders to be located in this part of the State.

Others who spoke along this line were Judge Curtis Wilbur and Griffith J. Griffith.

Mrs. J. B. Millard, chairman of education of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, presented a resolution to have a bill framed whereby the boards of education of each city will be empowered to set aside money for the purpose of assisting children of poor parents while attending school.

There was considerable discussion as to whether they should advocate a raise in the age of compulsory education from 14 to 16 years.

The officers for the past year were elected for another term.

MAY BECOME RARE.

Government Abolishes Thirteen-Cent Stamps and They Promise to Be Valuable as Souvenirs.

United States 13-cent postage stamps will become rare in a short time and the demand for them by collectors will probably cause their price to jump.

According to the present letter rates there is practically no call for stamps of this denomination, as it is seldom that the postage required is of this amount. Formerly this stamp was much used.

Orders were issued on November 9, 1909, to discontinue the manufacture of the 13-cent stamp. Since that time the supply on hand in the office at Washington has been gradually diminished by the call of the various offices throughout the country.

Postmaster Harrison yesterday received information that the last consignment had been sent out and that the government would supply no more of the offices. Those now on hand will be valid postage until all have been used up.

The Federal officials deny that the fact that "thirteen" is considered an unlucky number had anything to do with abolishing the stamp.

HE WAS SHOWING OFF.

Chauffeur Arrested for Driving Block on the Sidewalk to Demonstrate His Skill.

Dayton Mills, a chauffeur employed by Dr. A. J. Berry, was arrested yesterday afternoon on a warrant charging him with a misdemeanor which the police say was an attempt on the part of the chauffeur to show some women what a fine driver he is.

According to the police, Mills secured the machine which Dr. Berry had just purchased and took four women for a joy-ride. About 5 o'clock yesterday morning he was driving down Main street when jokingly he declared the road wasn't good enough for his machine.

Leaving the road, the police say, he drove the machine upon the sidewalk on Main street between Seventh and Eighth streets, and for a block raced past the stores.

Patrolman Fickert obtained the number of the auto and later was able to serve a complaint on Mills.

HER HAND AND ARM BURNED AND ITCHED

Could Hardly Sleep at Night for About 11 Months. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and was Completely Cured.

"My mother had a red spot on her right hand which began to grow worse rapidly. The neighbors said it was a tetter. She got some medicine from a doctor, but it did not do any good. In about a week the tetter began to break out on her arm too. She used five or six different kinds of liniments and three different kinds of salves. Not one of these did her a particle of good. Her hand and arm would burn and itch so much that she could hardly sleep at night. Her hand was that way for about eleven months. Finally a friend of ours recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment to us. She bought some immediately and began to use it. She washed her hand and arm with Cuticura Soap and warm water. Then she applied the Cuticura Ointment and bandaged her hand up. The next morning we all noticed a great improvement. Before she had used a half of a box of Ointment and a very little Soap her hand was completely cured. Now her hand is as well as ever. I think Cuticura Soap and Ointment is the greatest skin remedy ever discovered. C. E. Canady, San Leandro, Cal., Mar. 7, 1910."

Cuticura Remedies afford the most economical treatment for affections of the skin and scalp of infants, children and adults. A cake of Cuticura Soap (25c.) and a box of Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are often sufficient. Sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston. THE CAUSE

"I wonder why the bride is crying," remarked one of the guests at the wedding; "can it be because she is leaving home?"

"No; it ain't that," answered the bride's small brother. "She's in love with the fellow she married, and I think she's crying 'cause she feels sorry for him, 'cause he bought her a Wardrobe, Steamer, Hat, Auto and General Utility Trunk at the Featherweight Trunk Co., for her wedding gift, and she did not have clothing enough to fill them all."

Eyeglasses Not Necessary.

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eyeglasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina."

"Actina" also relieves sore and Granulated Lids, Iritis, etc., and removes Cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over seventy-five thousand "Actinas" have been sold; therefore the Actina treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

J. J. Pope, P. O. Box, No. 43, Mineral Wells, Texas, writes: "I have spent thousands of dollars on my eyes, consulted the best doctors in the United States, dropped medicine in my eyes for years, and 'Actina' is the only thing that has ever done me any good. Before using 'Actina' I gave up all hope of ever being able to read again. Had not read a newspaper for seven years. Now I can read all day with little or no inconvenience."

Kathryn Bird, 112 Lincoln St., Milwaukee, Wis., writes: "I was troubled with astigmatism and had worn glasses from ten years of age. I could not read or write without them. In a surprisingly short time, after using 'Actina,' I laid aside my glasses and I will never use them again."

E. R. Holbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "'Actina' has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headaches now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial, prepaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 28N, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

BUNGALOWS TO BE ELABORATE.

Picturesque Homes Planned by Oak Knoll Builder.

Court with Thirty Fireproof Houses Projected.

Monrovia Hotel to Be Remodeled into Sanitarium.

Architect Arthur S. Heineman is preparing plans for a large bungalow to be built at the corner of Pinehurst and El Molino avenues, in Oak Knoll, South Pasadena. The Hogan Company, Pasadena is the owner. The building will be fan-shaped with wings radiating on either side from the living room which will be the central feature of the house. The extreme dimensions are 90x70 feet, and there will be ten rooms including a billiard room and sleeping porch, and three bathrooms with tile floors and wainscot. The exterior walls will be covered with dipped shingles. The living and dining-rooms will be finished in Prima Vera, the billiard room in teak, and the remainder of the rooms will have white cedar trim finished natural and in white enamel. There will be an inglenook and fireplace in the living room. This will be the first of a number of fine houses which The Hogan Company proposes to build in Oak Knoll.

Other significant building projects in this city and vicinity are reported by the Southwest Contractor and Manufacturer as follows:

Hudson & Munsell, are preparing plans for a large two-story garage to be built at the residence of Secondo Guasti on West Adams street. It will be a brick building with plastered exterior and clay tile roof. Plans are also preparing for a large pergola of classical design to be constructed of artificial stone. An elaborate landscape scheme for the grounds has been laid out by Wilbur David Cook, landscape architect. The grading of the grounds has already been started.

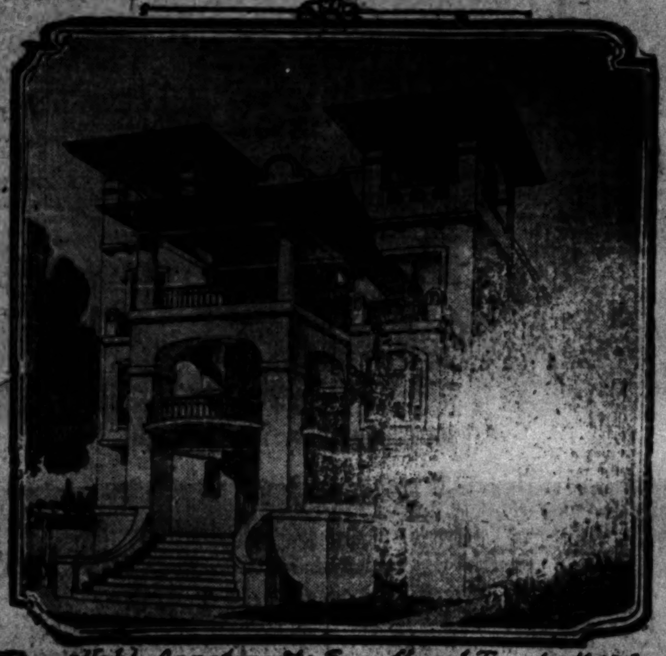
Homer W. Glidden, has prepared plans for a bungalow court on Metcalf street near Temple for Ellis T. Yarnell. The bungalows will each contain three rooms and bathroom and will be constructed of reinforced concrete with clay tile roofs. The plans provide for thirty-two bungalows but it has not been determined how many will be erected at present.

Eager & Eager are preparing sketches for remodeling the La Vista Grande Hotel at Monrovia, which is owned by A. E. Cronewett. It is a large, three-story structure with commodious rooms. The exterior will be plastered over metal lath, and the present porch will be converted into an arcade, and an addition containing about thirty rooms will be built. New roofs of mission clay tile will be put on the building and porch. The remodeled building will be Spanish renaissance in design. The interior of the hotel will also be improved. The remodeled building will be used as a sanitarium.

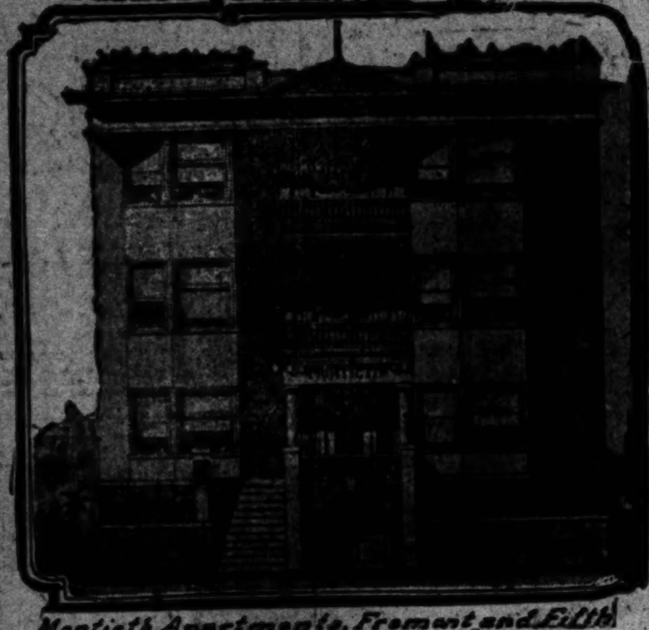
The same architects have prepared plans for gardens at the residence of H. T. Howard, New Hampshire and Fourth streets. The grounds are 96x420 feet. There will be a formal garden of the Italian type with red gravel walks surrounded by a wall of classic design of cast cement and containing on one side a grotto with fountain and seats. In striking contrast adjoining will be a Japanese garden surrounded by a brick wall. A pergola of classic design with cast cement columns will separate the Japanese garden from the rose garden and tennis court. Between the formal garden and the house will be a cemented pool and a peristyle with classic cement columns.

Frank Heron has had revised plans drawn for a two-story Class C store and apartment building to be constructed at Twenty-seventh street and Vermont avenue. It will contain eight store rooms and twelve two-room apartments. Bids for its erection have been taken.

TWO ATTRACTIVE NEW APARTMENTS.



Webb Apartments, Scarff and Twenty-third.



Montieth Apartments, Fremont and Fifth

Buildings Planned by Robert H. Walker.

PLANS APARTMENTS.

Architectural Designer Has Drawings for Scarff Street and Fremont Avenue Structures.

Robert H. Walker has drawn plans for two modern apartment houses, which will be ready for occupation early next year. One of these, a structure for Mrs. Lillie T. Webb on Scarff street, between Twenty-third and Adams, is now under way, while the other, which is to be erected by Mrs. L. Montoth, on Fremont, near Fifth, will be started soon.

Each building will have a reinforced concrete basement, which will contain an amusement room in addition to the heating plant and store rooms. The equipment will consist of steam heating, hot water and vacuum cleaning systems. The lobbies will have brick mantels, window seats and book cases, and the ceilings will be beamed. The panel work will be seven feet high.

The offices of each structure will be fitted up with annunciators, telephones, letter boxes and cabinets. The living rooms of the buildings will be divided into two and three-room apartments. Built-in furniture will be a feature.

McCeeson, one lot, $700; Harris and Dunseath, two lots, $1600.

Sales Total Large.

The Haugh-Bants Realty Company reports the following sales: Joseph Gelber to Nettie E. Ball, eight-room house at No. 322 Lincoln avenue, Pasadena, lot 50x100 feet, consideration named $7500. D. A. Van Vranken to a local investor, eight-room house at No. 1252 West Twenty-ninth street, lot 50x135 feet, to a twenty foot alley, and facing north on Menlo avenue, consideration $8500. C. M. Wing from Isedor Fetsch, property known as No. 1012 and 1014 West Second street, lot 60x120 feet. The property is improved with two stores, with living rooms in the rear, and is now leased for $50 per month. The consideration named is $10,000. C. M. Wing has purchased 320 acres of land, eight miles east of Magnolia, for $6560. W. C. and Kate A. Hooker have purchased six lots of the Obear & Gilbert Tract, on the north side of Tenth street, between Albany and Valencia, with a frontage of sixty-seven feet on Tenth by a depth of 175 feet. The buyers expect to erect a large apartment house on the site in the near future. The consideration named is $10,500. H. V. Hoffman has purchased an eight-room house at No. 223 East Thirty-second street, lot 50x125 feet, the consideration named being $4000.

The McCarthy Tracts.

The McCarthy Company reports the sale to N. E. Gardner of 40 feet on Main street, between Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth streets, in the Greater Los Angeles tract, for $1600. It is to be used as business property and will be improved at once. A new bungalow on Fifty-first street, between Halldale and Dalton avenues, in the Normandie Square tract, has been purchased by John C. Holtz for $3600.

West Riverside Estates.

West Riverside estate sales now total over $96,000. Sales for week are reported as follows: F. G. Sackett of Pasadena, through W. L. Jones, lot in Jurupa Heights; M. B. de Bor of Los Angeles, two lots in Jurupa Heights. These deals aggregated $31,000.

TEN YEARS.

CITIES' GROWTH IN POPULATION.

ESTABLISHED INDUSTRIES THE CHIEF INFLUENCE.

During the Past Decade Over Two Hundred Cities Have Increased Their Population Thirty-two Per Cent., Largely Because of Manufacturing Establishments.

In the past decade 204 cities, each now having a population greater than 25,000, increased their aggregate population from 19,515,000 to 25,822,000, or by more than 6,307,000, equal to 32.3 per cent. About 100 of these cities had a rate of increase greater than the average rate. The secret of this urban growth is not hard to discover. It stands forth clearly in letters which the Manufacturers Record has received from the mayors of nearly fifty of the cities, ranging in population from the leader, and one of the oldest, New York, with its 4,766,883 inhabitants, an increase of 38.7 per cent. in ten years, to one of the youngest, Oklahoma City, with 64,205, an increase of 539.7 per cent. The cities whose authorities have kindly met our request for a brief explanation, from their standpoint, of the growth of their respective communities, lie in twenty-four States, Alabama, California, Connecticut, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia, containing some of the larger as well as some of the smaller of the cities under consideration, and widely enough scattered and sufficiently influenced by varying conditions in American life to give a fair reflection of urban growth, which now constitutes probably 36 per cent. of the total population of the country.

Two-thirds of the replies point straight to what is the dominating element in this growth, the establishment of manufacturing industries or the expansion of those which have been in operation for a number of years. In a number of instances a special industry is given the main credit. Akron, O., the center of the cereal food trade of the country, estimates that 70 per cent. of automobile tires made in the United States come from its factories, while Detroit, Mich., counts 40 or 50 per cent. of all the automobiles made in the country among its products. New Bedford, Mass., a fine example of the ability of the New Englander to turn defeat into victory, has its textile industry, dating back to the decline of whaling in the North Atlantic. Pipe and tube plants and shipbuilding, added to the advantages of a magnificent harbor, have made Lorain, O., what it is, and other particular industries mentioned are woolen goods at Passaic, N. J.; four silk-weaving establishments at West Hoboken, N. J.; machine shops and bridge works at Roanoke, Va.; the headquarters of a great railway system, the placing of extensive railway shops at Macon, Ga.; zinc-smelting plant and car factory at Danville, Ill.; electric machinery at Pittsfield, Mass.; the navy yard at Portsmouth, Va.; a rolling mill at Middletown, O.; cigars at Tampa, Fla., and diversified industries at Amsterdam, N. Y. including carpet and rug mills, knitting factories, brush and broom, pearl buttons and silk gloves, financed with few exception by local capital and reflected in the prosperity at New Britain, Conn., of workers representing nearly twenty-five nationalities, including Irish, German, Swede, Italian, Pole, Greek, Armenian, Persian, Lithuanian, Ruthenian and Hungarian. Contiguity to coal fields, as at Terra Haute, Ind., and to the soft coal region of Illinois, as at East St. Louis, are contributory to industrial life, and the nearness of Chattanooga, Tenn., to great coal and iron deposits enables that city to turn out 616 different manufactured articles, with the promise of greater development with the completion of two hydro-electric plants with an aggregate of 100,000 horse-power. Tulsa, Okla., is not in the 25,000 class, but it is mentioned in this connection because of its notable increase in population of more than 1200 per cent., due principally to its location at the center of the great mid-Continent field of oil and natural gas. Another city, likewise not in the 25,000 class is Jackson, Miss., with a marked increase directly traceable to the impetus given by the completion in July, 1900, of a railroad connection between the Mississippi capital and the flourishing Gulfport, through the long-leaf pine region and fertile fields of the State.

Steam railroad facilities and interurban electric lines have contributed to city growth in Indiana and Illinois, especially, stockyards and meat-packing have given East St. Louis, Fort Worth and Oklahoma City tremendous impulse; improvement of harbors at Jacksonville, Fla., and Mobile, Ala., are other influences that have been cited. Des Moines, Iowa, Austin, Tex.; Lexington, Ky., and other cities are educational centers, while Everett, Mass., within three miles of the Statehouse at Boston; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Brookline, Mass.; Pasadena, Cal.; Detroit, Mich.; Middletown, Ohio; Jackson, Miss., and Lansing, Mich., are examples of the effects of assiduity on the part of municipal officials in furnishing sanitary surroundings and encouraging the best public utilities.

Between 1890 and 1900 the growth of Wichita, Kan., in population was only 3.6 per cent. In the past ten years the rate of increase was 112.6 per cent. That city has become the center for a great trade that has developed to the south and to the west of it, and it is the home of 1100 traveling men.

The growth of many of these cities within their limits has been accompanied by an increase in suburban population. In a number of cases the rate of increase is partly due to a taking in of outlying territories, Battle Creek, Mich.; Macon, Ga.; Portsmouth, Va.; Springfield, Mo.; Bay City, Mich., and Nashville, Tenn., being examples of this process. Again, to the activities of commercial bodies is attributed the attraction of homeseekers and investors in manufacturing, trade and commerce to cities and the travels of tourists in the South and West particularly have brought about permanent settlement in different localities.

It is one of the marvels of American life, this growth of cities. Fifty years ago, with manufacturing just about taking the premiership in national productive activities, there were but 141 cities in this country having each a population of 5000 or more. The number of such communities had reached 545 by 1900. In that year there were 161 cities having each 25,000 inhabitants or more. Now they number more than 200. In the transformation of the past half-century commerce has played an important part, the quadrupling of railroad facilities has been most efficient, the rise of educational centers has been a factor to be considered. But upon all of the various other agencies manufacturing has had a tremendous influence, and in the interplay of forces has been the great one in the tendency of urban growth to surpass the rate of increase of population in the rural regions. Some cities have depended upon a single factor, some upon two or three, and some, like New York, have felt the effects of the growth of the country behind them. New York, as Mayor Gaynor says in his letter, is a great seaboard city, and the metropolis of the country. It is growing from a variety of causes, just as London and Paris and Berlin are growing.

RIGHT AFTER IT.

HUNDREDS ASK FOR BIG BORE.

Business Men Boost Second-Street Tunnel.

City Council to Be Appealed to in Petition.

Whole Proposition Reduced to Careful Estimates.

With the names of approximately 1000 property owners and business men already affixed to a petition, the organization known as the Second Street Tunnel and Improvement Association expects soon to approach the City Council with quite the livest tunnel proposition that has been seen since the Third street bore was put through Bunker Hill. The city fathers will be confronted, it is declared by the tunnel boosters, with an array of figures and facts that is most convincing.

The petition is short and to the point, reading as follows: "Recognizing the necessity of greater and more direct means of communication between the business center and the northwest section of the city, and that the present Third street tunnel between Hill and Hope streets is inadequate as an outlet for traffic of all kinds to and from the Cahuenga and San Fernando valleys and the business section of the city of Los Angeles, we, the undersigned, owning the property set opposite our names, most respectfully petition your honorable body to have plans constructed and estimates made preparatory to the building of a tunnel on Second street from Hill to Figueroa at a point between First and Second streets."

The friends of the movement declare that sooner than see no tunnel at all bored north of Third street they would swing to a project for First or Court streets; the present lack of communication, they say, is no longer tolerable. In their advocacy of Second street at the rational place for the next bore, however, they advance a great many arguments other than that of the mere support of a host of property owners affected.

Second street, they say, is far to be preferred to First, because of the fact that the west end of the proposed tunnel would open onto a perfectly level grade at Figueroa. Second street, it is declared, would serve the districts both north and south of it, and would meet the requirements of most of the present advocates of a First street tunnel. A great deal of Second street is already paved, it is argued, this paving already connecting with Sunset boulevard by way of Boylston street and with Lake Shore avenue. Second street between Hill and Main is already an assured leading business artery, with three of the finest business blocks in the city already under way or practically completed; it should have an outlet westward.

The principal argument advanced, however, is the one of the easy grade of Second street beyond the west end of the proposed tunnel, and the convenience of that street to the main arteries of travel to the northwest. The car lines which now go clear to Sixth street to get access to the business part of the city they hold should all be headed through a Second street tunnel, because they could make this short cut without encountering any grade of consequence. The advantages to the Glendale and Edendale service, not to mention other city lines in operation or projected, it is pointed out, would be incalculable.

The body which is boosting for the Second street tunnel was organized about six months ago, the officers being William Riley, president; John N. Metcalf, vice-president and manager; J. H. Blanchard, second vice-president, and Mrs. N. D. Gleason, secretary and treasurer. Associated with these officers as active boosters are a host of property owners in the section between First and Third streets and Hill and Hope.

"We have given the entire subject the most careful consideration," said Mr. Metcalf yesterday. "We are asking the Council to note the significance in the community of the men who are signing our petition and to give the project the most serious attention. We are not attempting to dictate just where the mouths of the tunnel shall be, or any other detail. It is the tunnel itself that we want and that the city needs. The assured future of the San Fernando valley alone warrants immediate action. If the city does not care to bore directly under the street, we have canvassed the situation thoroughly enough to be able to state that desirable outlets on both Hill and Figueroa streets will be available from private sources. The property owners are all alive to the importance of the project, an dit cannot fail for want of splendid outlet facilities.

"We believe that if the city would shoulder as much as one-third of the financial burden, the rest could be easily raised. Whether by donation or by the creation of an assessment district would, I do not think, make much difference to most of the owners. The railroad would undoubtedly contribute. The rise of values is so sure that the financing of the project appears to be the smallest part of it when the advantages to be derived are considered.

"We want a tunnel that will be a credit to the city, a clean, light and airy thoroughfare without any of the disagreeable features of the bores already constructed. There are miles of fine tunnels under the seven hills of Rome and in portions of Paris. The Second street tunnel need not cost over $350,000, according to reliable estimates at hand. A feaure that ought to be insisted upon is the installation of elevator service down from Grand avenue to the tunnel level. This shaft would serve both for ventilation and the elevator would undoubtedly bring in a good revenue. The bore should be in two sections divided by a wall, one side for the street cars and the other for traffic.

Following are some of the leading property owners who have signed the petition, together with some of the business men in the district which would be most affected: Merchants' Building Co., Bryson Estate Co., Broadway Investment Co., Thos. Higgins, Charles A. Frost, G. A. Olshausen, Estate of Thomas D. Stimson, Homer Laughlin, Union League Building Corporation, Estate of Herman W. Hellman, William Garland, Vance-Anderson Co., J. D. NEW RESIDENCE PROJECTS.

Twenty-six Bungalows Planned for West Fifty-sixth Street Sites.

Among the new residence projects in the city may be mentioned the following: Twenty-six lots on Fifty-sixth street have been purchased by Tifal Bros., of Monrovia, who will immediately begin improving the sites with five-room bungalows. Plans are being completed by Mathews & Mathews. Hubbard & Gardner have let the contract for the construction of two six-room bungalows on Pine avenue between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, Long Beach.

Frank M. Tyler is drawing plans for a nine-room house to be built at Tenth street and St. Andrew's Place for A. L. Jurde. The dwelling will be of rustic exterior. The same architect is preparing designs for a ten-room residence to be erected in Berkeley Square by Francis E. Bacon. The first story will be of granite veneer over a cement foundation and the second of cement over metal lath. The interior will be handsomely finished in mahogany and oak.

Lester S. Moore has plans for a seven-room house to be built on East Bailey street, Whittier, for W. A. Corrao. I. M. Zeigler will soon begin the construction of a ten-room house on Manhattan Place near Linden avenue. Carl Salbach is having plans drawn by Scott Quintin for an eight-room house which will be built at Montecito Park.

BEACH IS TRANSFORMED.

New Santa Monica Bay Subdivision Presents a Scene of Great Activity.

SANTA MONICA, Nov. 19.—Few people are aware of the extensive character of the improvements under way south of Santa Monica Bay's municipal pier and just north of Fremont avenue for the Carl F. Schader Seaside Terrace Company. Since July, workmen with from 25 to 40 mules have been engaged in grading the 1000 feet of beach frontage in the property. During the same time the Santa Monica Water Company has installed a complete water system and the Southern California Edison Company, gas and electric systems.

All the sidewalks and auto ways are being paved with concrete and a 20-foot cement walk lined with electric chandeliers is one of the attractive features planned. The owners are laying out two private courts to be known as "Arcadia Terrace" and "Pacific Terrace." These will have entrance pillars on the Ocean avenue side with a double staircase leading down to the ocean itself and crossing Appian Way.

Extending from Appian Way are two other 40-foot concrete paved streets known as Marine Terrace and Seaside Terrace, both ending on the ocean front promenade. The sand frontage for 666 feet west of this promenade is to be deeded to the city of Santa Monica to be maintained as a park.

TO PRIVATE LIFE

"SIS HOPKINS" TO LIVE IN PALACE.

FAMOUS ACTRESS WILL QUIT STAGE FOR SOUTHLAND.

Large Fireproof Mansion Near Inglewood to House Former Rose Melville, Her Art Collections and Her French Car—Group of Costly Houses Will Crown Hill.

As reported exclusively in The Times last summer, Mrs. Frank Minzey, known to the world of theater-goers as "Sis Hopkins," and reputed to be the world's wealthiest actress, will build a beautiful home a mile north of Inglewood, upon the completion of which she will retire to private life. A perspective of the house, plans for which are being prepared by Ernest McConnell, head of the architectural department of the Los Angeles Investment Company, appears on this page of the real estate section.

The house will contain 19 rooms, exclusive of those in the basement and in design will be of a modified Old English type. It will be built of concrete, tapestry brick and tile and will cost approximately $30,000. The dwelling will contain many features suggested to the builder by her extended observations in this and foreign countries, and Mrs. Minzey will install in it a magnificent collection of art treasures gathered in all parts of the world.

Features of the architectural treatment will be a two-story hall magnificently finished in Honduras mahogany and leather, an observation tower on the third story, overlooking all the coast towns and the city and a solarium finished in quartered sycamore. The dining room will be paneled in carved Peruvian mahogany. The entrance hall will be in Japanese teak wood.

In the basement will be a completely equipped garage. Here will be kept Mrs. Minzey's famous French car, which is said to be one of the most expensive automobiles ever built, the engines alone being said to have cost over $8000.

The site of the house was sold to Mrs. Minzey in August by Chas. A. Elder, president of the Los Angeles Investment Company, which owns the 1700-acre tract of which it is a part. The lot is an acre in extent and stands at the summit of a hill which overlooks the entire country around, the view taking in the ocean and the city of Los Angeles. The purchase price is reported to have been $10,000. About the same will be expended in landscaping.

Mrs. Minzey's residence will be one of a number of costly homes to be erected on the hill whose summit it will crown. Chas. A. Elder will build a home to cost at least $20,000 on the same commanding elevation and W. D. Deeble and G. M. Derby, secretary and treasurer, respectively, of the company of which Mr. Elder is the head, will each erect similar residences. Many millions will be expended in the tract as a whole, it being the plan of the owners to eventually improve the entire area with hundreds of attractive homes.

PARK COMFORT STATION.

Bids are being taken by the Board of Public Works for the construction of the proposed public comfort station in Central Park. The station will be underground, the main portion being 62x24 feet in size. The structure will be of reinforced concrete with tile surface. There will be both pay and free toilets for men and women. The A tool house will also be built underground.

CLINCHED.

NOVEMBER PERMIT RECORD NO LONGER IN ANY DOUBT.

THE predictions for an unusually lively month in building are being fulfilled, and there no longer appears to be any doubt that November, 1910, will smash the permit record for the corresponding period of every other year. As stated in last Sunday's Times, the valuation total for the month bids fair to reach even the $2,000,000 mark. Permits were issued during the week for two large downtown buildings, the Los Angeles Athletic Club and the Broadway Investment Company block.

The former structure, the first published cut of which appeared exclusively in The Times of last Monday, will be started as soon as the steel can be placed on the site at the northeast corner of Seventh and Olive streets. The block will be eleven stories in height and will cost $650,000. It was planned by Parkinson & Bergstrom. The Broadway Investment building at Second and Broadway will be rushed to completion by day work as soon as material is at hand. The structure will be ten stories and of reinforced concrete construction. Paul C. Pape is the architect, and George Harding the engineer. A perspective drawn by the architect recently appeared exclusively in The Times.

A three-story and basement concrete building will be erected at Nos. 621 to 623 South Spring street by William Garland. The two upper stories will be devoted to rooming-house purposes and the ground floor to store rooms. One of these stores has been leased to the Whalen News Agency for seven years through McConnell & Irvine. The improvement will represent a cost of $50,000.

Dwight H. Hart, who recently bought from Jacob Frankenfield 37 feet on the east side of Hill street just north of Seventh, as reported in The Times, will probably erect a two-story brick store building on the site. Architects Morgan & Wells are preparing plans. It is the intention of Mr. Hart to eventually build a large hotel covering this lot and the adjoining lot at the corner of Seventh and Hill, the latter of which sites he has owned for some time.

Contracts have been let for the construction of a three-story brick store building for J. C. Seely and S. Dodge at Third and Figueroa, and for a flat building to be erected by S. M. Kent at No. 712 West Thirty-sixth street. Chas. Strock is having tentative plans drawn by Eisen & Son for a three-story apartment house to be erected on West Tenth near Valencia.

A contract has been let for the construction of three one-story frame structures, each 14x140 feet in size, which are to be part of a Japanese village at Luna Park. Y. Horiuchi is the owner. A two-story frame flat building will be built by F. H. Redpath at No. 4226 South Grand avenue.

The Sperry Flour Company will build a frame grain elevator at its plant at No. 1615 East Seventh street. Plans are by J. P. Soffel. A two-story brick building will be erected by the Pacific Burial Case Company at No. 715 Johnston street. It will be used for office and salesroom purposes.

The construction of the six-story reinforced concrete theater building to be built by John D. Spreckels at San Diego will be started at once, according to advices from Harrison Albright, of this city, the architect. The structure, a perspective of which appeared exclusively in The Times of last Wednesday, will be one of the finest playhouses in the entire West. L. H. Behymer of Los Angeles is one of the lessees.

CAWSTON BUYS APARTMENTS.

Owner of Big Ostrich Farm Acquires Income Property on South Hope Street.

By the terms of a deal just consummated through the Herbert J. Batcher, Jr., Company, the apartment house at No. 452 South Hope street, a part of the H. W. Hellyar estate and valued at in the neighborhood of $65,000, has passed into the possession of Edwin Cawston, of London, England.

Mr. Cawston is on a visit to this country, looking after the interests of his Ostrich Farm at South Pasadena. The purchase was made as an investment.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

O. W. Morgan, Jr., of the architectural firm of Morgan, Walls & Morgan, has gone East for the purpose of studying some of the latest building types in that section. Mr. Morgan's date of departure was two weeks ago, and he will not return before December 1. The latest examples of business and office block construction in New York, Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and St. Louis will be carefully inspected, and it is likely that many ideas gleaned in his visit East will be incorporated into some of the large structures in the business section of Los Angeles for which Morgan, Walls & Morgan have plans.

W. M. Lane of the office of Bryan & Bradford, is back at his desk after a week's illness at his home at No. 1444 West Twenty-eighth street. Mr. Lane has been suffering for the past two weeks from an abscess in his left ear and the sickness was the result of indisposition resulting from the keen suffering experienced.

The Patton & Longley Company has taken the exclusive selling agency of 320 acres of land owned by Otis Lockhart on the Inglewood-Redondo car line. The tract will be sold in acre lots.

READY FOR CONTRACTORS.

Plans Complete for Public and Semi-Public Structures in Southland Communities.

Plans have been drawn by W. C. Harris for a frame church edifice of the bungalow type of construction which will be erected by the Wilshire Boulevard Christian congregation at Wilshire and Normandie. The structure will represent a cost of about $15,000.

Parkinson & Bergstrom are taking bids for the attractive group of buildings which will be erected for the Los Angeles Orphans' Home Society on Vine street, Colegrove. There will be a central administration building and three cottages.

Plans for the new Monrovia Polytechnic High School group have been practically completed by Allison & Allison.

WILSHIRE ACTIVITIES.

McConnell & Irvine report sales at the close in Wilshire district aggregating $22,000, as follows: C. T. Crowell to Glenn M. Smith, 50 feet on the west side of Berendo street between Eighth and Ninth, $2500; the same owner to a local investor, four lots 50x150 feet each on Berendo north of Ninth, $10,000; same owner to E. W. Smith, northwest corner Berendo and Ninth, 100x150 feet, $8000; J. M. Irvine to Edwin W. Smith, southwest corner Vermont and Ninth streets, 52x145 feet, $3700. Mr. Smith intends to improve the last-named property with a modern store building. This firm reports a decidedly increased demand for property in this section since the operation of the West Ninth street car line over its new extension through the district.

Moving Pictures in Daylight.

Must moving picture shows be given in a dark auditorium, with all the lack of social spirit and the tendency to careless conduct which a dark auditorium leads to?

On the contrary, asserts the Survey, moving picture shows can be and many are being given in broad daylight without any loss of effect. They are, moreover, being given in auditoriums where individuals can be recognized from end to end of the hall and where programmes can be read without strain to the eyes.

The methods are altogether simple: The screen on which the moving picture is thrown must be sheltered from the direct rays of light, and the eyes of the audience must be similarly sheltered. Where picture shows are given in broad daylight it is the custom to construct a sort of hood over the screen, into which the daylight only penetrates by reflected rays, and the picture, in contrast with the extreme brightness outside, appears in all its clearness of outline and depth of shadow. Where it is desired to light the interior of an auditorium during a picture performance, the method is equally simple: No intense light must be seen, but the auditorium must be illuminated by a diffuse light thrown from lamps whose rays do not travel direct to the picture screen or to the eyes of the audience. In practice, the method is to shelter the electric lights by means of a ledge either around the wall or into the ceiling, so that the rays of the lamps are thrown along the height of the wall or across the ceiling and are merely reflected in a diffused way into the body of the auditorium.

LAND PROBLEMS.

WHY FARMERS GO TO CANADA.

Expert Spillman Gives Views on the Question.

Banker Buys Cheap Farms and Makes They Pay.

Getting Good Living Out of One Hundred Acres.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Can a mechanic, a clerk, or a school teacher leave his city or village ad earn a living on a farm?

Where should a poor man buy land, and what must he do to make a sterile field produce a good crop?

What are the facts concerning the exodus of American agriculturists to the Canadian Northwest?

Is it true that farmers are mortgaging their land to buy out their neighbors, and are thus threatening the country with a financial panic?

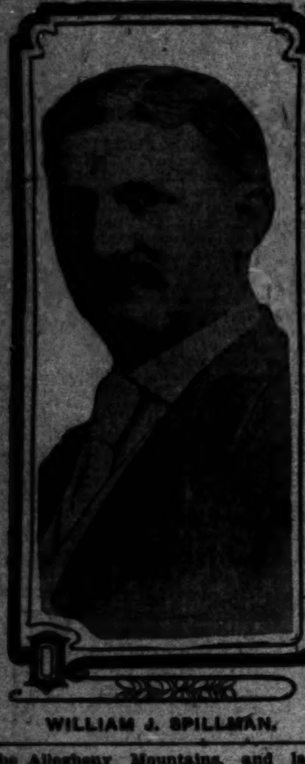
Will the land-holding class disappear in this country, and will all the farms ultimately be owned by monopolistic corporations and worked by hired men? men?

Why is milk dear in price, and is there any profit in the business of raising chickens?

Are farmers' wives getting any relife from the drudgery and monotony of their daily lives?

With such questions and others in mind, I went to see William Jasper Spillman, the government's chief expert in farm management—born in the country, educated at a university, and a landowner himself—a compact, dark-haired, and steaming man of forty-seven, who knows more about the business side of agriculture than any one in the United States. Furthermore, he is a botanist and an author.

"For 300 years," he said, "the East has been producing a surplus of men." I had asked Mr. Spillman for the truth about Manitoba, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. "And those men," he continued, "have been moving westward ever since. First, leaving the fringes of civilization along the Coast, they settled in New York and Pennsylvania. Then came the movement across the Allegheny Mountains, and later into the country beyond the Mississippi River.



WILLIAM J. SPILLMAN.

"There was not only a surplus of men in the East, which was a good cause for emigrating, but there were free lands in the West and opportunities for every American to obtain a home and a farm of his own. Going West, therefore, become a national habit of mind. Today there are no more free lands, and farms that were prairies thirty years ago and could be had for the asking are worth from $100 to $200 an acre.

"But there are free lands across the border in Canada and agricultural explorers and adventurers—pioneers, in a word—are following the practice of their fathers. 'Westward ho!' wrote John Webster and Thomas Dekker in 1607, an exhortation that Horace Greeley changed and localised into 'Go West, young man!' more than two centuries later.

NOT POOR MEN.

"However, the procession across the northern frontier is not composed entirely of poor men seeking homes and fortunes. Farmers in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa are selling their high-priced lands and going to Canada and putting their money into wild prairies as a promising speculation. Annually, for the past six years 54,000 persons, mostly men, have moved from the United States into the Canadian Northwest, and the exodus continues. Meanwhile, others are being influenced to move by easy conditions.

"A farmer, for instance, can go to Manitoba or any other province and take up a homestead for himself and each of his neighbors. Canadian agents have offices in the principal streets of St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago, Minneapolis, and Denver, on the windows of which are notices in large letters that lands may be obtained by 'proxy.' Thus a dozen farmers in a community of this country can send one of their number to Alberta and he is there permitted legally to enter land for the whole party.

Some of the Americans who went to Canada are coming back, it is true, but the movement is too small to be important. The men who go and stay are of American blood. Practically all of them have money. They make the best kind of citizens, and a great many of them, declaring they like Canada because the laws are enforced and not evaded, renounce the Stars and Stripes and take the oath of allegiance to the King of Great Britain.

"The drawbacks of the Canadian Northwest are serious and pertain to the climate. There are but three seasons in that country—July, August, and winter. Crops, therefore, have limitations. Wheat, barley, and oats can be grown, but corn, of course, is out of the question. Last year and the year before crops were a failure in some sections, the frost coming before harvest, which occurs during the month of September."

"Is it true," I asked, "that the farmers of the West are mortgaging their land so as to purchase more land at the present level of high prices?"

"It is not true generally," Mr. Spillman answered, "though it is so represented by some of the Wall street writers. In spots there is more or less speculation in land, but that has been going on for many years, sporadically. Back in 1891 there was a land craze among the wheat farmers in the new State of Washington. Men mortgaged all they had and bought out their neighbors, often paying 18 per cent. for money. The fall rains of 1892 came early in September and the wheat crop was not cut. In 1893—a financial panic was then on in the country—wheat dropped in price to 18 cents a bushel. The following year it was 25 cents. Nothing had been grown but wheat. The farmers lived out of the stores, buying everything they ate but vegetables, even their butter and meat, in many cases. At the end of three years, in debt to merchants and back in their interest, the land owners were ruined and became tenants or hired men.

"No such conditions now menace any large part of the country. Here and there farmers are increasing their acreage, but they are keeping within the bounds of prudent investments. Lands in the Central West are selling at from $100 to $200 an acre. Experienced agriculturists understand that wheat and corn and the feeding of cattle are unprofitable on lands selling at such prices. Undoubtedly there is some speculation going on among farmers, but it is so limited as to be without significance."

A DANGER.

"Is there any danger of centralization in the ownership of farm lands?"

"I think so," Mr. Spillman replied. "The new census will show that the number of farm tenants has increased 50 per cent. in ten years. The land conditions of Europe will prevail here, I believe, in the end—they do exist in certain regions. An English family, for at least a generation, has owned 150,000 acres of land in Illinois. It is managed by agents, on plans, down to the planting of crops, sent from England. Many years ago a merchant on the famous Eastern Shore of Maryland, began buying farms and renting them to tenants. When he died, not very long since, he left fifty-six farms, averaging 260 acres each, to his heirs. The land is controlled by an attorney, and at a valuation of $60 an acre, is paying 5 per cent. a year to the owners. David Rankin of Missouri, had 27,000 acres, which he cultivated himself, at a net profit, I think, of about $200,000 annually. However, he was an exceptionally able man.

"Capitalists in cities and large towns," Mr. Spillman went on to say, "are now turning to land as offering investments of the solidest kind. A man in Chicago bought 1000 acres recently, paying 'only' $175 an acre, he told me, and not caring, he explained, whether it paid him anything in hand or not. 'It will increase in value at the rate of 5 per cent. per year,' he said, 'and that is all I want.'

"And so it will. Land all through the Middle West is growing in selling price from year to year, and in Iowa it has doubled in value during the past decade. The forces of investment are now in operation without doubt, and tend gradually, as I have shown, toward centralizing the ownership of American farms. Moreover, the farmer is helping the movement along. Living in any of the States between Pennsylvania and Colorado, he has prospered and sent his children to the university, and they, educated beyond the farm, as he and they think, have left home to be physicians, lawyers, preachers, schoolteachers, or business men, or the wives of the same. Staying on his land until he is too old for active management, the farmer rents it and moves to town. A tenant class, therefore, is coming into existence more rapidly than ever before, and will be greatly increased when capitalists discover they can buy land, hire competent superintendents, and make dividends on the capital employed. Only the competent superintendents are now lacking. I expect to see corporations in control of immense areas of agricultural lands and the business methods of manufactories and railroads applied to the raising of crops."

FERTILIZING.

"Can the impoverished farms of the East be made fertile without the expenditure of large amounts of money?"

"No. Money is necessary; that is, cash or time and toil, both of which are money in another form. Worn out lands can be rebuilt, but the process requires two or three years. When a man is willing to work and wait, having capital meanwhile on which to live, he can surely turn a waste of weeds and brush into a comfortable home. I advised a woman in Maryland the other day to plant her land this fall in rye, to plow the rye under next spring and plant cowpeas, and to plow the cowpeas under next fall, and then to plant timothy and clover for a paying crop. The advice is good for New England and New York, only the cowpeas can be omitted, as there is more humus, or decayed vegetable matter, in the soils of the North, where the climate is cold, than in the South."

"Who is the greatest farmer you have even known?"

"You have asked an unanswerable question. Farmers are often specialists. Still, I have two men in mind when I think or talk of successful agriculturists. One of them is William Dempster Hoard, an editor and formerly the Governor of Wisconsin. He owns and runs a dairy farm of 125 acres, perhaps, near the town of Fort Atkinson. The moment I saw his fields, fences and cows I knew I had come upon the work of an agricultural genius. Not a penny is wasted on the Hoard farm. It is stocked with Guernsey cattle and pays a good interest on the money used. The second farmer whom I like to think about is T. E. Martin. He lives on seventy acres, near Rochester, N. Y., and raises potatoes, clover, and wheat. His lawn is full of roses and flowers, and his vegetable garden is a work of art. In his home are books and newspapers and all the comforts of a city house. Mr. Martin, on a small farm, has made money and he has lived systematically, intelligently, and cheerfully. He, too, is an agricultural genius. President W. C. Brown, of the New York Central Railway, heard of him, and now he is establishing model farms along the railroad that other farmers may see how to work and live to the best advantage."

CAN LEARN.

"Would it be possible for a man from the city who doesn't know anything about farming to make a living in the country?"

"Certainly not, but with capital, industry, intelligence, preseverance and brains he can learn the business and succeed finally. A poor and an inexperienced man would almost starve to death at the plow, as the farmer would starve if he would attempt to be a tailor or a shoe-maker. Only the best of farmers are making money as it is. I venture to say that most of them would earn more, from year to year, if they were to hire out for wages as agricultural laborers."

"If you meant to be a farmer, where would you buy land, and what crops would you raise?" I asked.

"Evidently you want all the real estate agents in the country on my back," Mr. Spillman replied. "I can be no more definite than to say that there are regions where crops have not been wisely raised—there has been too much cotton, tobacco or wheat. The land in such localities is run down and cheap. It can be restored with money, labor and pluck. A banker in South Carolina has been buying wornout farms for forty years. It is a side issue with him. I know of a stretch of sand that he purchased for $3 an acre. At the end of the fifth year he picked two and a quarter bales of cotton to the acre—the average yield in the country is two-fifths of a bale to the acre. Besides, he harvested eighty-five bushels of corn and eighty bushels of oats to the acre."

"Are dairymen making money?"

"A majority of them are losing money. Fancy dairymen, but there are only a few of them, are doing very well. Thousands of farmers have quit the cow business and many thousands more will do so if conditions don't mend. Mill feed has gone from $19 to $32 a ton, and hay from $6 or $8 to $20 a ton. Labor, also, has increased in price. The cities of the East are rapidly approaching a milk famine. Milk dealers in Boston, New York and Philadelphia are much alarmed. Several of them have asked that lecturers be sent through the country to work up an interest in dairying. But lecturing or literature cannot make two plus two equal five.

"When consumers were paying 6 cents a quart for milk the farmers received 3 cents a quart from the dealers or distributors. Now, with the retail price of milk at 9 or 10 cents, the farmers receive only 2½ cents a quart. There are food trusts or combinations in most cities. Prices have been going up and up, but the producers get only a small fraction of the advance, and in some cases, as with milk, none of the advance at all. Consumers will not pay more than 10 cents for milk. If the price goes beyond that figure the consumer will do without that particular item of diet. The dealer who wants to remain in the business, therefore, must cut down his own profit and give it to the farmer. No lecturing possible can change the known state of facts, such facts, I may say, as we discovered in New England, where in four townships and on fifty-seven farms the revenues of each dairyman, on an average, are $128 less than 5 per cent. interest on the capital invested, allowing nothing whatever for his labor. In short, he is working for nothing and getting a low rate of interest on his money."

"What do you know about chickens as a luring, snug, and profitable business for infirm and respectable men and women who find it necessary to do a little of something for a living?" I asked.

"More money can be lost with chickens, relatively, than with sheep or pigs. A poultry expert tells me that he hasn't found a profitable chicken farm in the United States. However, I happen to know of one. Every farmer raises chickens, and so the competition is as wide as the country, but no farmer can tell what his chickens cost. They scratch around in the summer, and in the winter the farmer feeds them grain, but keeps no account—he just takes the grain from the crib or bin and throws it on the ground. I dare say the farmer would learn, if he figured it out, that his outlay on poultry exceeds his receipts."

"What effect have automobiles had on the horse industry?"

"Prices are about the same, but the supply of horses has decreased until there is a shortage in the country. Farmers are not raising as many colts as formerly. Some breeders of blooded stock have gone out of business and a number of horse doctors in New York have become chauffeurs."

THE HELP PROBLEM.

"The farmer, too," I said, "has a labor problem that is giving him considerable bother."

"Tens of thousands of farmers have sold their land or rented it because of the scarcity of reliable and capable agricultural workers. Farm laborers can do better in the country than elsewhere, but the pull of the age is toward the cities. All of the literature for our schools is favorable to urban life and unfavorable by implication to the farm as a home and work place. Boys studying geography in our rural schools are taught commerce and shipping. Nothing in their readers glorifies farming or gives it the proper meaning and value. It always has been so. I was born in the southwestern part of Missouri. At six years of age I wanted to be a clerk in a store and wear good clothes. When I was seven and a railway had come through it was my ambition to be a locomotive engineer. And all the time my mother was calling me her 'little school teacher.'

"The farmers themselves almost invariably say they hope their children will be something 'more than we have been.' They are men of no wisdom and are hurting their boys and girls. We have got to give agriculture its proper place in our literature and text-books if we are to save the most important and honorable occupation of mankind and to supply the people of the United States with food. Mr. Roosevelt, an outside man, saw conditions clearly and sanely, and by his appointment of a commission to investigate country life has done more to dignify farming than have all our books and writers on economics subjects; and our novelists, too, I might add."

BRITISH NATIONAL DEBT.

Large Part of the Obligations Are Never Expected to Be Paid Off.

British "consols" were first named in 1751, when nine different government loans were consolidated into a single loan amounting to £9,137,821, and bearing 3 per cent. interest. The Government increases the amount of consols from time to time when large amounts of money are required to be borrowed. In 1781 the total amount of consols outstanding was £71,000,000. At later dates the outstanding amounts were: £101,000,000 in 1783; £273,000,000 in 1801; £334,000,000 in 1811, and £400,000,000 in 1858. At the present time they amount to £606,162,000.

The British national debt does not only consist of consols. The total floating debt of the Government at the present time amounts to more than £755,000,000. About £52,000,000 of this amount are liabilities of a current nature. The true public debt consists of the funded debt, amounting to over £600,000,000; terminable annuities amounting to £38,000,000, and about £42,000,000 of unfunded debt. The funded debt or consols, is one that the Government is not under obligations to pay off at any specified time. Terminable annuities form a species of sinking fund used in reducing the national debt. The unfunded debt consists of treasury notes and other short term paper issued by the Government for temporary purposes.—[Dr. A. Selwyn-Brown.

Return at Freight Rate.

Capt. Kendall, the capturer of Crippen, was talking in the smoking room of the Montrose about the horrors of seasickness.

"Some men bear it well, though," he said. "I took a Liverpudlian to Canada last month, and the poor fellow did have a time! Sick from the first day to the last!

"But he bore it well, and when we reached Father Point he said to me:

" 'Captain, I think I'll go straight back with you.'

" 'Why,' said I, 'I thought you were going to make an extensive tour?'

" 'No, I think I'll go back now,' he said, gulping as a nasty swell lifted our bow. 'I see by your rate card that you carry "returned empties" at half fare.' "—[Washington Star.

The First Club Sandwich.

A lawyer in New York claims to have discovered the first club sandwich, which is now the popular tasty of every tea room. He found it down in New Mexico ten years ago. He stopped at a small town and not being on the train with a dining car went into a little eating place and ordered a dozen sandwiches, half of which were to be ham and half tongue. After he had boarded the train and opened the package, he found the order carried out to the letter. Every sandwich had a filling of one slice of ham and one slice of tongue. But the inventor of those sandwiches was not so far out of the way.—[New York Sun.

POLICE DOGS OF FRANCE.

They Develop a Wonderful Intelligence and Keep Masters From Many Dangers.

All last winter, I heard from time to time, of the dogs employed by the French police; their value in pursuing and tracking criminals, their tenacity in holding one, and their indifference to the noise of firearms, writes Elizabeth French in the Springfield Sunday Republican. Only the other day the Paris papers had paragraphs headed, "The good dog, Captain," and telling a tale of his exploits about 2 o'clock that morning. Two policemen, named Pinson and Guermann, had been making their rounds, when they heard shots, and hurried toward the spot, but saw only a group of five or six people disappearing in the distance. About half an hour afterward the silence was again broken by shots, this time quite near the policemen, and in a neighboring street.

Suddenly six young fellows came around a corner, saw the officers, turned squarely, and went off with their hands in their pockets, quietly and like peaceful citizens. The policemen followed, and the six scamps for a while endured their company, but at last determined to get rid of them. At the same instant they all opened fire on Guermann and Pinson, who loosed their dog, Captain. He gave a spring, and in three bounds fell on one of the band and got his teeth fixed "in a good place." The police took the fellow, and Captain ran after another fugitive, clutched him, too, and held on until the second rascal was captured. Both were holding revolvers and both were taken to the police station, Captain following, wagging his tail and licking his jaws. One paper headed its article, "A Police Dog Arrests Two Criminals."

We were at Rouen when there was an exhibition of watch dogs and police dogs, and were much interested in what we saw. It was advertised as an international competition and was held in the velodrome. This is a kind of bicycle track, surrounding a large oval, irregular in surface and mostly grass, but at one side there is a small, slimy pool, and toward one end a marshy spot. In a corner was a small cabin, with one window, and in the middle of the field were bars eight or ten feet high, with several hurdles beyond. One noted dog was there, a shepherd dog named Pipeau, four years old, the champion of France for three years, not entered in the competition, but shown for the pleasure of the public. He was not a large dog, but very strong, with wiry, curling gray hair. The other dogs were Nelly, Sultan (a Belgian shepherd dog), Max (who gained the first prize at Paris), and Pompon, the world's champion in jumping, a winner of prizes in other contests. The programme was divided into three parts. The first included following with leash and without; lying down at command, or walking in the direction pointed out; refusing to touch food thrown to the dog in the presence or absence of his master, and finding objects hidden at a distance or concealed in the earth. The first prize for this part was a gold medal.

The second part of the programme included high and long jumps. The third part demanded guarding anything given, even when the master walked away; defending the master from sudden attack without being asked to, and ceasing on command; rushing at a man, but stopping at a call before reaching him; discovering a man, who had hidden himself, and barking to inform the master, chasing a man toward the cabin who shut himself into it; jumping through the window and holding on to the man when he rushed out, in spite of pistol shots; attacking prisoners who tried to escape. Medals of gold, silver and bronze were offered for this part. There fas a third part—short secenes acted for the amusement of the public—such as the drunken farmer saved by his faithful dog. The honest farmer returns from market with his pocket full of money, stops in a cafe, drinks too much and displays his money to the waiters, who station themselves on his route to waylay him. There was also an attack upon a diligence while on the road. It was to be stopped by criminals, who terrified the passengers and tried to rob them, but fortunately the latter were accompanied by brave police dogs. This programme was well carried out in the presence of a large assembly standing all around outside the fence which encircled the field, while those who paid more had seats near or upon the long stand. Each dog in turn was put though the series of tests, and the courage and intelligence shown by them won hearty applause from the crowd. If a dog accomplished the leap, additional bars were put into the frame, to see how high he would go; and there is no doubt that a garden fence, or even the high walls so common in France, would easily be scaled by these dogs in pursuit of a fugitive. The part of a criminal was taken by a man whose getup provoked laughter; he wore such stout trousers, such a tough jacket, such thick gloves; but he had need of all this protection from the dogs when they fixed their teeth and clung to him. He would shake them and run and whirl around until he lifted them bodily from the ground and the dog stood out horizontally beyond him, all four feet in the air; yet nothing loosened their grip.

Some feats seemed to me more remarkable than others, among them to see the food thrown to a dog and have it lie on the ground quite unnoticed until the master gave it to him. The eagerness with which the dog then snapped it up was the best evidence of how severe a test his previous abstention had been, and to see a dog directed against a man running away in the distance and recalled in midcourse by a shout from his master; to see their absolute indifference to noise of repeated shots and to powder smoke was also surprising.

Panama Hat Manufacture.

The manufacture of Panama hats in Honduras is chiefly confined to Santa Barbara, where about 15,000 are annually made, chiefly by women employees. The palm leaf, from which they are made, is called "junco." The most tender leaves are selected and exposed to sulphur smoke, moisture and the rays of the sun. The price is about 18 cents gold for two dozen leaves, the amount needed for one hat. It takes about two weeks to make an ordinary hat, and one month to make a fine one.

A round block, called "horma," is used as a form for making the crown. After this part is finished a table is used, provided with one or more holes, into which the crown is dropped and the rim woven on top of the table. These hats are sold at from $1.20 to $14, according to their quality. They are made during the wet season, as the straw breaks during the dry. Even in the wet season a damp cloth is constantly used to moisten the straw while weaving. When they are finished they are placed in a large box and again subjected to sulphur fumes, after which they are ready for the market.—[Consular Reports.

A Financial Thought.

John Purroy Mitchell, New York's recent acting Mayor, said the other day to a reporter, apropos of a certain abuse:

"The conduct of these people is ominous. It reminds me of the famous financier.

" 'George,' said the famous financier to his secretary, 'I've been thinking.'

" 'Yes, sir,' said the secretary, respectfully, 'what about sir?'

" 'Well, George,' said the financier, 'I can't help wondering where on earth the lambs get this inexhaustible stream of millions that we get from them.' "—[Kansas City Journal.

self with a spiral specific-gravity balance, and "got mad" because he could not get any platinum in the pannings that gave the sp. gr. of the rolled platinum.

Now, native platinum is frequently alloyed with other native metals, such as osmium, iridium, etc. In its native state platinum usually hangs around a specific gravity of 16, but when it goes through a purification, melted, and rolled, it becomes 22 in the scale of specific gravity.

Molybdenite and Monazite.

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 5.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Please name and describe the samples in this package. No. 1 comes from Mexico, just over the line from near San Diego boundary. I believe the sample to be graphite or molybdenite, and it comes in dike form. What is the matrix? How could it be separated from the gangue matter? No water is near the locality.

I am interested in some placer property located on the Illinois River in Southern Oregon, and sample No. 2 is "pannings" with the gold taken out. What do these pannings consist of?

Thanking you in advance for the favor of a reply in your columns.

Yours truly, H. D. S.

ANSWER. Sample No. 1 is granular molybdenite in a matrix of "bull quartz." The molybdenite is in forms too microscopic for hand-cobbing, and the gangue matter is too hard for machinery, water, or chemicals to separate at a profit. The values in molybdenite do, in fact, resemble graphite; but the distinction between the two minerals is quickly determined as follows: Pulverize the mineral, moisten it with concentrated sulphuric acid in a porcelain crucible or ordinary saucer, and evaporate almost to dryness. On cooling, if molybdenum is present, "the crucible will have a beautiful dark blue coating, which is thought to be a mixture of oxides." If a saucer is used the same blue coating is formed in a circle around the acidified pulverized mineral.

"The mineral with which molybdenite is likely to be confused is graphite. Graphite in places occurs in flakes which are almost, if not quite, as flexible as those of molybdenite, and on the other hand, molybdenite occurs at certain places in a form which gives no suggestion to the eye of a flaky structure. There is generally a noticeable difference in color, the graphite being black and molybdenite having a grayish metallic appearance, but even these characteristics are not sure. An impure molybdenite from Davenport, Wash., is glossy black with no suggestion of flakiness and gives a black streak, though the streak of molybdenite on white paper is usually olive tinted."

Molybdenite is attacked by nitric acid and yields a grayish-white (molybdic oxide) powder. Graphite is not affected by acids.

Sample No. 2 carried a trace of fine gold-amalgam, probably obtained by your treatment for gold and not wholly saved in the "clean up." The concentrates (pannings) consist of small particles of hematite, ilmenite, quartz, garnet, serpentine, two flakes of native platinum and some three per cent of "monazite sand."

Monazite is of resinous luster, brown, yellow and red in colors, brittle, of perfect cleavage, uneven fractures, and crystalline. Specific gravity and hardness 5, respectively. It is made up of the oxides of phosphorus, thorium, cerium, lanthanum, with other matter some 12 per cent. The crystals of monazite are of bird-shot size, and resemble sand, but under the microscope these "grains" show many facets. The grains having a slightly greenish tinge to their yellow color are more apt to contain the largest percentage of the oxide thoria, which, combined with the phosphoric acid, constitutes the main value of the mineral, and is used in so-called electric bulbs, etc.

Selenite and Iron Alum.

YUMA (Ariz.) Oct. 5. [To the Editor of The Times:] Herewith two samples of mineral from a claim east of Salton Sea. I believe that the clear sample must be something new in minerals. It comes from a narrow lead, and you will see that it is clear as glass. The powdery ore tastes like some bitter medicine; it comes from the same claim and there is more of this material than there is of the glassy rock.

Please give me some information on the samples in the "In the Earth" column and oblige. Yours respectfully,

R. H. T.

ANSWER: Sample, "clear as glass," is selenite, a variety of lime-sulphate (gypsum.) The other sample "tastes like some bitter medicine." Bitter medicine is not in the same class. There was an aged mineralogist some years ago who wrote a book; in the book it appears that halotrichite (iron alum,) such as you submit, and which you have probably tasted, "is sweet and astringent on the tongue." It may be that the poor fellow had tasted so many and varied substances that his tongue became "off taste," as it were; nevertheless, it is a fact patent, on the taste of iron-alum, that it sticketh closer than many brothers, and posses a nauseous metallic taste somewhat on the order of an oversize Washington, D. C., oyster.

It will not be long before there is a market for native iron-alum, a variety of which is known as melanterite, and it will be commercially sought for on the deserts of our Western country. Your sample represents hydrous iron sulphate, of vitreous luster, greenish-white in color, 2 in hardness, brittle, of massive structure, in part, and in some portions white and effloresced. Specific gravity 1.7; soluble in water, and before the blow-pipe turns brown, then black and magnetic. With fluxes iron-alum reacts for iron.

COTTAGE INDUSTRY IN IRELAND.

Hand Woven Fabrics With a Distinct Value for Durability and Color.

[Consular Reports:] It is surprising that the hand-woven fabrics can still survive against the productions of machinery, but the Irish peasant understands how to dye his hand-woven cloths with lichens and plants which give them an inimitable effect, and their qualities of durability and appearance give them a distinct value.

The centers of hand weaving and spinning are in Donegal, Mayo, Connemara, and Kerry, where there is abundant mountain grazing for sheep with luxuriant wool and where labor is superabundant. The leading center, however, is Donegal, and it is estimated that $50,000 a year is paid to the peasants of the impoverished and barren districts of Donegal for their homespun cloths. The cloth is usually sold at country fairs, where it is brought in large rolls or webs about 28 inches wide. As a loom of the necessary size could not be accommodated in the tiny cottages occupied by the peasants, the homespun cloths are not made in double widths.

Each district in Ireland produces cloth of a distinct character. In North Donegal the cloth is heavy, well-woven, substantial, and generally dyed in dark colors with stripes and checks. The market for this is usually a retail one.

The products of Castlebar resemble those of North Donegal, but are somewhat brighter in color. In Connemara and other parts of County Galway there is a peculiar sort of flannel of very durable quality. It is usually dyed in red, dark blue, or black; and the Galway peasant women present an odd but vividly picturesque appearance clad in hoods and cloaks made of this peculiar material. The Kerry homespuns are well made, but poor in color and pattern, vegetable dyes being seldom used.

In each of the cases which have been mentioned the cloth is produced for local use, and only the overflow reaches the outside market, but in South Donegal the case is different, as there is an extensive homespun industry there carried on specially for the wholesale market and conducted upon business principles. There is an hereditary talent for coloring the cloths prevalent among the Donegal peasantry, and the cloths which come from this district are considered as beautiful as any woolen fabrics produced anywhere in Europe. There are no statistics available as to importance of this industry.

Hand knitting is still able to compete against mechanical imitations and is a means of livelihood to many peasants in the isolated regions of the country. The wild district of Kincasslough, in County Donegal, is an important center. The Arran industry of Mayo produces some very fine specimens.

Hand embroidery, as it is done in some parts of Ireland, can not be satisfactorily imitated by machinery, and is a cottage industry of importance. Irish art needlework is of the best quality and will bear favorable comparison with any produced in Europe.

Many Statesmen Are Feeble.

"I notice that Mr. Shively of Indiana, has been added to the long and growing list of sick United States Senators," said Mr. Clifford Rose, a Washington newspaper man, to the Baltimore American. "Mr. Shively has been in indifferent health a long while, so much so that for an entire session of Congress he was unable to participate to any extent in the proceedings.

"Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Texas have each one Senator who is now in the poorest physical condition. Mr. Money of Mississippi, is feeble and almost blind, but he will relinquish his seat to John Sharp Williams on the fourth of next March. Encouraging news comes from Senator Elkins's sick bed, but it is known that the West Virginia statesman has been in a critical condition of late. There are others in the invalid category, enough to warrant the exclamation of Seth Bullock, ex-sheriff of Deadwood, and prime favorite of the colonel, who on first viewing the august body, said the Senate reminded him of one of the government homes for old soldiers. On the other hand, there is in that body a fair sprinkling of strong-looking, husky men. Senators like Beveridge and Bailey and Bristow and Borah, of Idaho, all of whom are young and vigorous of body and apparently destined to long lives. On the whole, statesmanship does not seem conducive to healthfulness."

Tuning a Big Bell.

"What a beautiful tone that bell has" is often heard. There are few, however, says the Scientific American, who know how a bell receives its joyful or solemn tones. All bells after they are cast and finished must go through a process of tuning the same as any other musical instrument before they respond with a clear, true tone. Every bell sounds five notes, which must blend together in order to produce perfect harmony. The tuning of a bell is done by means of shaving thin bits from various parts of the metal. It is as easy for an expert bell tuner to put a bell in tune as it is for a piano tuner to adjust his instrument to perfect chords. At first thought it would seem that a bell would be ruined should the tuner shave off too much at the last tuning, or the fifth sound, but such is not the case. He would, however, be obliged to begin over, starting again with the first tone, and shaving the bell till it gave forth its harmonious sound at the fifth tone.

The Necessary Things.

"Have you heard of the civil service examination for ambassadors?" inquired the man with the fur on his overcoat collar.

"No," replied the man next the car window. "I haven't heard of it. Are they examining 'em now?"

"Yes. They ask 'em one question."

"One question only? What's that?"

FULLERTON A RICH, BEAUTIFUL COMMUNITY.

Home of the Late Valencia Orange, Which Has Made District Famous Throughout the Country—Walnuts, Deciduous Fruits Vegetables and Flowers Grown in Abundance at Remarkable Profits.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

IN this rushing age of American life the average business man has very little time to devote to the creation of the beautiful. When the European is in our country he notes what he terms a lack of artistic appreciation in the American. He returns to his native soil and tells his countrymen that America is a country possessing no masterpieces excepting those brought from across the water, that we have very little talent for fine art, and depend entirely upon our foreign brother for what we have. It is undoubtedly true that the best paintings and beautiful statuary at present in America have been imported, but when our French cousins or English brothers state that the American does not appreciate art they are mistaken.

Though the American may at the present time have to submit to perhaps a second place in the arts of painting and sculpture, he has created a new and distinct art of his own. This might be known as the art of beautifying the business man's home. In this art America is fast surpassing every other country in the world. People of every class, the rich and poor alike, are taking up this work of beauty by the thousands, and as a result the residences of our nation, small or large, are smiling an inviting welcome to their owners, and command the admiration of the stranger's eye. The cramped and congested homes in the great cities are being replaced in the suburbs and in the county, as transportation facilities increase, and the cheaper lands of the country afford larger lots on which to build, which in turn permit pretty gardens, pleasant surroundings and an environment which tends to make a more restful and a happier home.

Nowhere is this situation more pronounced than it is at the present time in Southern California; and typifying Southern California, the city of Fullerton is a splendid example. The beautifying of Fullerton commenced a little earlier than in many other localities, and as a result it is further advanced toward the maturity for which its people have been working.

There are several fundamental reasons which have proved material benefactors and which have laid the foundation for the present beautiful setting which the town has developed. The first of these was the proper laying out of the townsite. Fullerton's spacious avenues and streets are in vast contrast with the narrow thoroughfares of the metropolis. The townsite is also exceptionally placed, located as it is on a gradual slope and in the center of a well-drained, well-irrigated and most fertile section of the Santa Ana Valley. The combination of all these natural advantages has thus contributed to the growth of a verdant beauty which is entirely distinct to the town.

Standing at the main business corner of Fullerton and looking alternately east and west, up and down Commonwealth avenue, one views a unique scene. The avenue is 100 feet in breadth, oiled and sidewalked and lining it on both sides as far as the eye can reach is an unbroken chain of exquisite greenery. Peppers, chestnuts, umbrellas, eucalyptus, firs, acacia trees and palms of all varieties skirt the avenue. Trees which were planted ten and fifteen years ago now greet the eye in the fullness of their growth.

Walking west on this avenue the visitor passes many artistic homes, all of which are radiant, even at this time of the year, with a wealth of blossoming flowers, creeping vines and ornamental shrubs. After passing some three blocks of this variegated garden setting we chance upon the beautiful expanse of lawns and palms constituting the grounds of the Fullerton High School.

East and west from the town's center are many more pretty residences, each with its well-kept garden, each contributing to make Fullerton a city of exceptional beauty.

Art and beauty are attributes of refined taste, and the beauty of Fullerton bespeaks the taste and refinement of its people.

THE CITY.

Fullerton is located 23 miles southeast of Los Angeles in Orange County, on the main lines of the Santa Fe railroad running between Los Angeles, San Diego and San Bernardino. The ordinary round-trip fare from Los Angeles is $1.60, but the company issues a 25-ride family ticket for $5.35, thus giving the inhabitants a splendid service between the town and the metropolis at a fare of less than 25 cents a single trip. Seven passenger trains going each way pass through Fullerton every day, and this is the first point where all of them stop after leaving Los Angeles. The run is made in forty-five minutes. Fullerton has lately been made a junction point of the Santa Fe lines running to San Bernardino and San Diego. The population of the town is in the neighborhood of 2500. It was incorporated as a city of the sixth class January 22, 1904, and is geographically the largest city in Orange county, having more than eighteen square miles in its confines. It has an assessed valuation of about $1,600,000, and the property tax rate this year is $1.09. The municipality has spent about $100,000 in street improvements and has at present about 23 miles of well oiled streets and about eight miles of sidewalk and curbing. Four miles of its streets are illuminated at night with electric lamps.

The Southern California Edison Company furnishes the electricity used in the town. It supplies the street-lighting system and also furnishes the illuminating current to the residences at the rate of ten cents per kilowatt. Electric current for motive power can also be obtained at a low rate.

A local gas company has the city streets piped for gas and supplies the houses at the rate of $1.25 per 1000 cubic feet.

Both the Home and Sunset telephone companies have exchanges. Besides a fine local service which connects nearly all the stores and residences of the town, long-distance communications can be made to all other cities where these companies have extended their systems.

A local water company furnishes pure well water at the rate of $1.50 a month. The water is supplied under a good pressure. There are about 52 fire hydrants, and the water for these is supplied by the same company.

Fullerton supports a well-equipped fire department which, together with the fire hydrants greatly reduced the insurance rates. The people support this fire protection by generous contributions. The fighting apparatus consists of a chemical engine, two hose carts with 600 feet of 2½-inch hose and a hook and ladder truck. There are 52 members organized in a splendid volunteer brigade.

The $10,000 Public Library building is one of Fullerton's attractions. It is surrounded with lawns and flowers. It contains a large number of volumes on fiction, history and science, and also keeps a large file of national and local periodicals. The library is well used by the entire community, but especially by the High School students and teachers. The people are very proud of the library and are justified in being so. It costs $1200 a year to maintain the institution, and this revenue is raised by taxation.

The Fullerton Hospital was established in 1902, and is also one of the prominent structures of the city. The vast number of serious operations which have been successfully accomplished here is most remarkable and speaks well for the efficient management of the institution.

SCHOOLS.

The present Fullerton High School plant is a development which resulted from a series of evolutionary stages, dating back some fourteen years. In 1895, a four-room brick building was erected in the eastern part of the city. This became the pride of the community and for a number of years filled the needs of the High School students. Little by little, however, the enrollment was enlarged until in 1903, owing to the crowded condition of the building, steps were taken for enlargement.

During the latter part of 1905, the question of a school bond issued was agitated and after being put to a vote warranted the necessary funds for a new building.

The present High School has two main buildings, an academic and a polytechnic building. The academic building is a complete structure conforming to the mission style of architecture and located on a five-acre piece of ground in the western part of the city. It is a two-story frame building, finished on the exterior with cement plaster, and containing a spacious basement. There are twenty rooms in all and it cost $45,000. The building is heated by hot air and the sanitary conditions are excellent.

The main floor contains the principal's office, reception rooms, a library containing 2000 volumes, an auditorium seating 700 and a number of recitation rooms.

The science and commercial departments occupy the second floor with physics and chemical laboratories, a science lecture hall seating 75 students, typewriting, history and modern language rooms. The basement contains the wood-working shops, domestic science kitchen and dress-making rooms. These, however, will soon be moved to the new polytechnic building, which has just been completed.

The polytechnic building is to be equipped with the most modern appliances. It is most conveniently arranged and when it is officially opened it will be a great boon to the High School students. The addition of a swimming pool is a luxury which the principal and students are looking forward to in the future.

Back of the main buildings is a large athletic field which offers ample room for the practice and contests of the school's teams. Football, baseball, tennis, track, oratory and dramatics engage the students. The athletic teams have won fame in their contests with other institutions and the dramatic and oratorical organizations have contributed to entertainment programmes. The entire business management of the athletics, school entertainments and a large amount of the discipline of the school is left in the hands of the students.

"The Pleiades" is an annual publication by the students in the literary classes. The school's activity during the year is recorded in this paper.

The Fullerton High School was the first school in the State to introduce the idea of bus transportation for its students residing far out in the country. This feature has proved a great convenience and an entire success in every way. There are five large covered wagons maintained by the school board, each of which carries the students to and from school every day. Each bus has a specified route to travel and the students living as far as ten miles from the school are enabled to attend the institution without any difficulty.

There are eleven teachers in the school and the student enrollment numbers 153. The school could accommodate 250 students. It is on the accredited list of both the State's Universities.

The Fullerton primary and grammar schools are well equipped and furnish every opportunity for the children of the elementary grades. The present enrollment is between 300 and 400 pupils, and a large corps of competent and efficient teachers are kept upon the institution staff. The old brick High School building has now been made the grammar school and has proven a most convenient structure for that purpose.

The upper grade pupils of the grammar school are conducting experiments in agricultural work in connection with their theoretical studies. This is a novel feature and is proving highly satisfactory to the principal who was instrumental in introducing it. The school grounds comprise about five acres and on this space are a number of walnut trees. This last season the industrious youngsters gathered the nuts and selling them, realized a revenue of $45. The amount was devoted to the athletic fund of the school.

Fullerton is well supplied with a large number of up-to-date stores which sell their goods at about the same price as the Los Angeles retail stores. The local lumber yards sell at Los Angeles prices plus the freight which averages about $2.00 per thousand feet.

The real estate situation is active. Unimproved land by the acre sells from $250 up. Improved land can be had from $600 an acre up. Residence lots 50 by 140 feet bring $350 and up, while business lots of the same dimensions may be brought from $1200 up.

The First National Bank of Fullerton occupies its own $18,000 building located on the principal corner in the business section. This institution has been doing a splendid business for a number of years. It is capitalized at $50,000. Its total resources aggregate $381,512.00. It has a surplus fund of $10,000 and its undivided profits amount to $14,471.00. Its outstanding loans are about $311,844.00.

Occupying the same building with the First National Bank is the Fullerton Savings Bank. This concern has total resources aggregating $168,617. It is capitalized at $25,000. Its loans amount to $153,025.00. The undivided profits amount to $2,016.00 and its savings deposits to $105,193.00.

Both these banks have done a great deal in a financial way for the upbuilding of the town and are thoroughly progressive institutions.

The Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Fullerton was organized as a State bank in 1904 and became a national bank in 1909. It is capitalized at $25,000. Its surplus and undivided profits amount to $5000 and its total deposits to $150,000. The business of this bank has more than doubled since the present management purchased the institution. The directors and stockholders are among the wealthiest and leading citizens of the community and their enterprise is paying them a 10 per cent. annual dividend.

The residents of Fullerton are a refined and cultured class of people. Most of the inhabitants attend church and the entire community voices a prohibition sentiment. There is not a saloon in the district.

There are four fine substantial church buildings. The Methodists have lately constructed a beautiful $20,000 brick building and the members of the Christian church are putting up a building to cost about $15,000. It is expected this will be opened by about January 1st of next year. The Baptist and Presbyterian churches are large and artistic frame structures which do credit to the town in their appearance. All these churches have large congregations and are entirely self-supporting. Their united influence has done a great deal for the moral uplift of Fullerton.

The W. C. T. U. is represented in the town. This organization lately presented the city with a sanitary drinking fountain which is now situated on the main street corner in the heart of the business section.

A Parent Teachers Association has materially benefited the local school conditions and its good actions in this respect are highly appreciated by the community.

The following Fraternal orders have chapters or lodges in Fullerton: Odd Fellows, F. and A. M., Royal Arch Masons, Fraternal Brotherhood, Independent order of Foresters, Modern Woodmen, Woodmen of the World, Order of the Eastern Star, International Oderof Good Templars and the P. E. O.

Besides these a chapter of the American Women's League has a large membership and the local Y. M. C. A., has its own clubhouse and a large athletic field.

The Fullerton Woman's club is a member of the State Federation and has been organized a number of years. Its purpose is to further the civic improvement and welfare of the city.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association is an organization of business men. The purpose is to promote the best business interests in the community and to protect each individual merchant. It has done a good work since its organization and has saved its members much time and money. The secretary, E. W. Dean, is a very active and progressive man in matter pertaining to the work of the association.

Nearly every business man of Fullerton is a member of the Fullerton Chamber of Commerce. In all there are 115 members. The work of the chamber is to promote the growth of the town. This is encouraged by publicity and by furthering the business interests already established. E. S. Richman is president of this body and has done a great deal of good work in that capacity.

PLACENTIA AND THE FRUIT SITUATION.

The Fullerton Placentia district is rapidly becoming famed throughout the country as the home of the Valencia orange. This fruit is considered the most delicious grown in the citrus industry. Year after year this section has been producing tons and tons of most excellent oranges, and has been shipping them to the eastern markets, where they command the highest prices paid for such fruit. Several years ago the growers received as high as $12 a box for a large portion of the crop. During the month of October of this present year a number of the ranchers realized over $9 gross on the box. To express it conservatively, an average selling price in the eastern markets runs annually from $5 to $10, and for the last five years the best growers have netted an average of $4.50 per box over and above expenses. Many of the ranchers clear from $1000 to $2000 an acre with trees from sixteen to eighteen years old, and still there are many others who realize from $100 to $500 an acre. However, all the orange growers are making money, some on a large scale and some on a small scale; and it is needless to say that with such conditions of prosperity it is most difficult to induce any of the established growers to sell out.

Next to the orange crop the output of walnuts is exceptional. This district is not troubled a great deal with the blight, and produces some of the best walnuts to be found anywhere. On four and three-fourths acres this year, which cost the owner $4350, one man realized $606.02. His trees were about fifteen years old, and after the crop was sold there yet remained quite a quantity of nuts to be gleaned from the trees.

There are seven orange and walnut packing houses in the district which handle the greater part of the product. There are also three vegetable packing houses which do a continual business almost the year round.

In connection with the products grown in this section Fullerton and Placentia have one of the largest irrigation systems in this part of the State. The water is obtained from the Santa Ana River, and is conducted by cement ditches over an area of many thousand acres.

The growers have organized several social organizations. The Placentia Round Table is a woman's literary society having forty members, and the Philharmonia Society is a musical organization which is in the habit of giving socials and other entertainments.

OPPORTUNITIES.

The business men of Fullerton are united in agreeing that their town is in need of a first-class dry-goods store to carry a complete stock. Such an enterprise would assist in keeping other business in the town and would be heartily welcomed by most of the other merchants.

A modern hotel is also needed. Those at present located in the town are doing a good business and there is plenty of room for a new and up-to-date hotel.

A delicatessen store would find a virgin field to work in and many of the town's people it is stated would patronize such a store.

The town offers opportunity for an experienced dressmaker, and a good photographer ought to meet with success.

The greatest opportunity offered the capitalist in this district is in the construction of small bungalows and cottages of from $1000 to $1500 in value, and to rent at from $10 to $15 a month. There is also a demand for a better class of houses, but the demand for the low renting houses is so great at the present time that 30 people and more are turned away from the town every month. It is stated by men who are now renting that with proper management 10 to 12 per cent. could be realized upon the investment. Fifty such houses would find immediate tenants.

In connection with the building, the buying of an acreage and subdividing it into lots would give the investor a handsome income on his money. One man bought five acres a short time ago which he divided into 21 lots. Inside of sixty days he sold all but two. He made no street improvements but the crude proposition netted him a good interest.

RLD'S RICHEST WOMAN AS TRAINED HER ONLY SON.

's Boy Tells of His Famous Mother's and Methods and Turns New Light on —Remarkable Success of a Woman In- ted in Her Rugged Heir.

LLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

needed certain things. 'You are on the ground,' she would wire back immediately. One day, losing patience, I started for New York.

"'Mother,' I said, on entering her office, 'when I telegraph you for advice I wish you wouldn't curtly tell me to mind my own business.'

"'But,' she said, 'suppose I were not here? You remember Mr. ——. Well, he was captain of his own ship, as I am captain of my ship. His sons were his mates. They wore uniforms and looked very spruce. But they didn't take their turn at the wheel or stand watch. Finally the captain died, and no one on board being competent to navigate the ship, it went on the rocks. I sent you to Texas to learn the railway business. I can't teach you by telegraph from New York. Go back and do the best you can.' After that," Mr. Green added, "I ran the road as I pleased. I went into banks, a cotton gin manufacturing and other enterprises, all of which, I am glad to say, have been successful.

HETTY'S JOKE.

"Once my mother sent me to Chicago with a package of very valuable papers, as I imagined. I was a young man and stayed awake every foot of the way, putting the package under the mattress in my berth and watching for robbers all night. On reaching Chicago I learned that the papers were fire insurance policies long since expired. Besides self-reliance, my mother taught me to pay and demand the odd cent.

EDWARD H. R. GREEN.

"'If a man owes you $666.17,' she often said, 'don't accept $666.15. If you do, your books will not balance, nor will they balance if, owing him $666.17, you only pay $666.15. After your business is over you may take him to dinner and the theater, but don't invite him until the transaction has been closed and the money paid.'

"Before going to Chicago, with a number of mortgages on real estate that had fallen in value, my mother said: 'Get the exact sum due on each mortgage, interest and principal, fixed in your mind. If any one is fool enough to offer you the full amount, take it. If you are offered less, tell the man you will give him an answer in the morning. Then think the matter over carefully in the evening. If you decide that it will be to our advantage to accept the offer, say so the next day. In business generally, don't close a bargain until you have reflected upon it over night.'"

"Did Mrs. Green," I asked, "give you any preachments on economy?"

"Much has been printed about my mother that is untrue. She has been represented as being a parsimonious woman. Such is not the fact. However, the Greens care very little about dress. I prefer, when the weather is warm, to wear an unstarched shirt and a belt. But the Greens want to be be neat, if they are old-fashioned. The other night, mother came to this hotel and found me talking with two men.

"'Ned,' she asked, when they were gone, 'where is your Tuxedo?'

"'In Texas,' I replied.

"'Well,' she said, 'go out tomorrow and buy two suits. I want you to dress like a gentleman.'

"'But, mother,' I protested, 'I feel just as you do on the question of clothing. A sack coat is good enough for me, day or evening.'

"'I know,' she said, 'but do it to please me.'

UNRECONCILED.

"So I ordered two suits, but I am sure I shall never wear the darned things, either here or in the Southwest. Mother has always wanted my sister and me to buy the best of everything. But we are like her in our tastes, and if a Green gets set other people had better go away and leave them. When I traveled about the country for my mother, she ordered me to stop at the highest-priced hotels. 'Live well,' she cautioned me, 'but don't go around at night. You'll get to drinking, perhaps, and a doctor will be called in, and I won't pay any money for such foolishness.'

"I was in Chicago for a long time on an important matter of business. Mother expected me to pay $5 a day at the Auditorium Annex. I went to the Clifton House, which was cheaper, expecting to have a little more money, you see, for my own use. 'I notice,' mother wrote, 'that you are not staying at the hotel I suggested. It is all right, but I have reduced your daily allowance $3. You are not to have any more spending money than the amount decided on originally.' So my scheme fell down.

"My mother is careful concerning the expenditure of money because she has exact rules on which to conduct her business. It is not for me to say that the rules are faulty. From results obtained, they appear to be about right. 'Never give a penny to a well man,' she has told me more than once. 'Help him, but make him do something in return, if it is no more than to carry a brick around the block. When a man is willing to work, give him a steady job if you can. Compel every one in your employ to earn his pay, otherwise you are injuring him and yourself.'"

"Is it true," I asked, "that you worked as a section hand on a railroad?"

"Yes. I had never said anything to mother about the presidency of the Chemical National Bank. However, my lightning rod was up. But she wanted me to learn railroading, and the only place to learn that business is on a railroad, down on the ground among the men. It can't be learned in the corridors or lobbies of this hotel—here every one is a fi-nan-cier. The dose was bitter, but I swallowed it, and for several months used a shovel on a section at $10 a week. Then I was made foreman, keeping my stretch of track smooth and in repair and the weeds cut down.

"It was pioneer work—the kind that gives the best preparation for practical life. Texas is producing more men of brains than is any other State, because work there is new and rough. If I were fortunate enough to have a son fifteen years of age, I should send him there to be educated. An engineer applied to H. M. Hoxie, one of our early railroad men, for a job. 'I ran on the Lake Shore, and Michigan Southern for fifteen years,' the engineer said, 'and was never off the track.'

"'You won't do,' Hoxie replied. 'Out here engines jump the track, and we want men who know how to get them back.'

"There is no trouble," Mr. Green went on to say, "in running a four-track road. It will almost run itself. However, a one-track road on which there are often thirty trains in a bunch, demands ingenuity and executive ability. If a line is making $100,000 a year per mile there is little bother about money. If it is earning only $5000 per mile, a real and ready financier is required to raise funds for the pay roll and for coal and oil. So our railway men in Texas move to New York and become famous.

"It is the same with our bankers. Out in the Southwest the bankers know the names and faces of their customers. Here the bankers are hidden away upstairs, and only clerks come in contact with the public. Depositors like to see somebody besides the porter. They want to know if the officers are attending to their business. A young banker comes from Texas. He puts his desk near the front door and proceeds to get acquainted with merchants, lawyers, brokers and manufacturers, and they are pleased with his energy and new methods. Pioneer work makes one resourceful and self-reliant. By meeting and talking with men, one obtains an understanding of other fellows' points of view, and that is always desirable."

"Leaving the section," I said, "you went to Cincinnati."

"Mrs. Green had interests in the Ohio and Mississippi. The road got into trouble, and I was made superintendent and managing director. From Cincinnati I went to Chicago to look after the mortgages I have mentioned. Meeting young lawyers in the office of Mrs. Green's counsel, being young myself, I studied law, but with no idea of engaging in practice. Later I was admitted to the bar in Texas."

"Why did you settle in that State?" I inquired.

"We had about 800 miles of road that was not doing very well. I sold it off, piece by piece, but we had fifty miles for which I could find no purchaser. I made improvements and built 100 miles of new track, and now we have one of the best paying properties in the Southwest."

TO HELP.

"And you are back in New York to remain permanently?" I said.

"Possibly. My mother is 76 years old. She has worked harder than has any man in New York. She can work yet, but sustained labor, although her health is good, wearies her, and so I am here to share some of her burdens."

"What personal qualities are necessary for success in business?"

"I put memory first on the list," Mr. Green answered. "We say that some particular man is able and brilliant. What we mean, although we do not realize it, is that he has an abnormal memory. If you will think the matter over, you will see that I am right. Memory and the genius to apply it prevents one from repeating his mistakes of judgment or fact. Mrs. Green will say, 'That transaction,' referring to a matter long since closed, 'involved the sum of $526,429.38.' The clerks, before they got used to it, would open their mouths and eyes simultaneously. Some man will come in and remark that property at Fifth avenue and Thirty-third street is bound to increase in value. 'Mr. So-and-So,' mother will reply, 'expressed the same opinion three years ago last September.'

"Of course, one can be an animated memory and nothing else, in which event he is only a drudge, a human machine on two legs. Besides an extraordinary memory, my mother has great wisdom, and a clear and sure vision. She has never made any money in speculation—the Greens don't speculate. She has been what you might call a one-bank man. You may have noticed that when currency is scarce in New York Mrs. Green always has plenty to lend on good collateral. There is no better judge of commercial paper in the United States. I am sure her total losses on that particular kind of security have been less than $10,000. Again, showing her methods of management, she rarely if ever sells any of her property. She buys it intelligently, and then keeps it, regardless of market fluctuations or the increase of values."

"Are there too many 'swollen fortunes,' as Mr. Roosevelt calls them, in the country?"

"Big enterprises require immense sums of money. We are living in big times. A half century ago the Astor House, costing $150,000, was the finest hotel in New York. The hotel we are sitting in tonight cost $10,000,000. We have always heard that monopolies were about to ruin the nation. I had occasion to examine some very old American newspapers. The Pennsylvania Railroad, I read, had purchased a canal in New Jersey. The editor, a sober and sagacious man, no doubt, expressed the disquieting conviction that the Pennsylvania Railroad, then about 150 miles long, was trying to monopolize the traffic of the whole country. The gloomy warnings we hear now will sound rather funny in the year 1960."

TREASURES OF THE THAMES.

Everything from Coins to Statues Have Been Raised from Its Black Depths.

If some of the things that have been fished out of the Thames River are a fair sample of the treasures resting in the mud at the bottom, it might pay some Yankee speculator to finance a plan for a systematic search. Everything from a coin to a staute has been recovered from the black waters, even the Great Seal of England having found a resting place there. It was thrown there purposely by James II on the night he fled from Whitehall, but a fisherman accidently brought it to light some while afterward, and it was restored to the government.

"One of the most ancient and, strangely enough, best preserved relics was found in 1868 near Waterloo Bridge," says a historian writing in The Globe. "This is a Celtic helmet of bronze, more than twenty centuries old. The state of its preservation is marvellous, the ornamentation being almost as unworn as when the helmet was first made. In 1856 a bronze shield of about the same date was wrested from the river mud near Battersea, together with a great number of swords, spears and other weapons. This shield is the finest of its period in the world. It is fourteen inches wide and thirty long, and somewhat highly ornamented with curious red enamel disks. The durability of bronze is evident when we think of the countless tides which swept over it, but were yet unable to destroy the metal, and it is almost impossible to realize that the owner of such a shield was a savage barbarian, clad only in the skins of wolves and other wild animals which were harbored in thousands by the mighty forests which covered all England.

"Near London Bridge, which has always proved a mine of buried treasure, two small Roman statuettes were found in 1837. They are bronzes of Apollo and Mercury, unfortunately somewhat mutilated and dented, but sufficiently well preserved to show that both were the work of true artists, and probably famous sculptors of that day. It is possible that the early Christians, who were responsible for a good deal of damage of the kind, looked upon them as devils, and thought that by defacing them and cutting off an arm here and a leg there and casting them into the river they would deprive them of any power of evil. So many coins of bronze, silver and gold have been found in the Thames that it would require a mighty tome to catalogue them. In 1841 a number of gold coins were found by a laborer, who eventually sold them to a collector, while some twenty-five years earlier a great quantity of angels and half-sovereigns minted in the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII were thrown up by a small kind of waterspout. They were claimed by the corporation, and what happened to them is not known.

"At Queenhithe the seal of Edward the Confessor for the Port of London was brought to the surface by a dredger in 1810. It is of very thick silver, in perfect condition and of most exquisite workmanship. It was bought by a private gentleman. Not many years ago a bargee brought up on the end of his anchor a gold pomander of the fifteenth century. Pomanders were worn on the girdle and contained scent.

"A great number of Roman relics have been found at different times, and there are no doubt as many more still hidden in the river bed. A pair of Roman sandals almost perfectly preserved were discovered some years ago, and a very fine head of the Emperor Hadrian, as well as a huge hand, which may have belonged to the statue of which the Emperor's head was part."

Botha's Little Joke.

General Botha, first Premier of United South Africa, has a sense of humor. One of the flashes of comedy that lit up the tragic pages of the late war in South Africa, occured toward the end, when Kitchener and the Boer commander in chief were discussing terms of peace. There were several fruitless interviews before a working basis was agreed upon.

At the end of one of these discussions, Botha got up and remarked. "Well, I'm afraid I really must be off." "There's no hurry," Kitchner answered pleasantly. "You haven't a train to catch, you know." "But that's just what I have," was Botha's reply.

Next morning the chief of staff reported a successful Boer raid on a British armored train on the Delagoa line, only a few miles off. Botha had caught that train.[Chicago News.

Reason for Exorbitant Fee.

Joseph H. Choate, the New York lawyer, deprecated at a recent dinner the exorbitant fees charged by some lawyers.

"You have perhaps heard," said Mr. Choate, "of the gentleman who remarked to his counsel when his case was settled:

"'Well,, your fee, sir, is exorbitant. I know positively that you didn't give two hours to my case from first to last.'

"'Ah, sir,' said the lawyer, airily, 'it is not alone my actual time I charge you with, but the cost of my legal training as well.'

"'All very fine,' retorted the client. 'And now I wonder if you'd mind giving me a receipt for the cost of your legal training, so that your next customer won't have to pay for it all over again!"—[Washington Star.

ARIZONA BUYS FAIR GROUNDS.

Commission Plans Improvements at Phoenix.

Exhibition Just Closed Is Record-Breaker.

Inter-City Auto Race Proves Chief Attraction.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Nov. 12.—The Territorial Fair just concluded was the most successful ever known, especially in the details of attendance and exhibits. Admission receipts totaled $10,000. Five hundred special fair tickets were sold over the Santa Fe from Prescott and even larger sales were made at Tucson, Bisbee and Globe.

The fair, now recognized as a thoroughly Territorial affair, has done more than any other one thing in bringing together the various sections of the Territory and in the obliteration of sectional jealousy. The grounds heretofore have been the property of a Phoenix association, which annually leased them to the Territorial Fair Commission.

This year, however, the entire direction has passed to the commission, the Territory having purchased the grounds and improvements. It is now expected that permanent improvements will be made and that suitable exhibit buildings will replace the temporary structures that were all that could be afforded in the past. The membership of the present Fair Commission includes H. E. Campbell of Flagstaff, president; E. R. Pirtle, of Douglas, and A. L. Moore, of Phoenix, with Shirley Christey of Phoenix, as secretary.

While the racing card this year was filled with entries of the highest character, brought by large stakes, and a half dozen important records were broken in the harness events, possibly the headline feature of the fair was the automobile race from Los Angeles, with its conclusion of motor car races on the famous local track.

The city was filled with motor car enthusiasts from all parts of the Southwest and the garages were packed with hundreds of outside machines.

One of the largest of the many meetings held during fair week was that of the Arizona Cattle Grower's Association. Lengthy resolutions were adopted. Opposition was expressed toward any change in the present duties on live stock or meat and the suggested non-partisan tariff commission was favored; endorsement was given the practical work of the employees of the Forestry Service; complaint was made that the railroads were remiss in furnishing stock cars for shippers and of the slow movement of live stock to market by rail; classification of grazing land by the government for lease to stockmen was asked, as well as passage of a bill lately introduced by Congressman Cameron to encourage the sinking of wells on the desert. The association re-elected its old officers.

ASSOCIATION'S PROGRAMME.

Friday was held the annual meeting of the Arizona Bankers' Association. The principal papers read were by visitors. H. Choynski of the London, Paris and Anglo National Bank of San Francisco, discussed "Foreign Exchange," and James K. Lynch of the First National Bank of San Francisco, spoke on "Banking in Theory and Practice." J. G. Spangler of Mesa, was elected president, R. B. Burmister of Phoenix vice-president, Lloyd Christy of Phoenix treasurer, and Morris Goldwater of Prescott, secretary.

The third session of the Arizona Postmasters' Association had as visitors, detailed by the Postmaster General, Postmaster A. J. Fiske of San Francisco, Inspector-in-Charge Harry B. Hall of San Francisco, and Inspector-in-Charge W. E. Cochran of Denver. Postmaster A. L. Smith of Prescott and Postmaster F. W. Smith of Williams, were re-elected respectively, as president and secretary.

A pre-census estimate of the relative business of the cities of Arizona has come from the Auditor of the Post-office Department. Phoenix during the past fiscal year had postal revenues of $84,967; Tucson, $43,796; Bisbee, $30,495; Globe, $24,423; Prescott, $21,191; Douglas, $20,791, and Yuma, $10,257, with all other offices below $9000 in income. The greatest increase was shown by Phoenix, which was 20 per cent. over the receipts of last year.

PHOENIX NEWS NOTES.

The cost of buildings erected in Phoenix during the current year will reach about $800,000. During the past twelve months permits have been issued for construction of over 400 houses. A definite move has been made toward paving the city's streets, although the work may be delayed by sewer construction and research into the question of the material that will be best suited to warm climate. Under a call by the Mayor, the Phoenix Citizens' Street Paving Association has been organized and already has committees at work.

Bonds have been sold in the amount of $150,000 by the Phoenix Union High School District for the improvement of the present insufficient school facilities. The bonds, which will bear 4½ per cent. interest, have been taken by Woodin, McNear & Moore of Chicago.

Entire success is claimed by the Overland Telephone Company, which lately started service in Phoenix in opposition to the Consolidated Telephone Company, the Bell organization in Arizona. The Overland now has 1300 automatic phones placed in Phoenix, besides controlling the farm system around this city.

The farmers of the Casa Grande Valley around Florence are signing their lands into a water users' association, similar to that which has proved so successful around Phoenix, though arrangements for the storage and supply of water are to be made with a private corporation, instead of the Reclamation Service, as was done here. A tract of 1400 acres of Florence land has just been sold to F. A. Urban of Los Angeles for $42,000. The land is part of the well-known Kenilworth ranch, in which Gov. R. E. Sloan was at one time heavily interested.

A Belgian company has purchased 450 ostriches from local growers, and has started a new farm across the river on land purchased in the Bartlett-Heard tract. Within the Salt River Valley now are over 5000 ostriches on half a dozen farms. The industry has proven profitable, since the growers have acquired knowledge concerning the proper handling and breeding of the birds in this locality.

The Phoenix National Bank has returned to its old quarters in the Fleming block, which have been enlarged and refurnished at an expense of $27,000. The National Bank of Arizona will occupy quarters in its new building in about sixty days.

The Florence Mercantile Company of Florence has assigned to W. W. Edwards and A. J. Peters, who have placed R. D. Burns in charge of liquidation of the business.

Mountain time has been adopted as standard at Phoenix, replacing the local time heretofore generally accepted.

Rev. T. S. Barcus, late of Hollywood, Cal., has accepted the pastorate of the local Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

MEXICAN ELECTRIC PROGRESS.

Plant to Be Established for Generation of Three Hundred Thousand Horsepower.

Covering a strip of country 1200 miles long by 150 to 200 miles wide, a gigantic electric power project, just brought into being on the west coast of Mexico, promises to revolutionize mining, agriculture, manufacturing, transportation and lighting in all this great section extending from Guaymas to Santiago, says the Mexican Herald.

Plans for the beginning of construction work on three enormous dams on the Mayo, Humaya and Santiago rivers, all flowing into the Pacific Ocean, have been completed by the Mayo River Power and Land Company, a corporation composed largely of Colorado men. The three plants, it is estimated, will cost $6,000,000; $500,000 of the bonds of the company have been underwritten in the United States, and this money will be used to put the first plant into operation.

The project itself is so gigantic as to appear almost incredible, but concessions have been granted, money secured, and all plans prepared for the immediate inception of the work. The company claims to have secured the sole power rights on the Mayo, Humaya and Santiago rivers from the government, and owns 115,000 acres of agricultural, mineral and timber lands. Its concessions and holdings are valued at $7,500,000, gold.

One of the most interesting features of the project is the fact the contracts have been closed for the furnishing of electric power to the Harriman lines in Mexico. This is to say that the Southern Pacific in Mexico is planning to electrify some, at least, of its lines. Two years have been consumed in the negotiations with the Mexican government and with the landowners from whom property was secured.

The transmission lines will extend from Guaymas to Santiago, 1200 miles. Twenty cities along the west coast, some of which have horse-car lines, will be enabled to use electric power. Current, also, will be available for mines, pumping stations, haciendas and narrow-gauge railways which lead to the more isolated mines. Three hundred thousand horse-power will be generated when all three plants are in full operation.

The power project on the Rio Mayo includes a dam 170 feet high, 260 feet long at the top, and with a reservoir capacity of 10,280,000,000 cubic feet.

The Rio Humaya project includes a dam 223 feet high, 708 feet long at the top, with a reservoir capacity of 11,384,500,000 feet. The Rio Santiago will have a dam 215 feet high, 145 feet long, impounding 9,360,000,000 cubic feet of water.

The cost of the transmission lines will be $2,000,000, which is included in the $6,000,000 estimate of the cost of the plants, as given above.

The construction of this system means a great deal for the development of the west coast of Mexico. Coal costs at times as much as $9.50, gold, a ton, and to some of the mines it has to be packed in on the backs of donkeys. Sufficient contracts for power are said to have been closed to pay 1.2 per cent. of the entire capitalization.

Odd Cures for Seasickness.

Among curious remedies for seasickness is that which is popular among the mariners in the Levant—the daily swallowing of iron-rust, which is obtained by the simple process of scraping off the anchor or anchor-chain. But this is only part of the treatment, for a small pouch containing roasted salt and flowers of thyme must be tied upon the abdomen as firmly as can be borne, this being considered to counteract the effect of the internal disturbance caused by the rolling of the vessel. Known to the ancient Greeks as "thymian salt," the preparation has at least the authority of old age, while its efficacy is not without modern testimony. And the belt is better than the salt, and the faith better than the belt.—[London Chronicle.

CALIFORNIA ALL RIGHT.

FRUITS SCANT ACROSS SEAS.

Bad Crop Conditions in Many Parts of World.

Raisin Prices at an Abnormal Height in Spain.

Olive Harvest in Italy and Sicily Is Poor.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—If California does not realize good prices for the products of her orchards and vineyards this year it will hardly be because of competition, for reports continue to come in telling of bad crop conditions in many parts of the world.

On account of cholera conditions in Asia, exportations of lemons have been very light and the usual scarcity at this time of year has been enhanced so that prices have ruled high. If California had any considerable quantity of lemons at this season, her growers would profit largely, but as is usually the case the high prices come when few are in a position to benefit from them. The high prices are likely to benefit chiefly the importers.

From Valencia, Spain, comes the report that speculative excitement has forced up the price of raisins to an abnormal figure. In fact the rates have been averaging about $2 above the average initial prices of the last five years. Crop estimates for the region range low, the highest estimate being 19,000 tons as compared with an average crop of 25,000 to 30,000 tons; and late averages from Smyrna and the Levant put the crop of Sultanas at only 20,000 tons against a normal crop of 50,000 tons. Many dealers believe that the crop will be larger than the recent estimates, and Canadian importers who were offered superior grades from Denia at $6.57 per hundredweight of 112 pounds declined to speculate, alleging that the finest seedless California raisins could be purchased for less money in the Candian markets.

At the beginning of the present season there remained unsold in London about 6400 tons of Sultanas, old stocks from previous crop, which would only require to be supplemented by 1000 tons from the new crop to supply the total average yearly consumption of 7000 to 8000 tons Sultana raisins on that market. The same line of argument applies equally to Liverpool, where important stocks of Sultanas remained on speculators' hands at the close of last season. Prices at Denia, according to latest advices, show a marked downward tendency and it is evident that no orders could be obtained from any foreign markets at the rates quoted above, but, on the other hand, growers who are not in any immediate need of money and can hold their crop, will not sell at present at less money, as they are convinced of the extreme shortness of raisin crops everywhere in Europe.

In connection with the reports of the raisin industry, it is doubtless true that a campaign of education which has been carried on by California growers has resulted in causing increased consumption. As an indication, though perhaps not an important one, it might be mentioned that in the Capitol at Washington raisin pie is nowserved in the restaurant. It is also to be had in other places in Washington, and while it is a novelty, it seems to meet with considerable favor.

The average production of almonds in Spain from 1903 to 1907 was about 197,000,000 pounds annually. Exports in 1909 showed an important increase over preceding years. Owing to the abundant crop the exports amounted to some 22,000,000 pounds. Indications are that this year's crop will be very good, but official figures are still lacking. There was some damage in the region around Terragona owing to frost in April following warm weather in March, causing an estimated loss of half the crop.

Almonds are being planted near Jaffa in Palestine in place of wine grapes and olives.

Almonds and filberts will be a short crop in Sicily.

The olive crop in Italy and Sicily is reported to be poor. In Sicily it is declared that hardly a quarter of the average crop will be gathered. A similar report comes from Seville, Spain. This is the off year, and the crop of Queen olives will be less. However, there is a large stock carried over, and there will be no scarcity of olives or olive oil, but the prices will be advanced.

Australia is becoming a large producer of dried fruits. Consumption of currents in Australia last year is put at 90,540 hundredweight. The local production in South Australia and Victoria reached 63,460 hundredweight, so that the imports amounted to about 27,080 hundredweight as compared with 54,162 hundredweight in 1909.

The production of all raisins in South Australia and Victoria in 1909 was 97,542 hundredweight, of which 7602 hundredweight was exported and about 2000 hundredweight was used in distilling.

Australia's apparent requirements for consumption in 1909 was 96,140 hundredweight. During the last season Australia produced 108,852 hundredweight of raisins, making an apparent surplus of 12,712 hundredweight. This was in addition to over-sea shipments to New Zealand and importations of foreign fruits must be considered.

A new fruit in this country which is popular in Northern China is being propagated at the Experiment Station at Chico. In appearance it is like a crab-apple, the flesh being pinkish in color and when served at the table it has the color of cranberry sauce. It is served either stewed or made into jam. The taste is pleasant with a sub-acid flavor, and it is very refreshing. The Chinese call it "hung-kue," meaning "red fruit," by which name foreigners know it. It is also known as "thorn apple," (crataegus).

Another variety of fruit from Northern China which the Department of Agriculture is beginning experiments with is the prunus davidiani, a wild peach. It is believed that the winter resisting qualities of this fruit can be united with the edible qualities of the American peach, producing a desirable fruit for northern climates.

Canada is becoming a factor in the fruit trade of the world and will have to be reckoned with more and more every year. The crop this year is very uneven, but where the trees have been properly looked after a large crop of clean fruit is noted. Western Ontario is almost without winter apples while in eastern Ontario the crop will be very light. In Prince Edward Island even crabapples are almost a failure. The peach crop in Ontario was the best on record and trial shipments were made to England to see if a market could be developed there. They were packed in single layer cases surrounded by wood wool, each case containing from twenty to twenty-five peaches. The Canadian department of agriculture guaranteed the growers the current local price and superintended the packing. The peaches were shipped to Montreal in refrigerator cars, arriving there on the second day after leaving St. Catharines when they were at once transferred direct to the ship's cold storage chambers. The shipment arrived in good condition. The trade commissioner at Birmingham cabled, "Maturity right, packing superb." The first consignment brought $1.00 to $1.50 per case and the whole charges totaled about 25 cents per case.

THAT 49-CENT STORE.

BY EMMA CLEVELAND WOOD.

"Yes; I've actchully been to Washington on a visit. I'm jes' back, an' I'm 'most fagged out, too. I went to visit sister Malvina. She married Lemuel Jones, you know. He's a butcher there.

"Do tell you about my visit—how I enjoyed it, an' what I saw?

"Well, I had a nice time—a mighty nice time. I wish you could have been along an' seen the sights. There was a forty-nine-cent store there that jes beat anything you ever laid your two eyes on. You never seen sech bargains in all your born days. You know them muffin-pans that Silas Reed wants seventy-five cents apiece for, up at the cross-roads? Well, I could jes git all I wanted at forty-nine cents a pair. Now what do you think o' that?

"An' them glass pitchers like Miranda Johnson's got—she paid a dollar apiece for 'em in butter an' eggs this very spring, mind you; an' I bought the very same pair like hers for forty-nine cents apiece. Jes think o' that; forty-nine cents apiece.

"Did I see the Corcoran Art Gallery? Yes, I s'pose I did; but I didn't go in. Sister said there warn't nothin' but a lot o' picture-paintin's in there, so I didn't go in, though I am right fond o' photographs an' the like. Well, as I was sayin', I never did see sech bargains as they had at that forty-nine-cent store. I saw some winder-shades that were jes beautiful. They had them big bokays o' roses on 'em, 'most as natural as real. I bought a pair for the dinin'-room for only forty-nine cents. Warn't that dirt-cheap?

"Did I visit the Capitol? La! yes; me an' sister Malvina spent 'most two hours there. I never was so tired out walkin' around a place in all my life. That reminds me. My feet was well-nigh blistered, an' I jes had to go to the forty-nine-cent store an' buy me a pair o' carpet slippers to wear about the house. I've got 'em on now; they're so comfortable-lookin' an' easy, an' I only paid forty-nine cents for 'em. Silas Reed asked a dollar an' ten cents for a pair that warn't near as nice as these I've got on.

"Oh, yes; of course I went to the White House an' shook hands with the President; everybody does that. An' let me tell you, he had on a black necktie jes the dead match to one I bought Hosea at the forty-nine-cent store. I don't believe you could tell 'em apart.

"Smith an' Son's Institute, did you say? I reckon I saw that too; but there was such a lot o' big buildin's, I can't half remember the names of 'em all. They had little books with pictures in 'em of sech at the forty-nine-cent store, but there was so many other things to buy I didn't git one.

"Dear me! Yes; we went clean up to the top of Gen'r'l Washington's monument. It was awful high, an'—would you believe me?—you could even see the flag that was wavin' over the forty-nine-cent store from up there. Sister Malvina pointed it out.

"What, you ain't goin' a'ready? Well, you must run in ag'in soon; I've got a lot o' things more to tell you. I want to show you the cutest trick you ever saw. It's a new-fangle thing to take pies out of the oven without burnin' your fingers clean to the bone. I bought it an' a dozen nice pie-pans at the forty-nine-cent store jes before I started home."—[Century Magazine.

UNIONS AGAIN HIT.

ORDER TO STRIKE IS A THREAT.

ANY MAN CAN WORK FOR WHOM HE PLEASES.

Judge Richardson Says Unions Have No Right to Interfere With a Man in His Work, and Employers Are Not Obliged to Treat With a Union.

The strike of photo engravers in Boston a few months ago for the enforcement of union conditions in that trade resulted in an injuction for the restraint of the Photo Engravers Union of that city. In rendering his decision Judge Richardson made the following comments:

"No labor organization has a right to interfere with a non-union man in his work."

"Any man can work for whom he pleases, and at what wages he pleases."

"A man must support his family, and he has a right to get work of whom he can."

"It makes no difference what the strike was called for. No labor organization has a right to interfere with a man in his work, whether he is under contract or not."

"An employer is not obliged to treat with the union."

Judge Richardson's decision, which is in the form of a memorandum, is as follows:

"It appears that the plaintiffs, Folsom & Sunergren, during the time that they have carried on the business of photo-engravers and kindred lines of business, for the last fifteen years, have employed men who are members of labor unions and men who are not members of such unions, without discrimination and upon terms which they could mutually agree upon, and with apparent satisfaction, down to within a few months.

"The real beginning of the trouble which has led to the strike was the sending in May last to the plaintiffs the paper called 'Articles of Agreement,' which the defendants, Lewis and Maguire and the other officers of the labor union, admittedly desired them to sign or agree to. This was the first communication made by the defendants to the plaintiffs. It did not ask for any interview, nor did it suggest that there was any dissatisfaction, or any trouble with plaintiffs' employees, or any trouble which the defendants desired to settle or to consider.

"The eighth paragraph of said 'articles' was 'That the employer signing this agreement shall employ none but union members of the International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America or applicants holding permits from Boston Photo-Engravers' Union No. 3,' thus unionizing the plaintiffs' business, and in other clauses of said articles limiting their rights to make contracts with such men as they choose, limiting them as to hours which the men shall work, and binding them in many other respects which the plaintiffs do not wish to do, and which, in my judgment, the defendants had no right to ask them to do.

"The next communication by the defendants to the plaintiffs was June 29, 1910, in which they asked the plaintiffs to meet them for a conference 'to determine the nature of our future relations,' but this did not suggest that there was any grievance or dissatisfaction on the part of the employees of the plaintiffs which they desired to settle or adjust.

"The next communication was July 11, in which they asked for a conference to 'avoid misunderstanding and trouble.' There is no suggestion there of any misunderstanding or any trouble existing between the plaintiffs and the employees.

"The next communication was July 19, in which the secretary of the defendant union stated that the union at its special meeting had voted 'a strike, to go into effect by 6 o'clock Monday, July 25, unless the proposition as submitted by the union had been accepted' by that date. The only proposition which had been submitted by the union was the proposition contained in said articles of agreement. The union's communications did not suggest that the workmen had any grievances and were not answered by the firm.

"The bill for an injunction was filed July 21, and the defendants had notice on that date. The strike took place on the evening of July 25 after service on the defendants of the order of the court for a hearing the next morning. Several of the plaintiff's employees who were members of the union left the plaintiff's employment.

"All the evidence tends to show that the strike was voted and made for the reason that the plaintiffs declined to accept and agree to the proposition, contained in said 'articles of agreement'; and the members of said union who left the plaintiffs' employ at the time of the strike did so as they were members of the union and feared to violate their obligations to it, apprehensive that if they did not leave the plaintiffs' employment they might not be able to retain their standing in the union and get employment elsewhere.

"The defendants say, and it is true, that there was no evidence of violence or threats of violence or physical injury to the plaintiffs' workmen if they remained in the employ of the plaintiffs, but it has long been settled that there is a moral intimidation and fear of loss quite as effectual as fear of physical harm.

"The defendants claim that employees who are dissatisfied with the condition of employment have a right to strike. That is true, and in some cases they may, perhaps, be assisted, when reasonably necessary, in the operation of such strike, by the officers of the union of which they are members, but the inative of such a strike ought to be limited, I think, to the free action of the employees, and to aid them in some proper claim, as for higher wages, shorter hours, or for fairer treatment, or some other ground or reason. No such ground for the interference of the defendant union and its officers is shown in this case.

"A strike ordered by a union for the mere purpose of compelling the employer to unionize his shop goes much too far.

"As I have said, there was no evidence of physical violence offered or threatened in this case. The defendants claim the right of what is called peaceful persuasion, but whether peaceful persuasion is or is not wrong, depends; if it is done as a matter of competition between employers, that is one thing. If A, engaged in business, can induce a man to work for him instead of for B, who is also engaged in business, by the offer of higher wages or shorter hours, that is legitimate competition, but for an organization not engaged in business to induce men or to hire men who are working for B to leave him and to become idle, for the mere purpose of compelling B to do something against his will, that is, to unionize his shop is quite another thing. That is not competition of any kind.

"It was admitted in the argument that it is the desire and hope of the labor unions to have all workmen become members of such unions. If that should be accomplished and the rules of the unions, or those now in force over their members continue, it is plain that such unions would then control the labor market, both in respect to employers and employees, and have a complete monopoly of, or corner in, the labor market, inconsistent with public policy, and the rights of the public to have, as the court has stated, a reasonably free market; for a labor market full of such workmen, bound by the rules of the unions now existing, would not be in any sense a free market. It would be a condition not only obnoxious to the immediate parties concerned, but to all parties interested in the basic principles of freedom in such matters in this country.

"It is said that but one or two, if any, of the men who left the plaintiff's employment were under contract for any length of time. That, I think, makes no difference, under the recent decision of Wilcutt against Driscoll and others, where it was held to be illegal for a labor union to fine its own men if they worked in an open shop, though they worked by the day and could leave any night they chose.

"The difference between that case and this is simply that the labor union in that case threatened to impose a fine upon men if they stayed in an open shop; but imposing such a fine is no more compulsion, I think, than a threat on the well-grounded fear that if they do not leave the open shop, when ordered by the union, they will be subjected to the discipline of the union and be obliged to leave their employers, with the probable admitted difficulty of obtaining work wherever such union has an influential existence, as here.

"Upon all the evidence upon which I can rely in the case, I find, as I have said, that the strike was planned and ordered by the defendants' organization and its officers merely because the plaintiffs would not assent and agree to the propositions contained in said articles of agreement.

"I think the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction, restraining the defendants from in any way intimidating or inducing their workmen, whether members of the union or not to leave the employment of the plaintiffs for any reason shown in this case."

SUFFERING AND SHAME.

[EDITORIAL.]

One of the most deplorable features of the trade union movement is the suffering and deprivation it brings to hundreds of thousands of innocent women and children in the United States alone every year. While the union labor agitators are ranting about the benefits derived by the workingmen from the labor unions, innocent women and children, wives and offspring of union men, all over the country, are today living in wretchedness and poverty because the husbands and fathers have been forced into idleness through strikes ordered by union labor leaders to further their own selfish interests.

At the present time, thousands of unionites are out on strike. The majority of these men have wives and families. Few of them have laid by money for a "rainy day." The strike benefits are scarcely sufficient for the wants of a single man. What of the wives and children? Where are they going to get food, raiment and shelter? From the unions? No. The unions must support their leaders in idleness and luxury and have no funds with which to aid the starving wives and children of the men who go to make up the rank and file of labor unions. These poor women and children must appeal to charity for the necessities of life or starve. The women and children are no concern of the labor unions.

In Philadelphia, St. Louis and Chicago, thousands of women, members of the United Garment Workers' Union of America, have been out on strike. The majority of these women are the main support of widowed mothers or aged parents and younger brothers and sisters. Some are widows with little ones to support. It is safe to say that not one of these striking garment workers has a cent to fall back on. Winter is fasting approaching. The garment workers' busy season will soon be over and then will follow several weeks of enforced idleness even though the strike should be ended. Where is the money coming from to feed, clothe and shelter the aged parents, the widowed mothers and little ones through the long, cold winter months? From the unions? Hardly. The charitable organizations will be forced to care for these innocent victims of the labor unions. Many of them through pride or ignorance will fail to make their wants known to those who have it in their power to aid them. Such will slowly die of starvation or, becoming despondent, will put an end to their misery by committing suicide. There are many such cases on record. This winter will record many more. The labor unions and their selfish leaders will be directly responsible.

Every strike ordered by a labor union means suffering, deprivation, wretchedness, poverty and death to many innocent wives and children of union men. This has been the history of every strike. Today history is repeating itself in Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis and other great cities throughout the United States. Do you want to know something of the benefits of trade unionism? Then ask the thousands of mothers who have helplessly seen their little ones slowly starving because the husband and father was out on strike.

Do you want to know more about the benefits derived from the labor unions? Go to some poor widowed mother or aged parents whose daughters have been forced into lives of shame in order to keep the wolf from the door because the unions had deprived them from earning an honest livelihood. The little mounds in the potters' fields all over the country are monuments to the selfishness of the union agitators who rant of the benefits of trade unionism.

Go to our penitentiaries and talk with the men there in prison stripes who were driven to commit crime in order to provide for their wives and children after the unions had denied them the right to earn an honest living. Then visit the homes of these poor convicts and witness the struggle their wives are making to feed and clothe the little ones who must go through life bearing the stigma of their father's shame for which the unions are responsible.

Poor, innocent women and children, thousands of them annually "led as lambs to the slaughter" in order to satisfy the selfish ambitions of the union labor leaders who prate of the benefits of trade unionism!

THE DENVER STRIKE.

[EDITORIAL.]

In Denver the International Pressmen's Union ordered a strike on the three leading newspapers—the Post, the Republican and the Rocky Mountain News. The union demanded for its members larger wages than are paid anywhere else in the United States, $3.65 per day for journeymen, $4.32 for men in charge, and $7.00 for foreman, for eight hours work with a bonus for overtime and a bonus for expert work. To these terms the proprietors of the newspapers agreed. The strikers then demanded that the president of the Pressmen's Union, and not the proprietor of the newspaper, should be the judge of a workman's qualifications, and should dictate on which press he should work. At this the newspaper proprietors rebelled, negotiations were broken off, and non-union men were employed at union wages and for union hours of work.

The tyrannical employers, who insisted upon selecting their own employees and directing the work in their own establishments, had not, at last accounts, been boycotted, or picketed, or dynamited, nor had the non-union pressmen been killed, or were beaten to a jelly by the strikers.

For this noble tolerance in refraining from a resort to violence to establish their right to run their employers' business, the striking pressmen cannot be sufficiently commended. When it is considered that they might have dictated the subscription and advertising rates, and the politics of the Denver newspapers, and selected their editors and reporters, and fixed the wages to be paid to these mere scribblers, and might even have gone so far as to prescribe their religious views, their costumes, and their dinner menus, one cannot but admire the moderation of the strikers.

If laborers in other places, who are engaged in other avocations will take the same broad view as that taken by the Denver pressmen of the God-given, inalienable right of employees to run the business of their employers, a new social order will prevail and the laborer will come into his own, if in the meantime he does not come into the jail or the poor house.

RULE OR RUIN.

NO RESPECT FOR THE LAW.

SUCH IS THE DEMAND FOR THE CLOSED SHOP.

A Condition at San Francisco Shows How Property Owners Are Bled When Union Demands Are Granted and Extent Unionites Will Go to Control Employment.

The decision of Justice Goff of New York that a strike which demands a closed shop is a conspiracy in restraint of trade appears to carry no weight with the unionite followers of Gompers. Every strike involves the demand for a closed shop. In the settlement of labor disputes the unionites will readily yield their demand for increased wages, but they hold out for closed shop conditions. Gompers saw fit to ignore the decision of the courts, and his blind followers follow his example, and by their demands testify the small respect they have for the courts.

The great strike of express wagon drivers in New York and Newark, N. J., could have been settled ere this were the express companies willing to grant the demand for a recognition of the Teamsters' Union by agreeing to the demand for a closed shop. The mercantile interests of the two cities are suffering severely by the interruption of their business on account of the strike, but the demand for the closed shop prevents its settlement. A good example of what closed shop recognition means to a community is well described in the following from the San Francisco Argonaut regarding the demands of the plumbers of that city.

"The Argonaut hears of an interesting instance in exposition of the processes by which the life is being slowly strangled out of the industry of San Francisco. Here as in other cities there is a vast amount of pipe-laying for sewers, water mains, and multitudinous other purposes. This work has been done since time out of mind by forces of men who to a greater or less extent have become expert in it. They have learned how to handle themselves and how to handle heavy pipe in ditches; in short, they have learned the knack of this particular work, which, though requiring experience for its handy performance, is only indirectly related to the skilled trades. Formerly wages were $2.50 per day, but in recent times in conformity with the general upward movement the rate has been $3.50 per day. The men engaged in this work are almost constantly busy and they have been content with the conditions of their employment.

"But through the aggressive meddling of labor unionism there has come a disturbance in the ditch work line, tending first to throw the ditch workers out of their business, and second to double the cost of this kind of work. With the falling off of reconstruction in San Francisco, and with the general decline in industry, work in the plumbing trade has become slack. Many plumbers are out of work, and this has led the leaders of the Plumbers' Union to cast covetous eyes upon the operations of their industrial cousins, the ditch workers. The work of laying pipe in ditches is far from being the work of a plumber in the ordinary sense, and yet it has a certain relationship to the plumbing trade. The operations of plumbing are far more intricate and delicate, calling for skill rather than strength. A man may be a competent plumber without being half as effective in ditch work as a regular ditch worker. But the plumbers want the ditch work under their wage scale of $6 per day as against the ditch workers' scale of $3.50 per day. A demand has been made by the leaders of the Plumbers' Union for all pipe work in ditches, and the matter is up for determination to some one of the general labor "amalgamations," which is expected to decide against the ditch workers and in favor of the plumbers.

"If this reapportionment shall be made, the ditch workers will be thrown out altogether and their work will be turned over to the plumbers, whose wage rate is nearly double. Then, the plumbers will not be able to do the work so efficiently, which will add another element of cost. Whoever pays for the work will be "cinched" to the tune of practically double pay, while the humble ditch worker will be cast out upon the world to swell the ranks of unskilled laborers.

"The net result, in so far as it affects the general interest of the community, will be largely increased cost of pipe-laying wherever it is done in ditches. In this case the ultimate consumer is the general public. The logic of it is another nail in the coffin of San Francisco's industry."

In the garment workers strike at Chicago, the demands stipulate that the concerns hire only union cutters and tailors, provide forty-eight hours work a week for cutters, and fifty-four for tailors, and time and a half for overtime. No mention is made of wages. They will take care of the wage question after they get the closed shop.

Justice Goff supported his ruling with a recent decision of the State Court of Appeals against the Thompson, Starrett Company, a large building coporation which he cited as follows: "The Court of Appeals has held that it is against the policy of the State for employers who control practically the whole trade in a community to combine for the purpose of compelling workmen to join a particular union as a condition of employment. If the rule thus laid down be the law, and it must be accepted as such, being the latest expression of the Court of Appeals, it must be applicable to workmen as well as to employers. It would be repugnant to reason to hold that it applies to one and not to the other. If a combination of one to refuse employment, except on condition of joining a union, be against public policy, a combination of the other to cause refusal of employment, except on condition of joining a union, is alike against public policy."

The demand for a closed shop is thus an illegal one, and the granting of closed shop conditions by any employer of labor is also illegal. The demand for a closed shop is a demand that other equally competent workmen be deprived of the opportunity to work at their customary occupation. This is not a movement for the betterment of the condition of the workingmen of the country. It is a movement for the compulsory betterment of a comparatively small class at the expense of an infinitely larger number. Looked at from any standpoint such a movement has neither legal nor moral support.

Old-time Vegetable Delicacies.

It is well to remember that many plants which once were used as vegetables have been allowed to drop out of our bills of fare. Our forefathers, for instance, sometimes dined off elder top and burdock root, and the early shoots of the hop were considered a great delicacy and were cooked and eaten as asparagus.

Walter Jerold in his "Highways and Byways in Kent" recalls a time when Kentish children could "tell of many pleasant hours spent among the hedges in search of the wild hop top and of the wholesome suppers made upon the well-earned treasure ere they learned to think their food the better for being rare and costly."—[London Chronicle.

GATHERING AT PEKING OF SOLDIERS OF ALL GREAT NATIONS A UNIQUE MILITARY SITUATION IN CHINA

Military Representatives of the Powers Stationed at the Manchu Capital.

The photograph illustrates the unique situation at Peking, the capital of China, where soldiers of all the great nations are stationed. This group shows the commandants and officers of the various legation guards, the military attaches to the legation, and the military agents in Peking. The picture was taken in the grounds of the British Legation. It includes British, French, German, Russian, American and Japanese officers.

GETTING READY.

HOTEL GREEN IN SHIP SHAPE.

Large Crown City Hostelry Ready for Winter.

Unprecedented Tourist Rush Is Expected.

Realty Activity Is Excellent For the Season.

PASADENA, Nov. 19.—The new improvements in the Hotel Green, Southern California's largest tourist hotel, are rapidly nearing completion and by December 1 that famous hostlery will be ship shape from cellar to garret and ready for the big winter trade which is headed this way. Many excellent additions and changes have been made. The new Palm Room in the west building is an innovation of this part of the country. It consists of a great circular room, extending into the parked court which is connected with Central Park and is filled with beautiful flower beds and shrubbery. The entire rotunda is glass, the glass panels extending from near the floor to the roof. The lower part is finished in Vermont onyx, the upper part of the side walls being tinted in pale green, while the ceiling will be paneled in white.

The extension of the big dining-room in the west building is a very valuable addition. The total seating capacity is 650 people at one time. The interior has been changed from old rose and salmon to a light gray, with gold trimmings, which adds much to the elegance of the room.

The new sun parlor on the south side of the west building, and the open air porch will be greatly appreciated by the guests. These overlook Central Park. The dining-room in the east building has been converted into an arcade, tea and billiard-room. Three booths have been built in the room. One will be occupied by L. P. Hollander & Co., of New York and Boston, the well-known gown and millinery house. Another will be occupied by Warring, Scott & Co., of St. Paul, novelties, leather goods and antique jewelry. The third will be used by Max Litturlits of New York, for an exhibition of laces and embroidery.

Fred Harvey has leased the two large parlors in the east building for an exhibition of curios and Indian relics. The stock exchange room in the parlor next the Santa Fe depot has been fitted up with a regulation stock blackboard and will be operated by E. F. Hutton & Co., with W. E. Gratten as manager.

"We expect to do the best business in the history of the hotel this season," said G. A. Viles, chief clerk, yesterday. He arrived last week and has charge of getting the house ready for opening. During the past summer Mr. Viles had charge of the famous Profiel House in the White Mountains. "The Santa Fe railroad officials advise us they have the largest bookings ever made for California," he said. "I saw several tourist agents in New York last week and they all assured me that we will have a very heavy business this winter. Our bookings are the best they have ever been at this time of the year. Our house will open quietly December 1, but our season opening will not take place until about December 15. D. B. Plumer, the manager, will be here about November 28, and Col. G. G. Green and family are expected about the middle of December."

Several real estate sales were made during the past week. Lloyd Macy, secretary of the W. R. Staats Company, purchased a lot at the corner of Orange Grove avenue and Palmetto Drive, the consideration being about $4000.

Roy Macomber sold to The Hogan Company, a lot in Oak Knoll for $4500. The site has a frontage of 150 feet on Eliot Drive and will be improved with a handsome residence during the winter.

The home place of William T. Davis in Prospect Park has been sold to Dr. T. B. Cooke, of Chicago, for $10,000. It is one of the prettiest homes in the park.

Dr. Beyer of Chicago has purchased a lot at the corner of Los Robles avenue and Howard Place, the consideration being $1625. He will build a $3500 residence.

The Citizens' Realty Company sold a fine lot on South Madison avenue just south of California street, for Rush Hawks to Mrs. Anderson, the price paid being $2500. The property adjoins the Simons place. It is 75 by 200 feet and will be improved with a $4000 house.

Building permits for the first half of this month totaled $72,560, which is an excellent showing. At the same rate the permits for the month should be in the neighborhood of $150,000. Among the permits taken out during the past few days are those of Mrs. H. Newby, five-room bungalow, No. 30 South Bonnie avenue, $1250; Myrn A. Gilman, six-room bungalow, No. 722 North Michigan, $2000; Dr. Thomas J. Orbison, addition to residence, No. 208 South Grand avenue, $4000; C. C. Lownie, seven-room residence, No. 1045 North Los Robles avenue, $2000; C. Perry Harris, nine-room frame residence, No. 931 South El Molino avenue, $5000; Mrs. L. F. Stalker, eight-room bungalow, No. 511 North Mentor avenue, $2500; J. Frank Bowen, six-room bungalow, No. 541 East Villa street, $3000.

LARGE WAREHOUSE PLANNED.

Fireproof Structure to Be Erected on Palm Between Pico and Fourteenth.

R. A. Rowan & Co. have just closed a lease for a period of fifteen years, covering a four-story fire proof warehouse, 50x120 feet, to be erected on Palm street, between Pico and Fourteenth, by Mrs. E. O. McLaughlin, for the firm of Burger & Burger. The building will cost about $35,000.

The floors are to have a capacity of 250 pounds per square foot. A freight elevator of 5000 pounds capacity will be installed in an inclosed cage, eight by thirteen feet, fitted with fire-proof roll shutters on each floor.

The stairs are to be of reinforced concrete, and all entrances will be inclosed and fitted with fire-proof doors. Plans are now being completed by A. C. Martin, architect.

THE VALUE OF PANAMA.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

American interest in Panama must necessarily be acute by reason of its just position to that great world work of the century, the American Panama Canal. It is all essential that our relations with this youngest but one of the world's republics shall be close and cordial. Moreover, there is a great wealth of undeveloped resources in that country and American capital is always seeking profitable and safe employment, furthermore, since the establishment of the republic, following its separation from Colombia, a large trade has arisen between it and the United States.

AMERICAN TRADE.

The following Bureau of Statistics figures give our trade with Panama as:

Fiscal year.	Exports to	Imports from
1904	$ 979,724	$ 440,747
1905	4,745,562	812,154
1906	12,460,289	1,065,887
1907	16,150,953	1,752,814
1908	18,232,666	1,469,344
1909	16,797,530	1,676,984
1910	20,596,371	2,329,139

While it is true that part of these growing exports arise by reason of our canal operations, yet the fact remains that in the six years quite a large trade has been built up between us in articles necessary for use at both ends of the line. As our relations become closer that trade will naturally increase and considerably so. Panama needs our help and support and we need the use of her resources and the buying trade of her people.

PANAMA CITY.

Panama City is the capital of the country, and the center of its trade and influence. The city is the seat of a bishop and several consulates, and has a cathedral, ruined convents, a Jesuit college and a university founded in 1751. It has no actual port, but vessels anchor safely between the mainland and a chain of islands. It is situated on a coral peninsula running into the Gulf of Panama. Founded near the Pacific Coast in 1518 by Pedro Arias Davila, Panama became wealthy in the days of the Peruvian mines, and was the oldest and richest colony in America in 1671, when it was taken, looted, and burned by the English buccaneer, Sir Henry Morgan. The present city, six miles from the site of the old, was built two years after, and with its granite fortifications, now in ruins, was long the strongest Spanish fortress on the Pacific. The rush of gold seekers to California in 1849 renewed its prosperity somewhat and in 1855 procured for it railroad connections (now the property of the United States,) with the Atlantic port of Colon; nearly 100,000 passengers and 1,000,000 tons of freight landed by about 1000 steamships are annually carried by this American road. Besides this mere reshipping business the road has the larger part of the export trade of Panama.

Exports to the United States consist chiefly of India rubber, cocobolo nuts, bananas, turtle shells, ivory nuts, deer skins, hides, and coffee. Imports from this country are mainly dry goods, provisions, coal, lumber, kerosene, hardware, liquors and canal supplies.

AREA AND POPULATION.

With an area of 31,500 square miles and an extent east and west of 480 miles, the Republic of Panama has a population of about 300,000 of the most heterogeneous sort, outside of the Canal Zone. There are many people of Spanish and Indian descent; and especially on the Atlantic Coast, a number of English-speaking negroes and mulattoes. Panama City has a population of about 40,000 and Colon (or Aspinwall) one of about 5000.

Panama is bounded on the north by

Sounds of revelry by night are to usher in the Santa Monica automobile road race Thanksgiving morning. Thousands of gayly dressed women are to witness the parade of motor cars, the vaudeville performance, enjoy the midnight dance and sip the nectar of the ocean breezes near a huge bonfire.

From midnight when the cannons boom until the starter's gun is fired at daybreak there will be something doing every minute. A football game, truck contest, tug-of-war and a balloon ascension are among the features promised for the meet that should outrival the greatest Vanderbilt Cup Race ever held.

Vaudeville is to be provided on a stage in front of the monster grandstands. In the rear of the stand a dance hall, well lighted and with the floor carefully waxed, will provide entertainment for those who enjoy good music. The palmiest of the Vanderbilt race nights should be surpassed by the entertainment provided for those who are to gather at the seashore.

There is a question in the minds of many as to which is causing the greatest comment, the night carnival or the day races. The revelry along the ocean front makes a hit with thousands. The attendance promises to be greater than was ever recorded for any automobile meet held this side of the Rocky Mountains.

For each Vanderbilt race thousands have always flocked to the course hours before the start. Throngs have waited through the dark hours for the snap of the gun that sent the first car away. Instead of a long dreary wait at Santa Monica, bands will play, snappy music will be sounded across the home stretch, and there will be something to attract the autoist every second.

The tryouts on the course were begun Friday. The road has proved itself to be faster than it was for the last contest. Road records should be smashed, say those who have speeded over the road and there is every reason to believe that the Apperson's record will be pounded to pieces.

Hundreds of motor parties are expected to visit Santa Monica today to look over the course. The billiard table surface is in prime condition. The police will allow no speeding. The road course can be traversed at slow speed but any attempt at racing will be stopped as the speed cops are to be on hand to prevent dangerous work.

Bert Dingley, who is to drive the Pope-Hartford, one of the fastest cars in the road race, says the course is faster than it was last year. With Marjorie Rambeau in the car Dingley made a speed of ninety miles an hour on the Palisades. The car hummed over the roads at terrific speed but the charming actress was not frightened.

The Pope is speedy. It is a duplicate of the car which Dingley drove in the Vanderbilt race. It looks the part of a fast speedster and Dingley is just the man to send this car to victory. The motor is one of the fastest ever turned out by the Pope people and according to Wild Bill Ruess is absolutely stock. This is one of the cars that should be watched on the day of the races.

The Lozier, with Teddy Tetzlaff at the wheel, is a likely contestant. It is as fast as the Pope and if Tetzlaff is willing to take the turns slowly there is no reason why he should not win the big car event. The Lozier is a favorite with a large number as the car is one of the likeliest entrants in the big class and should make a remarkable showing.

The local Lozier agency is banking on the big race at Santa Monica. The Lozier is expected to win. Tetzlaff understands the car perfectly and is a heady driver. His car is fast, as fast as any motor in the race. This means that the chances of the Lozier are equal to those of any car in the main event on Thanksgiving Day. Tetzlaff made a great showing yesterday when he speeded over the roads at a terrific clip.

The Apperson, winner of last year's Santa Monica road race, is entered again and Leon T. Shettler has added another Apperson to his stable. This means that the local Apperson man has two chances to one of winning the big event. Hanshue is the favorite because of his knowledge of the course.

With Hanshue at the wheel of the Apperson the chances of the fleet motor are at the top notch. The car is faster than ever. The races at Phoenix proved that "Han" still has his nerve with him. He is in perfect shape for the run of his life and is ready for fast work as this may be the last race of his career. Mrs. Hanshue wishes her husband to quit the dangerous game. The Santa Monica Road Race, if won by Hanshue, will more than likely see the great driver finish as a motor racer.

The Knox with Joe Nikrent in charge is the choice of a large number of motorists. The car is as fast as any machine in the meet. Nikrent had hard luck in the Phoenix race and he wants to redeem himself. He is making good time in the practice stunts and is ready for the fast work on Thursday. The car is in perfect shape and should make a hit on the road on Thanksgiving Day.

Charley Soules is to drive the Isotta. Stafford Bixby has secured a man who is willing to take a chance. Soules has had hard luck in his races here but he has shown his nerve at all times and is ready to take a chance. The Isotta looks fit to win any event on the road and Soules is the man who will get every atom of speed out of the splendid speedster on which Bixby bases all his hopes.

The Franklin, with Bruno Seibel in charge is entered in one of the big races. Seibel drove the Chadwick into second place last year and this time the air-cooled car is to have a man who knows how to handle a machine in a race. Seibel is practicing each day with the machine which took second place in the Phoenix race.

One of the late entries in the races, the Fiat, is to be driven by H. Gabriel. The foreign racer is fast and should figure at the finish. The Mercer in the medium car race is the favorite. C. H. Bigelow is to drive the car and he has it in shape for fast work.

The entries in the four events follow in the order in which they are to be started. The cars, drivers and piston displacement are given.

SPEED KING IS SHOWING FIGHT.

BARNEY OLDFIELD READY TO RACE AT MOTORDROME.

Ruling of the Automobile Association of America May Force Champion Into Permanent Outlawry if New York Officials Persist in Driving Him from Sanctioned Meets.

Will Barney Oldfield be reinstated to good standing in the American Automobile Association or will he have to remain an outlaw and continue his fight against the New Yorkers who dominate the auto racing game?

That is the question that not only worries King Barney, but has got the Motordrome officials and the auto sport followers guessing today.

Oldfield has applied for reinstatement and for several days the telegraph wires between New York and Los Angeles have been kept hot.

Chairman S. M. Butler of the American Automobile Association contest committee informed Manager Hempel of the Motordrome that Oldfield's name could not be used in any advertising whatever. Hempel informed Butler that Barney Oldfield had an ironclad contract with the Motordrome which could not be broken, despite the wishes of the controlling body, and furthermore asked that Oldfield be reinstated in time to be advertised as the star of the November meet at the Motordrome.

Should the powers that be refuse to reinstate Barney there will be but one course for him to pursue and that will be an action in the courts restraining the American Automobile Association from interfering with him carrying out his part of the contract with the Motordrome.

Should the Motordrome decide to make good its contract with Oldfield then there will be but one action for it to take and that will be to turn outlaw itself and pull the meet off with Barney as the star.

After all is weighed and considered it looks as though Oldfield would race Saturday and Sunday regardless of what becomes of his reinstatement application.

Oldfield expressed his view of the situation yesterday in the following statement:

"I said when I came here that I intended to race and I haven't changed my mind. The Motodrome knows the contract I have and they also know that unless I am reinstated the meet scheduled for Saturday and Sunday will have to be run as an outlaw event.

"To a man up a tree it looks mighty like the American Automobile Association was going a step too far in its endeavor to punish me. The Motordrome is the fastest track in the world and it ought to be kept in commission, even if the New York outfit that controls the racing sport without much consideration for the Pacific Coast thinks that I did commit a technical wrong when I rode in an unsanctioned race meet."

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

Plenty of Fun Planned in Turkey Day Events.

Automobile races—Four contests, first one starting at 6 a.m., Santa Monica road course.

Boxing—Main event, twenty rounds, between Danny Webster and Charley White, Vernon Arena, on Santa Fe avenue. Preliminary at 2 o'clock.

Baseball—McCormicks and Vernons of Winter League. Game called at 2:30 o'clock. Vernon grounds on Santa Fe avenue.

Tennis—Mid-winter tournament on courts of Hollywood Hotel. First match at 1:30 o'clock.

Golf—Choice score handicap play at Los Angeles Country Club, Pico street and Western avenue. Play at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Harness racing—Tournament Park, Pasadena, under the auspices of the Pasadena Driving Club. First race at 1:30 o'clock.

Football—Fiesta Park, Pico street and Grand avenue, Pomona High School and Los Angeles High. Time, 1:30 o'clock. Whittier and All-Stars, Bovard Field. Time, 1:30 o'clock.

Citizens of Los Angeles and vicinity will have enough in the amusement line to interest them on Thanksgiving Day, for the programme of sports that is offered is sufficiently varied to please all tastes. There will be something doing every minute of the day if rain does not interfere, and there is enough carded to keep one busy from daylight until dark.

The first show of the day is to start at 6 o'clock in the morning in the first of four automobile races over the Santa Monica road course, and the other contests are to continue at intervals of two hours. It is the intention to have the racing finished by 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The members of the Los Angeles Country Club are to play golf all day on the course on West Pico street in the customary holiday choice score handicap medal play contest, while in the afternoon there will be tennis at the Hotel Hollywood, a Winter League ball game at the Vernon grounds, football at Fiesta Park and Bovard Field and harness horse racing at Tournament Park, Pasadena. Any part of the long programme holds something of interest.

TOO BAD.

HANSHUE ILL, MAY NOT RACE.

FAMOUS APPERSON PILOT IN BED AND CAR IS NOT HERE.

Ryus of the Leon T. Shettler Staff Returns from Phoenix with Sales and a Good Report — Agency Is Landed by Whitman for Crown City—Business Good.

Harris Hanshue is sick in bed. It is a question whether he will be able to drive in the Santa Monica road race. He said yesterday that he intends to get well in time. The Apperson car that is on the way from the factory for the Santa Monica road race may not arrive in time, and the car Hanshue won so many races with at Phoenix is being tuned up for the Santa Monica course. If the car Hanshue drove in the Vanderbilt arrives even the day before the race it will be started.

As a result of the remarkable showing made by the Apperson "Jackrabbit" on the track at Phoenix a contract was made with the Phoenix Cycle Company to handle Apperson cars in Maricopa county. H. D. Ryus placed the agency for this line and besides doing this came back from Phoenix with two retail orders for cars.

Another large garage and salesroom is to be erected in Pasadena. The Reo and Apperson line is to be housed in this structure. The prospects for trade in the Crown City are so good that Leon T. Shettler has decided to devote some of the efforts of his big sales force toward developing the Apperson and the Reo lines in the San Gabriel Valley district.

M'CREDIE FINED.

NATIONAL BOARD UPHOLDS JUDGE GRAHAM'S DECISION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The decision of Judge Thomas F. Graham of the Pacific Coast League in the Gus Hetling case was affirmed by the National Board Friday and the Spokane and Portland Clubs each were fined $100 for farming a player.

President Graham ruled that Portland had no right to play Hetling after having sent him to the Spokane Club of the Northwestern League. The ruling was made on a protest by Manager Wolverton of Oakland and three games which Portland won against that team, and in which Hetling played were forfeited to Oakland.

These games were declared by President Graham forfeited to Oakland. Judge Graham holding this ruling justified by the fact that McCredie had been warned the first time he played Hetling not to do so again, but had persisted. The McCredies appealed from Judge Graham's ruling.

The National Board holds that Judge Graham's ruling was correct in every particular and finds further that Portland and Spokane are each guilty of having violated the rule against farming a player.

It was shown that Hetling had signed a contract with Spokane, while the McCredies claimed he had not been released by Portland. Their contention in this regard was accepted and so they were held guilty merely of farming Hetling.

BARNEY READY FOR MAD DASH.

Barney Wants Fast Record on the Motordrome.

Thirty-five Seconds Mark for His Blitzen Benz.

Fast Card of Races Planned for the Opening.

With automobile racing in the East at an end, the gasoline world has turned its attention to the Pacific Coast where on November 26 and 27 on the Los Angeles Motordrome the winter racing season is to begin with a series of contests and record trials that promise to startle the automobile world.

Every make of machine from the great 200-H. P. Blitzen Benz to the little Ford, and every class of driver from the veteran speed king, Barney Oldfield, to the budding novice will be on hand to battle for honor and glory and the gold that the Motordrome has hung up in prizes.

Both in regard to number of entries and class of drivers and cars the Motordrome management has far exceeded the best efforts of last spring when the new board track was opened. Even Speed King Barney has added to his attractive racing stable, and will show for the first time a foreign creation known as the "Prince Henry" Benz. This car has an enviable record made in Europe to its credit and is looked upon as one of the most attractive machines in the world today.

Barney also has with him three other cars, including the great 200-H. P. Lightning Benz racing machine, the car with which he established the world's speedway record on the Los Angeles Motordrome last spring and later lowered it at the Indianapolis speedway, where he drove a mile in 35 and 63-100 seconds.

Barney has come to the Coast with blood in his eye and is prepared to take a greater risk than ever before again to bring the coveted speedway mark to Los Angeles. He is in better condition than on his previous visit to his home here in Los Angeles.

Barney believes that he can establish a record of 35 seconds for the Motordrome and he will aim to hit this mark on one or both of the days of the opening meet, November 26 and 27.

KNOX GIANT.

Oldfield will also be seen in the stock car events and the two-hour race at the wheel of his Knox giant, the great six-cylinder stock car with which he established the world's speed record at Ormond beach and later won the National five and ten-mile championships at the Indianapolis Motor speedway.

Oldfield will enter his new Prince Henry Benz in all the class stripped chassis events and will undoubtedly be a big factor in all the races in which he is eligible.

A long list of well known drivers follows Oldfield's name in the field of pilots who will compete in the attractive list of competitions and speed trials.

Probably the greatest interest will center in the showing of the Coast stars who are to endeavor to overthrow the invaders from the East in the stock car events.

Charles Soules and Joe Nikrent, at the wheels of an Isotta and a Knox, are looked upon as the favorites in several races and with an even break in luck they ought to finish the double dose of speeding with a full share of glory and gold to their credit.

Of the Eastern drivers coming George Clarke is among the best known. He will bring a Cutting racing car and a little stock machine and with his many successful years of experience in track speeding he ought to prove a big star.

Clarke is the only driver in the world who has been awarded a hero medal for bravery on the race track. A year ago at San Antonio during the International fair meet there Clarke deliberately drove over a forty foot embankment to save the life of a friend who had met with an accident on the track in front of him.

Clarke's bravery on that occasion was brought vividly to the minds of the auto fans in San Antonio this fall when Tobin De Hymel, the famous Indian driver, went over the embankment at the same place that Clarke did and was killed.

Clarke's cars were shipped several days ago and are expected early this week.

DIAMOND TIRE RECORD RUN.

Manager F. O. Nelson of the Diamond Rubber Company has received a letter from T. J. Baldwin of Portland, Ore., in which the statement is made that after running his Haynes car on Diamond tires for 2500 miles he had driven from St. Paul to Portland, making more than 6000 miles. W. J. Morris of Tacoma also writes to Nelson giving some interesting tire history. He says he used a Diamond tire one year on a rent car on the front wheel and one year on the rear wheel. The tire was then retreaded once and is still in good shape.

AT HOLLYWOOD.

BUNDY AND M'LOUGHLIN TO FURNISH BIG MATCH.

The annual Mid-Winter Tennis Tournament that is to be held on the courts of the Hollywood Hotel Thanksgiving Day, to continue through the Friday and Saturday following, is expected to be a big thing.

Friends of Tom Bundy and Maurice McLoughlin are working up much enthusiasm over the match the two men are scheduled to play. McLoughlin is a northern man while Bundy resides in Los Angeles, and naturally sectional pride is no small element in the contest. The San Francisco contingent is strong for McLoughlin and say that he will give Bundy the game of his life. The latter is one of the best men in the United States and was challenger for the national singles championship during the current year.

Claude A. Wayne, Stanley S. Anderson and Frank S. Hoover, the tournament committee, are having the courts put in the best of condition and additional seats are to be arranged for the accommodation of the spectators.

A parking place has been provided for autos, as it is expected that a large number of tennis devotees will witness the automobile races from their machines along the course Thanksgiving morning and for that reason no games are scheduled for the forenoon.

In the afternoon, beginning at 1:30 o'clock, the gentlemen's doubles are to be played and on Friday beginning at the same hour the mixed doubles are to be contested. The tournament is to be concluded on Saturday with the ladies' singles starting at 10 a. m. and the special matches at 1:30 p. m.

A dinner is to be tendered the players in the evening after which a dance will be given at the hotel in their honor.

RUGBY IS COMPULSORY.

Rugby football has been made compulsory at the State University of Kansas this fall. The faculty at that place tried to introduce the game, but as no other schools in the Middle West would adopt it the only way the school authorities could enforce their ruling was to make it compulsory. This is the first university in the Central West to take up the English game, but it is predicted that other colleges will fall in line in a short number of years.

GOOD NEWS.

MORE MOTORS ARE NEEDED.

FACTORY OFFICIAL SOUNDS NOTE OF WARNING.

Says There Will Be Shortage of Cars This Coming Season and Predicts That General Reduction in Price Will Not Take Place—Cars Are to be Better Than Ever.

J. G. Bayerline, vice-president and general manager of the Warren Motor Car Company, reached this city last week and plans to spend a month with Volney S. Beardsley, president of the California Automobile Company. He is to study coast conditions before his return. He expects to spend this week, or at least a part of the week, in San Francisco, and will return with Beardsley in time for the Santa Monica road race.

Few men are in closer touch with automobile trade conditions than Bayerline. Speaking of the outlook for the future he said:

"There has been considerable talk about the possibility of a general reduction in prices for 1911. This need not be looked for as it will only occur in the same form as in past years. The reduction in price comes in a larger car, a better motor, and a more stylish machine for the same price.

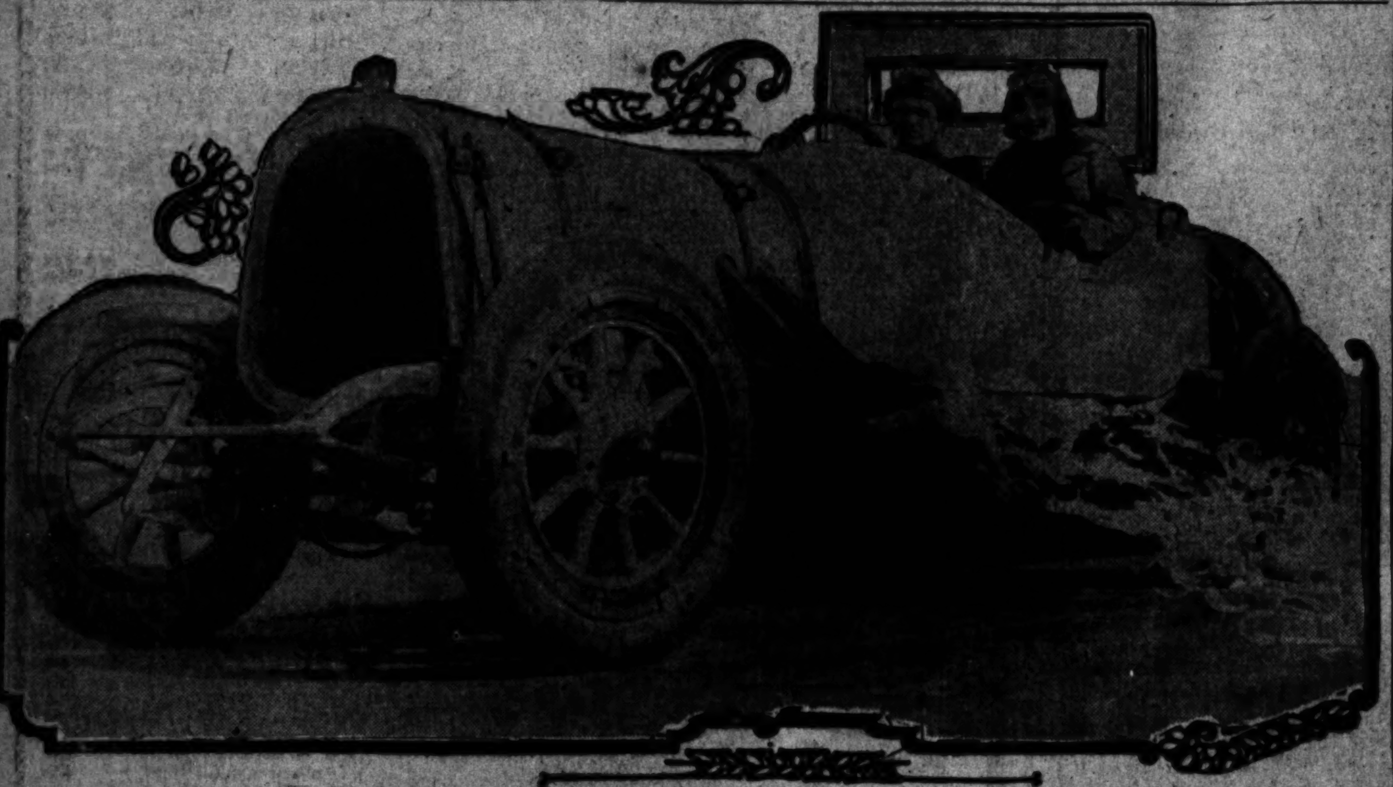
"Reduction in price is a reality but not in the way as certain people would have us believe it has come. We are getting a car with greater horse-power, a machine with more complete equipment, and a more stylish finish at a price which is less in some instances than it was last year. The demand each year has been for better and more completely equipped motor cars. The car of today, with its cheap maintenance and complete equipment is being sold for at least half the price the car would have brought if it could have been produced five years ago.

"Most of the factories sold all their 1910 cars and most of the dealers disposed of their models. Some of the concerns which did not sell all the 1910 models chopped prices and this caused a depression for a few months. Now that it has become generally known that there is to be no reduction in certain lines of cars the trade is picking up and becoming normal again. I predict there will be a shortage in automobiles in 1911.

"During the past few months several concerns which outgrew the capital stock failed. Others have acted cautiously. The parts manufacturers and the factories are not prepared as in former years for a rush in trade. From nearly every corner of this country comes the word of news that there are more prospective purchasers than there ever was before. The manufacturers formerly were working night and day to get cars ahead for winter deliveries. Now they are only making cars as fast as the dealers order them.

"The prospective buyer is waiting while some of the dealers are slow in ordering. The trade is bound to come and when it does there will be disappointement. I am in the heart of the automobile industry and know what I say when I predict the 1911 supply of automobiles will fall short. Dealers who are financially able to carry the stock are making no mistake in specifying for early deliveries.

"Those who expect to purchase 1911 cars will miss it if the choice is not made early. I am well pleased with the business we secured from the Coast and it is a trade we appreciate. We expect to take care of it to the best of our ability."



Bert Dingley and Miss Marjorie Rambeau in the Fast Pope-Hartford.

The car was snapped after Dingley had been driving at a speed of ninety miles an hour on the Santa Monica race course.

RENTON'S BROAD SMILE.

Overland Agent Selling His Cars and Keeping Tab on the Trade Which Looks Good.

P. A. Renton is making a sensation with his novel sales campaign and is landing scores of Overland cars in his large territory. His friends believe he will make good with the 600 cars he has ordered and Renton himself says there is no question about the matter. He is not worried in the least and says he is having an easier time than he had last year.

The Overland line is attractive. The cars are being brought here in steady shipments. They have all the refinement of the latest 1911 models and are more stylish and snappy than ever. The three-speed forward sliding gear transmission Overlands have made a hit and Renton is pleased with the machines.

John Widrin, sales manager for the Renton Motor Car Company, reports a number of sales during the past week. The Overland cars, he says, are moving fast and he finds it is easier to sell machines this year than it has ever been before. He says the interest being taken in motor cars now is twice as great as it was a year ago.

According to the salesman it seems to be an easy matter to dispose of the more than half a thousand cars which Renton has ordered from the Overland factory. The salesroom of the P. A. Renton Company is to be cleared this week and other shipments must be brought in at once to keep the supply up to the demand.

Experienced Motorists Drive

¶ The majority of Stearns owners have driven other makes. They have finally come to the Stearns because, as they say—"It's the ultimate car." These men KNOW motor car value. They know what is necessary in automobile construction—and they realize their ideals in the Stearns.

¶ The Stearns is purchased to keep—to be used year after year, not to be traded in. It is built for severe service—service that a motor car seldom encounters. That Stearns design is right and Stearns construction the best, is admitted by every man conversant with automobiles.

A Popular Stearns Model

¶ The 15-30 H. P. Stearns Model is a most popular one. It has all the best qualities of Stearns construction—and Stearns cars have been built since 1896. Although rated at 15-30 horse power, its motor develops more than 35, allowing extreme speed when desired.

¶ Flexibility has been developed to a marked degree. The small distance necessary to turn this car—less than 36 feet for the complete

Ford Crossing the Colorado at Ehrenburg.

Below, the car is shown as it appeared after the return drive from Phoenix. E. Roger Stearns is at the wheel.

Stearns tried a run from San Bernardino. With a stop at Cucamonga, where the wires were changed from the Tourist battery to the Ford storage plant the machine made a fast spin. From San Bernardino to Los Angeles sixty-two miles, the car made the trip in 1 hr. 55 min.

When the Ford reached home it was working perfectly, and Stearns was particularly pleased with the performance of the car. The little machine is to be exhibited at the automobile show to be given at Shrine Auditorium December 12.

Horine with the Parry reached home Sunday night after waiting at San Bernardino for the rain to stop. He made a good run from Phoenix, and left cars which started with him stranded on the desert.

WORDS SOUND GOOD.

COMES HOME FROM NORTH.

HARRISON SAYS GREAT MARKET OPENED IN CALIFORNIA.

Demand for the Peerless and Everitt Lines Greater at this Season of the Year Than it Has Ever Been Before and Williams Arranges for Extra Shipments.

H. O. Harrison has returned from another flying trip to Seattle and the surrounding country. He says the territory in the great Northwest is better than ever this year. He has secured the agency for the Peerless and Everitt lines on the entire Pacific Coast and in the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines.

More cars are being sold this year by the H. O. Harrison Company than at the beginning of any other season. The Peerless machines cannot be brought here fast enough, and Manager Thomas Williams of the local branch has been sold out for some time. He received a carload of Peerless machines last week, and is keeping them on the floor for display until he can get more cars ahead. He has booked a large number of advance orders as a result of the rush.

While Harrison was in the North there was a demand for the cars which was greater than it has ever been at the opening of a season. As a result Williams hastened his advance order for automobile show stock, and then changed the request to cars for the trade. He must now bring his show cars here by express in order to get the Peerless models in time to make a good showing.

The fore-door Everitt models have proved a sensation. The stylish cars are all that the factory promised they would be. Harrison is a large stockholder in the Metzger Motor Company, manufacturers of the Everitt cars. He is able to secure extra shipments, but the demand for the machines in San Francisco is even greater than it is in Los Angeles, and Harrison has sold all cars in the Bay City. He says he will break his mark in this city before the year is over.

The torpedo type of body and the gentleman's roadster models are handsome Everitt cars that are attracting attention. Williams expects another shipment of Everitt cars this coming week.

COSTLY PRIZES.

SILVER TROPHIES READY FOR SANTA MONICA RACE.

TWO HANDSOME trophies are again offered for the Santa Monica road race. The Dick Ferris trophy, a $1000 cup which was won last year by Harris Hanshue in the Apperson, which broke all records, and the Leon T. Shettler trophy, which was won by Bert Dingley in the Chalmers-Detroit. These cups are again hung up and both Ferris and Shettler agree to give them, the former for the heavy car race and the latter for the light car event.

When the light car event was split up Shettler at first was not enthusiastic. He determined to give his cup, however, again and it is ready for the victor. He at first did not like having the light event split in half. In a statement yesterday he said:

"In the interest of the sport and to get more entries into the Santa Monica race, Dick Ferris found it necessary to split the light car event into two classes, one being for cars with 231 inches and under piston displacement, and one for cars of 231 and 300 inches piston displacement, the latter class being the one which will be known as the light car event, and which will carry the Leon T. Shettler perpetual challenge trophy.

"I can only explain my entire change of attitude in regard to this matter by saying that I feel in a measure responsible for the Santa Monica race and for getting the dealers into it.

"With sincerity I hope that the general public will appreciate the efforts and expense that the Dealers Association is putting forth to make the Santa Monica Road Race the best contested event in the United States. We have the prettiest and fastest course in America. We have as good cars competing in this as competed in the Vanderbilt or Savannah races, as will be shown by the average time made.

"Now all we want is the public's enthusiastic support to show us that they appreciate good, square well-regulated automobile races. Attendance at races last year was disappointing. There is hardly a town of half the size in the United States that would not have turned out double the amount of people to see as classy an event as was pulled off last year. This is the first criticism I have offered along this line. My association and I, as manager of this event, took our medicine without a whimper. There is no question, however, but what events of this kind will have to be better patronized or about as near as we will get to them is a newspaper report of one happening somewhere else on the Coast.

"There is an old saying among showmen that this ith the hardest twon in the world to get out a crowd for an open air event. Why this is so is something that I cannot understand, but in as-much as the Dealers Association is giving them the best kind of racing that can be offered, it is certainly up to the general public to turn out and show us that they are with us.

"There is not a man in the Santa Monica race this year that is not out for blood. There has never been any question in any event sanctioned by the Automobile Dealers Association of this city about its honesty; never a bit of scandal connected with our events, and this is one of the few cities in the United States where such a statement can be made."

THERE'S RUGBY LEFT.

The usual big Thanksgiving football games will be minus in Los Angeles this year. With St. Vincent's out of the game and the college conference schedule over, the general public who usually come out for the big Thanksgiving game will have to seek some other form of amusement.

BRIGHT GLOWS AT AUTO SHOW.

Scintillating Glitter in Auditorium Dome.

California Garden a Background for Motors.

Elaborate Display Planned By the Dealers.

Shrine Auditorium is to be transformed into a California garden scene for the automobile show to be given by the Los Angeles Motor Dealers' Association from December 12 to 17. An army of decorators is to take full charge tomorrow morning and the transformation of the auditorium is to be begun and rushed a finish for the opening. Manager Walter Hempel plans to have everything in place on the night of December 11 in order to throw the show open to the crowds.

Fifty exhibitors are to have their 1911 models in place on the floor of the exhibit room. The show promises to eclipse the one held by the same dealers in the Grand avenue rink building. Thousands of dollars are to be spent putting the motor car salon in shape for the display which Hempel is planning. The committeemen of the association are assisting Hempel to house what should be an automobile classic.

Most of the unlicensed cars represented in Los Angeles are to be shown in the immense auditorium. Several of the well known makes of licensed cars are also to be exhibited. In addition to the cars there is to be a large showing of the accessories and supply firms. This part of the show is to be in the balcony. It is to be carefully displayed in detail and should be an interesting part of the large exhibit.

The latest 1911 models are to be here for the Shrine Auditorium automobile show. Some of the cars have arrived and others are on the way. The special late models from the factory are not to reach here until the week of the show. These will include the torpedo type of bodies, the foredoor models, the landaulets, limousines, runabouts and raceabouts—in fact all of the novel turnouts which the East has been enjoying for the last few weeks.

PAPA'S CHANCE.

Coming a week before Christmas the automobile shopping can be enjoyed by those who are planning to make present at the holiday season of the year. Maids and matrons can lead fathers and husbands about the show telling them the advantages of the stylish coupe and of the landaulet or limousine. The possibility is that papa would enjoy the roadster or runabout types better. There will be a wide choice.

The holiday spirit is to prevail both in the musical and the amusement programme. There is to be enough doing to keep everybody busy from the moment the show is opened until the last toot of the auto horns when the show is closed.

The Decoration Committee has two plans, one which calls for the transforming of the entire building into a California garden and the other for the California garden effect on the ground floor, with a Japanese garden in the balcony. The upper floor lends itself to this scheme and there is an opportunity, Hempel believes, to make an unusually attractive feature of the auto exhibit in this way.

The main entrance to the Shrine Auditorium will be from Jefferson street. On entering the exhibits are to be seen stretching away into two sections with the edge at the far end of the hall. There will be a band playing from the stage, an orchestra in the balcony and other features which should make a decided hit. Immense streamers of greenery are to hang from the ceiling and the pillars are to be hidden under wreaths of flowers. Around the sides will be a forest of palms.

BRIGHT LIGHTS.

Perhaps the most beautiful part of the exhibit will be the electrical display. Already the building is well lighted. The committee has arranged for thousands of additional globes, which should make the interior as bright as day. The myriad lights grouped in the dome of the structure are to be focused on the kings of the highway on the floor below.

Meetings of the Show Committee are being held each week to consider every point of the show work. Some of the sub-committees are holding daily sessions. Nothing is being left undone to make the exhibit a real success. The musical entertainment is elaborate. The committee consists of George R. Whitcomb, H. A. Butterfield, and F. S. Lincke. During the afternoons and evenings there is to be a band on the stage and a string orchestra in the balcony.

Monday is to be Pasadena day. Tuesday is Riverside and Redlands day; Wednesday is to be turned over to the Shriners; Thursday is to the society night; Friday Santa Barbara and Ventura day; and Saturday San Diego day.

E. Roger Stearns and H. K. Butterfield are the two men who are assisting Manager Hempel. The Floor Space Committee consists of W. J. Burt and Volney S. Beardsley. There is not enough space for all the supply men but the orders for space must be filed as they are received.

BURKHARD COMES HOME.

Lexington Man Returns From Long Trip Into the North and Reports Trade Conditions First-class.

J. Frank Burkhard of the Burkhard-Crippen Motor Car Company, Coast agents for the Lexington cars, returned Monday from the North, where he has been establishing agencies throughout Washington, Oregon and Northern California. Mr. Burkhard reports the demand for his cars active through all the territory that he has been covering, and gives it as his opinion that the coming year is going to be even greater than the last, from the standpoint of number of cars sold.

This condition should exist in the sale of all makes of cars, particularly those of medium price, he says.

The local sales for the past week include two Lexington "40" cars to the McCarthy Company, of this city, a "40" touring-car to Ralston Vollmer, a "40" torpedo to John D. McCarthy, a "40" touring-car sold and delivered to A. T. Sebastian, of Oxnard, a "40" fore-door touring car ordered by E. Avery McCarthy.

E. J. Bennett, sales manager of the Lexington, has received word that the new Model "F," fore-door "40" touring car demonstrator was shipped from the factory last Tuesday.

GOSSIP ALONG GASOLINE ROW.

Clyde Leppo, manager of the Kissel Kar branch, wears a smile that will not come off. The Kissel Kar won.

Ralph Hamlin refuses to drive in the Santa Monica road race. His six-cylinder Franklin will be handled by Bruno Seibel, who took second place last year.

Volney S. Beardsley is in Oakland attending the Oakland Automobile Show, where all his lines, the Firestone-Columbus, the Columbus Electric and the Warren-Detroit cars are exhibited.

Norman W. Church, Coast representative for the Stoddard-Dayton, is in San Francisco and is to return this week in time for the Santa Monica road race.

F. W. Force is pleased with the work of the Mercer in the Phoenix and says he is satisfied with fourth place. He looks for something better in the Santa Monica road race.

William H. Howard is selling a number of Winton cars and expects a new shipment this week.

Don Lee is enjoying himself studying the plans for the new Cadillac home.

Two carloads of 1911 Warren-Detroits were received the past week by the California Automobile Company. Beardsley is now wondering whether he had better hold some of these cars for the automobile show, to be held in Shrine Auditorium.

Leon T. Shettler has been passing much of his time at Santa Monica, looking over the race course there.

Harris Hanshue was slightly improved yesterday and is believed to be out of all danger. He may be able to drive the Apperson at Santa Monica Thursday.

Here are some of the events in motordom in the near future: The Santa Monica Road Race, Thanksgiving Day; the Motordrome, opening the following Saturday and Sunday; the automobile show of the Los Angeles Motor Dealers' Association, December 12 to 17, and the automobile show to be given by the Licensed Automobile Dealers' Association of Los Angeles, Christmas week.

You may see some spectacular work on the "S" turn at the Palisades.

The W. D. Newerf Rubber Company received a large shipment of the double fabric tire inner shoes last week. This is the first of the kind to be introduced to Los Angeles. This firm is the sole agent for California, Arizona and Nevada.

W. J. Burt expects another shipment of Auburn cars this week. He says business is rushing.

Lewis Schwaebe reports the Premier business as good and says he has more prospects ahead than he ever had before.

Herbert Brown is particularly interested in the Santa Monica road race. He believes the Knox will win and says the hoodoo is lifted now that Barney and the Knox have arrived.

Manager F. O. Nelson of the Diamond Rubber Company has returned from San Francisco, where he says business is good. Nelson was particularly pleased with the work of the Diamond tires on the Franklin, which won second place in the Phoenix road race. He had another thrill coming when the Apperson took the series of events with his Diamond tires.

Over 20,000 miles on Goodyear tires is the record made by the car of Dr. F. W. Seager of this city, while F. W. Blodger of Newhall is running in the 13,000 mile class on his Overland with Goodyear tires.

Wild Bill Ruess says there is nothing to it. Bert Dingley and the Pope-Hartford are the winners of the big events at Santa Monica.

Eddie Helm is enjoying himself driving about in his new Peerless car.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company is planning to enter the hard rubber tire business for motor trucks. An expert from the factory is coming soon.

John T. Bill says business is better now than it has been for several months.

Phil Lyon has settled down to business, with a record of having shot more quail than any other autoist in this city.

An Aero-Craft Construction Company has been incorporated under the laws of the State with a capital stock of $100,000, and $52,000 has been subscribed. The promoters of the company are P. J. Fischer, E. C. Cusack, F. C. S. Barlow, Charles W. Pinney and T. C. Van Epps.

Arthur Oakerman at the Wheel of the Petrel Racer.

Earle C. Anthony, president of the Licensed Dealers' Association, is giving much of his time to the show. The idea of the cascade and the snow storm came from the mind of the man who is at the helm of the Western Motor Car Company. While Anthony denies that he has even given any ideas, he spoke of many things now being incorporated into the show weeks before the exhibit was planned. The redwood forest of the last exhibit was one of his ideas before Fiesta Park was ever leased.

GREAT WORK.

This committee, composed of some of the leading men now in the automobile industry, is satisfied with the work already accomplished and there is every reason to believe the cars will be in place the night before Christmas eve in order to make the opening impressive. Every foot of space will be gone over this week.

The commercial exhibit is to be one of the features of this show. Never before has such a large space been given to the trucks and horseless delivery cars. The annex on the Grand avenue side will be filled with the latest in the freight car line. The auto trucks are worth seeing and the annex will be reached by a subway entrance from the main floor.

Almost 100,000 square feet of canvas is to be used to cover Fiesta Park for the show week. This canvas is rainproof and will make the interior light by day and warm by night as it is to be carefully oiled. The discomfort occasioned last year when the rain fell at the opening of the show will not be possible this time. Rain can fall in torrents but the floor will be dry.

Arrangements have already been made to secure tons of greenery. This is to be kept fresh every day of the show and many cut flowers are to be on display in each booth. There is space enough to prevent crowding. Some of the exhibitors have as much as 2000 square feet. The floor is to be carpeted and there will be plenty of opportunity for settees and lounges on the wide expanse of show space and in the booths where the scores of new cars are to be seen.

Fred Flint, manager of the Stoddard-Dayton Motor Company, has arranged to show a large exhibit. His space is as large as any in the show. The 1911 Stoddards, needed for the exhibit, are to be rushed here by express in time for the opening at Fiesta Park.

Another who will make a special showing is P. A. Renton, agent for the Overland and Matheson lines. Renton is having a large number of cars shipped here from the factories in the East and his exhibit will be as classy as any in the big tent.

The H. O. Harrison Company is to have the fore-door Everitt cars on display and a number of Peerless cars. This exhibit will be as large as has arranged to bring the machines any and Thomas Williams already here in time for the show.

STARS COME WEST.

Overall and Brown of Cubs Have Reached Visalia Where They Are to Recuperate.

VISALIA, Nov. 20.—"Orvie" Overall and "Three-Finger" Brown, two pitchers of the Chicago Cubs this year, have arrived from Chicago, and will spend the winter on the Overall ranch near Lemon Cove. D. G. Overall, father of the famous baseball heaver, is the owner of a fine place at the Cove, and Overall and Brown contemplate doing light work during the winter.

Both Brown and Overall have been made honerary members of the Widgeon Club, which owns extensive shooting grounds at Tulare Lake, and the next two weeks they expect to put in at duck hunting. Then will follow a trip to the mountains in search for deer and for a general outdoor life of several weeks. With the advent of cold weather they will return to the Cove, where they will make their winter headquarters.

Overall is authority for the statement that the Cubs will be called together early for practice this year, and that the youngsters and the veterans will go to the Chance ranch in the southern part of the State, where practice will start and where it is hoped that the team may be put into playing condition at about the time the remaining teams in the National League are making plans for getting together.

SPECIAL EDITION.

The students at the University of Southern California got out an extra edition of the college paper last week, preparatory to the Pomona game. The large score which the Pomona team had made against Occidental put a crimp in the school spirit and the paper acted as a bracer for the football enthusiasts.

THROUGH THE SLUSH.

DESERT ROADS RAIN SOAKED.

LOST ON THE WILDS, YOUTH IS FOUND JUST IN TIME.

Inexperienced Driver Undertakes to Handle Car in the Sands, Fails Dismally, and Is Rescued from the Coyotes—Car Is Shipped Back. Mercer Comes Through.

Lost on the desert, drenched with rain, and almost exhausted with the rigors of the hard run over the roads from Phoenix, three cars, with the crews of each, reached Salome Monday and the machines were shipped back to Los Angeles. The cloudburst in the sands proved too much for the drivers and the return trip was abandoned.

The Abbott-Detroit, driven by Robert Speigel, was sent back over the rails. The Ohio, which Ross Henwood drove, is returning overland, and a Thomas, which an inexperienced driver, W. Kerns, tried to handle, is also being shipped back.

Kerns is a youth new to the automobile game who undertook to drive a Thomas car from Phoenix to Los Angeles. He left with Arthur Horine, of the local Parry agency, who was driving a Parry. Horine aided Kerns from time to time but finally became disgusted as night was drawing on and left the Thomas man within sight of Phoenix. Kerns undertook to drive the car through. He failed dismally.

Horine came through in good shape and reached home with his Parry working splendidly. Kerns kept circling around within sight of the lights of Phoenix and finally plunged away into the desert only to become lost. Had he not been found by the crews of the Ohio and Abbott-Detroit, cars which left two days after Kerns, he might have perished on the desert.

C. H. Bigelow reached home yesterday with the Mercer, the car which took fourth place in the Los Angeles-Phoenix race. The machine was covered with mud, Bigelow was tired out, but the motor was working splendidly. The drive back over the sands was fierce, according to Bigelow, who is known as the "desert rat."

There was no better driver in the desert race than Bigelow, who knows every road on the sandy course. His car came through the sandy slush hub-deep in the mire but he made good and reached here in spite of the elements. The desert roads are fiercer now than they have ever been before.

Had the heavy rains fallen during the Phoenix race it is hard to say how the cars would have finished. In places the roads become harder. In other places, that is, near the lowlands of the Colorado River, the roads become almost impassable. In the Blythe district the mud is so deep that it is almost impossible to force a motor car through the mire.

HAYNES CAR WINS.

Reliability Run in Chicago Proves Easy for Snappy Motors and Machines Plow Through Mire and Slush.

Two Haynes cars entered in the Chicago reliability run, under the auspices of the Chicago Motor Club, finished with perfect scores. The cars were driven by H. Wagner and G. Williams. They won the Goodrich, the Stewart and the Clark trophies. The run, which covered a fraction more than 1030 miles, was finished Friday after five continuous days of tavrel.

On account of the recent rains the roads were in wretched shape. The schedule called for twenty miles an hour over this strenuous going. Several of the high-powered contenders were forced to abandon all hope of reaching the controls on time. The Haynes entries hung doggedly to the task and made good.

Plowing through the mire and bumping over the ruts the cars reached the goal in time and earned the trophies. The local agents for the Haynes cars are particularly pleased with the performance of the machines in the Chicago run. Manager Conard of the Haynes branch says he will gladly enter any reliability run which is arranged in Southern California.

TRADE CONDITIONS GOOD.

Inter-State Man Encouraged by Sales of Car Which Has Made a Hit With Local Autoists.

J. B. Morrow of the Morrow-Loomis Company, agents for the Inter-State, says trade conditions in the Southwest are healthy. Encouraged by the sales since August 1 the local Inter-State agents have taken on the territory of Arizona. Selling agents have been established in Phoenix and in Tucson. The agencies were placed in both these cities by Morrow who expects to sell a number of cars in Arizona.

The Inter-State is one of the handsome new cars which has made a hit here. The machines have been tested over the worst of roads and have been sent at the steepest hills. They have made good each time. The Morrow-Loomis Company expects another shipment of the Inter-States this week.

LOCAL INDUSTRY.

HANDSOME BUS MAKES A HIT.

LOAD OF PRETTY MAIDS ENJOY UNIQUE TEST DRIVE.

Over Streets of the City the Automobile Carryall Is Whirled and Is Then Throttled Down to Speed Ordinances at the Crossings to Satisfy the Police.

One of the largest automobile carryalls ever built for a hotel has just been completed by the Western Auto Body and Manufacturing Company. The bus carries fourteen passengers and has been built on a Thomas chassis with a sixty horse-power motor. The lines are as classical as any of the new Thomas 1911 models and the bus is an attractive turnout.

Finished with a frame of ash covered with alumiloid the auto bus is attractive and stylish. It can be driven at a speed of from fifteen to twenty-five miles an hour on the streets. The motor is flexible enough to be throttled down to a speed that will conform to all the city speed ordinances. The interior is upholstered in the finest leather and the Pullman plate glass windows add to the style of the car.

The entire body, fenders, hood and tank was built, trimmed and painted in the Los Angeles factory of the auto body building concern. This is only one of the many bodies built recently. C. G. Jepsen is the president of the company and the turnout is a triumph of his skill as a builder and designer.

The bus was loaded with pretty girls and was tested on a fast run from the depot. It made good all the way, was operated through the heavy traffic, and was throttled down to four miles an hour at the crossings. The car made a hit with its load of maidens and came through the town with a following of enthusiastic boosters who cheered for the girls who were willing to take the test ride.

The sixty-horse-power Thomas lends itself to the requirements of a large hotel carryall. There is an abundance of power and plenty of speed for a fast run when the car is trying to make a train. The Thomas has been used on fire trucks and hotel buses and has always made good. There is a demand for the high-powered motors and the local agency finds that many inquiries are being made concerning the trade.

Now that the hotel bus is coming into general use the motor car factories are preparing to ship chassis without bodies to this city. The horse and wagon is being superseded by the motor car.

TOO MUCH JOLLY-UP.

The Occidental football coaches attribute the loss of the Pomona game a week ago largely to the fact that both the men on the team and in the student body were stale from too many football rallies and too much enthusiasm the week previous. They had jolly-ups nearly every day and the players gave speeches until they were worn out. U. S.C. learned this fact and has been keeping the lid on its enthusiasm so far as the team is concerned most of the week.

COMMENTS.

Auto Racing and Aviation.

The grim reaper seems to be keeping pace with the auto race driver and the aviator. The death of Al Livingstone and Ralph Johnstone gave America two distinct shocks. Tobin De Hymel and F. H. Sharpe, two other fast race drivers, not to mention several mechanics, have recently passed the last mile post. Deaths in Europe in aviation have been frequent and the total throughout the world in both auto and aviation racing has been appalling. Aviation accidents in America have been frequent, with occasional deaths, but never has the country been stirred as by the tragic ending of Johnstone, one of the most spectacular aviators in the world. It brings home to the sporting public that no sport on earth is as dangerous as auto racing and aviation and that precautions must be taken before long to safeguard both as much as possible. Los Angeles has been fortunate in many respects in both forms of sports. No one has even been seriously hurt in either—and by that is meant that no one has been maimed or disabled for life. The death of Livingstone comes closest to home. Harold Stone is another Los Angeles boy who is recovering from a very serious injury, but this occurred in the East. Los Angeles has had as many races as any town in the country and there have been many spills and many cars have turned turtle, but in each instance the drivers, though painfully bruised, have always recovered. In aviation only a few accidents have occurred. Edgar S. Smith had his scalp cut open twice by flying propellers. Glenn Martin had his arm severely wrenched at Santa Ana. George Duesler had his nose scraped by striking it against the framework of the machine, and J. J. Slavin has been shaken up a number of times when his machine smashed. The coming Santa Monica road race, the Motordrome races, and the aviation meets may break Los Angeles' good record, but every precaution is being taken to avoid accidents.

California's Racing Game.

The racing at Emeryville is only a week old, yet scandal goes forth through the paddocks and grandstands. "Look a leetle bit out" is the Dutchman's advice which may well be heeded by racing officials, for this is a crucial time for California sports and racing is under sharp scrutiny. This advice applies as well to the boxing game, but so far the few bouts that have been held appear to have been clean. The managers of both sports had better adopt a few Sunday school principles in conducting their affairs, or the coming session of the Legislature will take a hand in things and spoil both games. Conducted as pure sports, both racing and boxing ought to be clean, and there is little doubt but that the real opposition is against the gambling game in racing and largely for the same reason in boxing. Though the so-called brutality is played upon in the latter to some extent, Los Angeles has been free from scandals since the Burns-O'Brien affair, and it is likely that the promoters here will see to it that boxing is kept as free as possible from the gambling influence. There is little danger that racing will be put on at Arcadia this year, though it may be likely next winter.

MOTORCYCLE NOTES.

Jake De Rosier, the motorcycle speed king, is to leave for New York Monday to appear as a special attraction at Madison Square Garden during the six-day bicycle race.

In response to a telegram received Thursday, Ernie Pye, the cyclist, left immediately for New York where with Gordon Walker as a team mate, he is to compete in the six-day bicycle grind. Pye has been riding on the Coliseum track for the last two weeks and feels that he is in shape to put up the best race of his life. He claims that the weather of Southern California is ideal for conditioning athletes and for that reason stayed here as long as possible before the big race. It will be the Australian's third attempt to win the $1500 prize that goes to the winning team.

Charles Balke and Raymond Seymour, the two young riders of the Indian motorcycle team, are to take a lay-off until races are again scheduled for the Coliseum.

Frank Montgomery and Young Schults who were seriously injured in an accident on the Coliseum track a couple of weeks ago, have nearly recovered from their injuries. Montgomery is apparently no worse for the experiance but Schults is still nursing a broken leg.

W. E. Samuelson has found a market for his ability as a motorcycle rider having been employed by the police department on the motorcycle squad and will henceforth do his racing in pursuit of speeding automobiles.

Steve Senhouse, the Australian, has returned to his native land to attend to an estate left by a brother, lately deceased. Senhouse did not have a chance to do himself justice on the Coliseum track in the two events in which he was entered as on both occasions his machine was not in good trim.

W. B. Collins of New Orleans claims to have signed M. J. Graves, the trade rider, to appear with Arthur Mitchell as the stars of a meet that he intends to hold the last week in this month.

Jake De Rosier says that he intends to bring five Indian motorcycle racing machines with him from the factory when he returns to the Coast, and will have them all ridden at the Coliseum as soon as racing is resumed.

Ernie Pye, before leaving for the East, received word that Henri St. Yves, Jimmy Hunter and A. G. Chapple would come to Los Angeles immediately after the six-day race at Madison Square Garden to participate in the motorcycle races at the Coliseum, which are to be resumed on December 25.

WHAT'S THE US..?

DELUDED ONES TAKE CHANCES.

Throwing the "Bull" Into Baseball Umpires.

Constant Wrangles Lower Class of Sports.

Players Put Up a Front to Hide Their Faults.

BY GREY OLIVER.

You can "bull" your wife about the reason you happened to take that typewriter girl to dinner when you could not reach home on account of "business," and you can get away with the butcher, the baker and the candle-stick maker when they come around with that little statement, but did you ever stop to think Mr. Ball Player, how many times in a year you try to slip the umpire some out of the same package?

"Bull" is the greatest stuff on earth and Mr. Heintz never made enough varieties of pickles to compare with the brands of bull you have to stand for in a ball game. The players hand it to each other when one of them makes an ordinary stop or a hit or when some fellow steals a base because the catcher steps on his other foot when he tries to throw the ball.

Five men talking at once.

What do you know about it.

Ballers butting in on umpires' conference.

Players Handing Out a Line of Bull to Umpires.

Above, Waring, Hallinan, Olson, Howard, and McCredie are all talking at once, with Umpire Irwin listening; in the middle, counting heads, are Mensor, Olson, Waring, Howard, Smith, Dillon, Criger and Delmas in a hot argument; below, Dillon, Smith and Olson are butting into a conference between Umpires Irwin and McGreevy.

The pitcher gets it when he happens to strike out some hard hitter who stayed up the night before in order to win a bet as to whether the milk wagons started to wake up the hotel guests at 3 or 4 o'clock.

You can use any one of a dozen different kinds you have tried during the day but of all the bad ones ever seen the brand the ball players try to give to the umpire is what the big San Diego hotel advertised itself—the limit. It is the worst any one ever heard of because there is no more sense to it than there is to a turkey.

Just have some pitcher throw a strike over the plate that the batsman has to jump away from because he is standing on the pan and listen to what happens if the ump calls it a ball. The center fielder, first baseman, shortstop and catcher let loose roars and console with the heaver on the impossibility of everything being seen in a ball game.

Seventeen fans in the grand stand call the ump a thief and this helps the players to make themselves believe the sad news.

THEIR MISTAKE.

Let a batman bunt a pop fly in front of the plate with one or two men on bases and six or seven fielders rush in to the ump to tell him that it is an infield fly and the batman is out. The opposing players leave their bench and dash into the diamond to inform the ump that it would have been a foul if the catcher had not interfered with the ball. A dozen declare that the decision he makes is both right and wrong and the fans chip in with the information that the ump maust have been made in the Brunswick-Balke factory and that all of his head is solid ivory, with the exception of his hair.

The newspaper reporters decide the play both ways and the girl that goes out to the game with Him just because it is He, wants to know what all the fuss is about.

All this stuff is "bull" handed the poor ump and it is started by the players simply to make a good front.

In the first place there has never been a Coast League ump who made the players play ball according to the rules. Rule 66 states explicitly that "under no circumstances shall a captain or player dispute the accuracy of the umpire's judgment and decision on a play." Did you ever see the players NOT dispute both?

The players know that an ump changes his decision scarcely twice in a season, and yet they "bull" him every minute from the first game to the last one they play. If he calls some fellow safe on second because the shortstop missed him a block, the center fielder rushes in to find out how much that kind of a decision is worth to the visiting team. The third baseman hurries over to howl that if the umpire does not care to take the pock-pickiting privilege for the park next year, that he can find someone to bid on it. The catcher declares his wife has robbed his clothes so many times when he was asleep and helpless that he is used to it, while the captain thinks the league officials must have been drunk again at the annual meeting when they decided to break into the Soldiers' Home and kidnap some blind old man for an umpire.

THROWING THE SCARE.

This is more "bull" driven up from the pasture for the sole purpose of scaring the ump, but it never does. He is paid to stand without being hitched, and generally he does. When a batsman is struck out while waiting for four balls he generally roars his head off, but he knows the ump is about right. It is the kidding from the stand that the fellow dreads, and he tries to square himself by swearing at the ump. More "bull."

Some players, like George Wheeler, think they are never out; others like Hap Hogan, who are always looking for base hits, have an idea the ump has it in for them because he calls strikes on them that might have been base hits if they could have hit the ball.

The fan who sits in the bleachers for the purpose of roasting the umpire is one of the champion lightweight "bullers" of the world, for he probably does not know two rules of the game and probably cannot see one play in a dozen. He has less reason, but the same excuse, for "bulling" the ump, but both classes are jokes.

The roughneck who pursues an ump after the game is more funny at that, for he is trying to assault a man for umpiring a two-bit ball game. More "bull," for he would not think of jumping the ump alone.

Isn't it all "bull," when you come to think about it, for does any of it ever do any good?

COLLEGE RING TACTICS.

A number of the men at the University of Southern California have formed a boxing and wrestling club. The school does not provide any regular instruction in these sports and the men interested have taken the matter in their own hands with the idea of securing contest with the other conference schools latter in the year.

SUPERSTITION.

PITCHERS ARE QUEER BEINGS.

FAMOUS HEAVERS WANT THEIR FAVORITE CATCHERS.

Bender Likes Thomas and Coombs Prefers Lapp in Athletic Games—Ford Partial to Sweeney While Cole of Chicago Cubs Does Best Work With Archer Assisting.

Most every ball player is more or less superstitious, but the pitchers are more susceptible to beliefs uncanny than any of the other diamond athletes.

Of course the various pitchers have different hobbies that they cling to at all times during their baseball career, but a pet superstition of every twirler is that with certain catchers receiving him he is far more effective than under other conditions. There is perhaps more truth than superstition in such a belief. Whatever it is, it's a tradition that has always existed among twirlers.

Take Chief Bender of the Athletics. Any manager would be content to have Bender as a twirler with most any player doing the backstopping. Connie Mack would perhaps just as soon have either Livingstone or Lapp doing the receiving when Bender is on the mound, but not so with the big chief.

The famous Indian heaver is decidedly partial to Catcher Ira Thomas of the Athletics. When the chief takes his place on the rubber he always insists that Thomas do the catching, provided Ira isn't on the hospital list. Bender firmly believes that he is far more effective with Thomas working than with any of the other Athletics' clever catchers. Confidence is half the battle in anything and naturally the presence of Thomas behind the bat when Bender is working inspires plenty of it. Bender has won lots of games with other catchers doing the receiving, but he never seems quite so steady as when Thomas is paired up with him.

Then there is John Coombs, who jumped into fame by his three victories over the Cubs in the big series. While it is not generally known, Coombs won twenty-six out of the thirty victories he scored during the 1909 season with young Jack Lapp doing the receiving. In the regular games Coombs has always expressed a preference for Lapp. Thomas caught such phenomenal ball in the first game of the big series that Manager Mack hated to break up his winning combination. Mack decided to tempt fate, and told Coombs that Thomas would be his partner. The former collegian got away with his game, but it will be remembered he was very unsteady, nothing like the Coombs of the regular season, as his nine bases on balls will testify. He won, however, and Mack was satisfied. When he sent Coombs back at the Cubs, Thomas was again the catcher. Again Coombs was a victor, but he was again unsteady, always in the hole, great work in the pinches preventing disaster.

When the Cubs finally beat the Athletics in the fourth game, Mack had decided that he had tempted fate long enough. When John Coombs was announced as the pitcher for the fifth game, it was seen that Lapp was his battery partner. Pitching to his favorite catcher evidently had the desired effect, for Coombs pitched one of the many wonderful games he showed during the regular season.

RUBE NEEDED OSSIE.

There are many people who insist that "Rube" Waddell lost his greatest asset when the great team of Waddell and Schreck was separated. There is no denying the fact that Schreck was Waddell's favorite receiver. Any time you get in conversation with "Rube" he will start telling you about what he and Schreck used to do. Any catcher who has caught "Rube" in recent years will tell you that he is a hard man to handle for a dozen different reasons. Yet ask Schreck about "Rube," the man who caught Waddell when he was in his prime, when he was the terror of all batsmen, and he will tell you that Waddell was the easiest proposition to catch of any man he ever worked behind.

Once upon a time Schreck caught Waddell for a whole game with his gloved hand. The entire catching staff was on the hospital list, and although Schreck had a broken finger on his right hand, he offered to catch the "Rube" and did, without a slip during a hard fought game. Athletic players who were in that contest never tire of telling about Schreck's great work on that occasion.

American League fans always smile when the St. Louis battery is announced as Powell and Stephens. Powell is one of the giants of the game, standing some six feet in height and weighing in the neighborhood of 200 pounds, while Stephens is a midget in comparison, being one of the shortest catchers playing ball and weighing some fifty pounds less than the husky Powell. The battery is of Powell's making, however, as Jack likes to pitch to little Jimmy. Opposing batsmen will tell you that the giant and the midget are a pretty tough combination to beat.

Russell Ford of the New York team, one of the sensations of the American League's 1909 race, is "some pitcher" with most any catcher, but with big Sweeney doing the receiving, Ford is just about the toughest proposition imaginable. Ford has a most peculiar spit ball, in fact has several of them, and Mr. Sweeney seems to know all about the curves and dips they take on their trip to the plate. With Sweeney catching Ford is more than "some pitcher."

King Cole won the only game the Cubs captured from the Athletics, and they do say Cole expressed a feeling for Archer, when Chance was in doubt as to who should catch.

Ask Addie Joss, the great pitcher of the Cleveland Naps, who is the best catcher in the business, and he will reply without the slightest hesitation, Nig Clarke. Joss would rather pitch to Clarke than any other man in the business, and it's only natural that he should, for practically all of Addie's many wonderful feats have been made with Clarke wearing the wind pad.

"The house is easy of access, you say?"

"Oh, yes. It is within a short walking distance of a point where a railroad is expected to be built soon."—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

ful motor for his fine monoplane. Buel H. Green has built part of an engine which he proposes to complete. Edgar S. Smith built an opposed 15 horsepower engine weighing thirty-five pounds. C. H. Day has constructed a powerful motor by combining a number of motorcycle cylinders. The Cannon brothers, H. LaV. Twining, Glenn Martin and the Greer brothers have taken Ford automobile engines and rebuilt parts so as to use them for aeroplanes. George Duesler has a Mitchell automobile engine and with it has flown a Farman biplane.

In addition to these home-made products the Elbridge, the Macomber and Curtiss engines, standard makes of motors, have been used successfully on Coast machines. It is likely that many of these will be constructed or set up in Southern California.

In addition such men as Charles F. Willard, M. C. Tunison, Fiske and others are preparing plans to construct engines for aeroplane use. All these show that Southern California is doing more in the aeroplane line than any other part of the country.

George B. Harrison and others who have visited the East say that the Aero Club of California has accomplished more in actual experimental work and construction than any other club in the United States. Los Angeles practically had the first aero club in the United States devoted to aeroplane experiments and manufacture. The Aero Club of America and the Aero Club of Philadelphia were formed prior to the Aero Club of California but these organizations at that time were devoted to ballooning and only took heavier than air machines as a study rather than for experiment-[illegible]

The Aeronautical Society of New York accomplished more in the first few months of its existence than did the Aero Club of California but taken as a whole the Coast club probably has secured more patents and claims and done more actual experimental construction work than any other club in the country. Its hangar at the Motordrome is the largest in the United States excepting only the Belmont Park series of sheds, which, taken as a whole, have greater floor space than the one big structure at the Motordrome.

All this work on the part of the Aero Club has told throughout the country and the Los Angeles organization is honored more outside of its home than it is here. Aeronautical magazines throughout the country are full of its doings and many photographs have been reproduced and have been accomplished by generous publicity.

BUSY WINTER.

The Aero Club is preparing for a strenuous season this winter. A campaign has been started for a membership of 2500 so that the representation of the club in the East may count for something. According to the constitution of the National Council of the Aero Club of America, the right of franchise is vested in clubs only of more than a hundred members on the basis of one vote for every ten dollars of membership fee; clubs with higher fees have two, three or more votes for each member. The California club expects to depend on numbers to swell its vote rather than on membership fees. A circular letter has been issued and approved by the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Chamber of Commerce seeking to persuade all those interested in aviation to become members.

Since H. LaV. Twining, president of the Aero Club of California, has been made one of the directors of the National Council it is expected that the Aero Club of California will have a large voice in national affairs especially now that the winter is coming on when a score or more of big aviators are expected here to pass the months which in the East are inclement.

Although the club's working headquarters are at the Motordrome under a contract with the company which constructed its hangar, it expects to spread out throughout the South and will be represented wherever aviation is conducted.

The promoters of the Dominguez aviation field are conducting their affair under the sanction of the Aero Club and are providing for official observations of everything that takes place.

GOOD FEELING.

The Aero Club of Pasadena, which is largely a social organization, has offered its best felicitation and it is likely that the Aero Club of California will reciprocate by asking the Pasadena Club t otake charge of all the social functions while the Aero Club of California looks after the field events.

The action of the M. & M. in not taking direct charge of a winter aviation meet does not indicate that that organization has lost its interest. On the contrary the board of directors has asked that twenty-five prominent citizens look after the general subject of aviation and in particular a great meet here this winter.

It is expected that everyone will unite to make this country the greatest in the United States in aviation and eventually to make it rank with the best in Europe, when the citizens finally become as enthusiastic as have the Europeans.

PASADENA TO SEE MATINEE.

Thanksgiving Day Racing at Tournament Park.

Many Entries for Feature Events of Meeting.

Los Angeles Horses to be Among Features.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

PASADENA, Nov. 19.—The Pasadena Driving Club has plans completed for a Thanksgiving Day matinee at Tournament Park, Thursday afternoon, at 1:30 o'clock. It will be the first matinee for the new club, which was organized several months ago, and will be followed by biweekly matinees every other Saturday afternoon during the winter season.

Members of the Los Angeles Driving Association have entered several horses for the events, which will consist of two fancy trotting races, two pacing races and one pole team trot, making five races in all.

The races will be half-mile heats, the best two out of three; thus there may be fifteen heats during the afternoon. The pole trot will be one mile.

The new track, which has just been resurfaced, is now in excellent condition and said to be one of the best tracks on the Pacific coast. It is a full half mile.

There will be from three to five entries in each race, with the exception of the pole trotting race, which will have two entries. Charles Parker of Los Angeles will enter his famous team of driving horses, Misfortune and Success. Revell English of Pasadena will enter his prize team El Castino and Daisy.

One each of the trotting and pacing races will be for fast horses, while the other race will be for horses of a slower class. In the pacing race Dr. M. Dodge of Los Angeles will enter his famous pacing stallion Seigfried, which is known to most of the horse lovers of Southern California. William J. Morgan of Pasadena will have at least three entries, Crisis, Cima, a beautiful bay trotting mare, and Era, a brown trotting mare, which will be entered in the free-for-all trot.

Other entries will be W. W. Whitney's brown mare, Dolly Zombro; J. W. Wilson's bay gelding, San Dirken, and his brown stallion Dan Direct; Arthur Cuthbert's buckskin mare, Dena C, and Louis Schneider's bay stallion, St. Patrick.

For several years Pasadena had many good thoroughbred horses. The old-time horse races, now a matter of history, attracted much attention and were a source of much amusement to the winter visitors. The advent of the automobiles diverted the attention of the people until this year, when it is believed high-class harness horses will furnish good sport.

The membership of the Driving Club is composed of nearly all of Pasadena's horse lovers and it is believed the Saturday matinees will be largely attended and that the spectators will increase with each matinee. The plan of co-operating with the Los Angeles horsemen will add much to the enthusiasm and should bring out a number of excellent horses. During the last few days Col. W. J. Hogan has had some of his high steppers on the streets.

The enthusiasm manifested in the polo games is believed to be gradually attracting the attention of the people to horses. The Pasadena Polo Club members have been practicing nearly every day during the fall and are getting in good trim to enter the various polo tournaments to be given in Southern California during the winter. There is a possibility of a polo exhibition game at Tournament Park Thanksgiving afternoon which will serve to hold the spectators during the waits between races.

AUTOMOBILE MEN.

MOTOR CLUB RANKS HIGH.

SECOND IN SIZE IN THE UNITED STATES.

Fourth in Size in Entire World and is Still Growing—Automobile Club of Southern California Removes to Larger Quarters and Plans Many Things.

One of the largest automobile clubs in the United States is the Automobile Club of Southern California. It is second in size in this country and the fourth largest in the world. This club has grown quietly until it has become among the most important organizations in the world. The work already done on the roads of Southern California is important and has availed much.

The logging of routes and the posting of signs upon which the club has spent something over $35,000 has been the means of averting many accidents and has insured the safety of tourists who are strangers to California. The Automobile Club of Southern California, working as it does in the interest of good roads, has done much to help the public bring about a solution of the road problem.

Signs posted all over the roads of the Southland aid the autoist who is bewildered and who is not acquainted with the highways leading from town to town. Warning signs are being placed wherever the roads are dangerous. Bridges have been built by the club over the Santa Margarita River and over the San Mateo washes in the San Diego county district.

The club is located in its new quarters, No. 754 South Hill street. The new secretary, Samuel M. Chord, is a man of wide experience in automobile circles and has come into the club with the confidence of the membership.

Leonard Block is the outrider for the club and has done much to post the roads and has given the club members information concerning the highways of Southern California. He spends most of his time on the roads and is looking after the signs and examining the roadways, covering many miles in a week.

HE'S A HARD DRINKER.

Arthur Hill, the fleet little end of the U. S. C. football team, claims that his remarkable playing is due to the quantity of fresh milk he consumes daily.

All of the men on the training table drink milk with each meal but there is not a member of the eleven than can get as much under his belt as "Babe" Hill, as his team mates have dubbed him. Hill never drinks less than four glasses of milk at a time and he has been known to put two quarts away before his thirst was appeased.

The only other man on the team that comes near Hill's record is "Fat" Allen, the 212-pound center, but the best he can do is a quart and a half and that has to be after Coach Cromwell has put the squad through an afternoon of extra hard scrimmage practice.

WARREN-DETROIT

THE WINNING CAR

There Is Reason for the Saying "It Takes a Warren to Beat a Warren"

You can now see in every model Warren from the handsome roadster, with a 30-gallon tank in rear of seat, at $1800, to the roomy, beautiful fore-door car, equipped with electric lights and 35x4-inch tires at $1600.

The Warren-Detroit has repeatedly run first and second in road races, hill climbs and cross-country runs, in fact, it has always been in the front in any contest that required extraordinary endurance. These contests have all been won by stock cars, duplicates of the machine you will buy.

Consider these features: Motor 4x4½; radiator 35 per cent. extra capacity; transmission designed for 45-H.P. load; gears and bearings in rear axle unusually large and strong. Even the spokes in the wheels are of extra carrying capacity.

Two independent ignition systems, Bosch magneto, high-grade coil and batteries. The long, flexible springs and 34-inch wheels make the Warren a delight to ride in, even on rough roads.

In short, the Warren-Detroit is a quality car at a moderate price. If you are the man with a short pocketbook, but need a hard-service car, one that will stand the hardest knocks, you owe it to yourself to investigate Warren construction.

It will cost you nothng to look and may save you hundreds of dollars.

TAKES THE COUNT.

FINAL WALLOP FOR OLD GAME.

American Football Is Down and Out in North.

Rugby Forces Opponents to Recognize Merits.

University Teams Bring Out Thrilling Features.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

BY EDWARD W. PUGH.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Nov. 18.—At the close of the 1910 football season in the North, Rugby has a foothold that insures its continuance as an intercollegiate sport. The last of the adherents to the American game have been won over to the English sport and it is predicted that not even a preparatory school about San Francisco Bay and in the northern and central parts of the State will play the old game after next year.

At the University of California and at Stanford Rugby is now permanently entrenched. The high-class game which the teams of both unversities displayed this season has demonstrated even to alumni who had previously expressed themselves as being utterly opposed to the English style of playing, that as a manly sport, spectacular and thrilling, Rugby far surpasses the old game.

Many graduates of the universities, players of the old game in their undergraduate days, who were on the side lines at the intercollegiate match last week, admitted that the contest was much more thrilling and developed twice as much action as any intercollegiate game played before Rugby was adopted. Visitors from the East, spectators at a Rugby contest for the first time, asserted that the old game was dull compared with Rugby.

There are not a dozen students in both universities who would like to have the old game restored. From the standpoint of the public, the increased attendance at the intercollegiate contests during the last three years indicates that Rugby is a better drawing card than the old game. More than 35,000 persons surrounded the field last Saturday.

Rugby is readily jumping to the front, principally because the university teams and high school fifteens are bringing out the possibilities of the game. In the opinion of experts, the intercollegiate match last week was by far the best exhibition of Rugby ever played in the West. Among the spectators was Dr. G. R. Parkin, secretary of the Rhodes scholarship trust, who was a Rugby player at Oxford when an undergraduate. He said, regarding the game:

ENGLISHMAN SURPRISED.

"It was the cleanest game that I have seen in America, and at the same time the most satisfying. The big games in the East that I have witnessed are too dangerous, there is too much of the amphitheater spirit in them, which is a great danger to college spirit.

"The Stanford-California game reproduced more of the true spirit of sports as we understand it in England, and I did not find this to be the case with the big universities. The organized rooting of the universities was very interesting to me, as in our games in England we have no organized encouragement of the teams. You seem to have caught the Greek idea of the spectacular.

"There could not have been better spirit shown among the players. In such an open game there are many opportunities for slugging, but I saw none, and I was delighted with the contest.

"It would be a mighty fine thing for all America if they would adopt the game of Rugby. If the young college man gets the true Rugby spirit of fair play when at college, he will carry it out into the world with him and it will affect the national character.

The intercollegiate game this year was so intensely interesting that the spectators frequently were kept on their feet five minutes at a stretch, during a passing or dribbling rush. The teams maintained a terrific pace throughout the game, and the sensational rushes, executed by the flying backs, kept the most bitter opponents of Rugby in a state of intense nervousness. Blase "grads" who have been longing for the old days when "Bull" Chalmers, "Locomotive" Smith and other heroes of the university tore through the line for center gains, were converted on the spot to Rugby.

Los Angeles is now regarded as the only stronghold of the old game in California. In Washington and Oregon rugby is slowly gaining a footing and it is predicted that within five years rugby will have made a clean sweep along the Coast and will have begun to make inroads in the East.

OPENING WEDGE.

The University of Kansas has adopted rugby and "Babe" Crawford, the famous Stanford player, is to coach the team next fall. Last year the Kansas institution decided to adopt rugby this fall but later it was decided to give the old game another chance. Evidently the American game failed to make good on its second trial, as before the end of this season rugby was chosen for the future.

While injuries are admittedly less likely to occur in rugby than in the old game, even under the new rules two serious accidents occurred at Stanford this year. Eugene Kern, '12, of Pasadena, sustained a broken leg in a practice game, and "Doc" Schaupp, '12, fractured his ankle. However, the accidents occurred in collisions which seldom happen in the game. No serious injuries were sustained by members of the California squad throughout the season, and in the big game only one player was knocked out and had to withdraw. The elimination of mass plays, which makes it possible for the players better to protect themselves, is responsible for the fewer injuries to players. Flying tackles in the open often result in a bad shaking up for the participants but injuries in these plays have been rare.

During the last two seasons California has played better rugby than Stanford. In the game this year, the Cardinal team, though it put up a stronger fighting game than its opponents, received the short end of the score because the California team were more finished players.

Last year, the Californians were trained by "Mother" Howe, an Australian expert who was assistant to Coach Schaefer, and it is believed that from him the players acquired a knowledge of the finer points of the game that more than offset the aggressiveness and fighting spirit of the Cardinal hosts. The blue-and-gold team this season included nearly all the men who were in the fifteen last season and Stanford again was outplayed. In the last two games the Cardinal backfield men have been unable to develop sufficient teamwork to gain ground effectively.

MORE PRACTICE NEEDED.

It is probable that spring practice will be inaugurated at Stanford with the view of giving the football men additional opportunities to become more finished in the fine points of the game. Man for man, the Cardinal team this year appeared to be on a par with the California fifteen, but the players of the State university invariably got the jump on the Cardinals and excelled them in passing and in general teamwork. There were many young players on the Stanford team and these men before the end of their college terms promise to develop into finished players.

The possibility of the services of an Australian coach being obtained next season to supplement those of the graduate coach is slight, as the faculty apparently is unalterably opposed to the employment of professional coaches in any capacity. There is even a likelihood that the captain of next years varsity will act as coach, as it is said that the faculty committee on athletics is in favor of doing away with paid coaches of any kind. Presley's contract expires this year and he has refused to consider an offer for next season, as he intends to engage in the practice of law.

NO PUSHING.

BACKFIELD MEN ARE HELPLESS.

MUST NOT ASSIST PLAYER IN CARRYING THE BALL.

Sensational and Romantic Features Removed from the Game and Enthusiasm Is Lacking—Kicking Is One of the Modern Essentials. Plungers Not Wanted.

One of the most exciting features of the football game that had survived the onslaughts of the rules committee until the present year has been eliminated by prohibiting the helping of the man with the ball by pushing him along.

No longer has the offensive team much hope of scoring when it gets the ball on its opponents' five-yard line even though it has three downs to take it behind the goal. The reason is that the backfield man who is called to take the ball over is not allowed to have any help from the other backs in any manner except that of interference and what little assistance they may lend by pulling on his clothing while in a position betwen him and the goal.

No longer are the coaches heard applying choice epithets to the players who are near the man with the pigskin in a scrimmage and who fail to get behind him with all their brawn to send the ball a few inches further. It did not seem to matter how different the systems of offense were, all the coaches were unanimous in the opinion that the surest way to advance the ball in the closed plays was to get as many of the backfield men as possible behind the man carrying it at the time he hit the opposing line.

MAKING THE HOLES.

Under the new rules the best the backfield men can do is to hit the line ahead of the player carrying the ball and try to make a hole. When the teams are playing away from the goal line so that the defensive backs have to play considerable distance behind their line to watch the forward pass, the offense can generally make their downs, but when the teams are playing in the vicinity of the five-yard line it is altogether different as the eleven defending the goal can play its backs close to the line, as they do have to play down the field for a pass. In this position all that the backs have to do is to watch for a play through the line and short end runs.

In the game as it was played there was no time in the contest when excitement ran so high as when the ball was near enough to the goal line to be put over in the remaining downs of the team. Pandemonium would break the ranks of the supporters of the offensive team while frantic yells of "hold that line" would come from the section of the bleachers holding the friends of the team whose goal was in danger.

Because of the difficulty of scoring by a touchdown when the ball is within six or seven yards of the opponents' goal few teams this season playing against elevens of equal strength, have been able to carry the ball over on anything but an open play resulting in something over a fifteen-yard run.

Most of the scoring has been done this year by place kicks as the coaches realized that the odds were in their favor when it came to choice between bucking the line when near goal and trying a kick if they choose the latter.

Because of the change in the rules that has made the kicking game necessary, accurate booters are now more in demand than good line plungers. Because of the way the players are forced to line-up on acount of the forward pass it does not take as good a man to make distance through the line when the teams are within the fifteen yard lines as under the rules before the forward pass was adopted.

RUGBY AT FIESTA.

LOS ANGELES HIGH SCHOOL TO PLAY POMONA FIFTEEN.

THE LOS ANGELES High School Rugby football team is to clash with the Pomona High School fifteen on the Fiesta Park stadium in the afternoon of the holiday.

It will be the third time that the teams have met this season. In the two previous games neither aggregation was able to best their competitors, the score ending in a tie each time. In the two former contests the men on each side have learned to know each other and some hard knocks on each side has put the players into a fighting spirit that will likely result in a fast, scrappy contest.

The Pomona team, by defeating the Redlands High School players a week ago, won the championship of the Citrus Belt. The latter team has always been considered the only team in this end of the State that was a worthy foe of the hill boys and had been scheduled early in the season for the Thanksgiving Day game, but because of its defeat a change was made in favor of the Pomona team.

The winner of the contest Thursday will likely be matched against one of the crack northern high school teams Christmas day.

BASKETBALL SCHEDULE.

Many Practice Games to be Played Before Championship Contests Begin.

The close of the Conference football season marks the beginning of the basketball contest between the colleges. The schedule this year will not be played until after the Christmas vacation owing to the fact that a number of the basketball men in some of the schools have been starring in football and the regular practice has not begun.

The time between now and the first intercollegiate game, which will be played January 7, will be occupied by heavy practice schedules between the college teams and local high schools and athletic clubs.

The Conference schedule is:

Jan. 7.—Occidental and Pomona, at Claremont; U. S. C. and Whittier, at Whittier.

Jan. 12.—Whittier and Occidental, at Occidental; Pomona and U. S. C., at Claremont.

Jan. 14.—Occidental and U. S. C., at U. S. C.

Jan. 16.—Whittier and Pomona, at Claremont.

Jan. 19.—Pomona and Occidental, at Occidental; Whittier and U. S. C., at U. S. C.

Jan. 21.—Occidental and Whittier, at Whittier.

Jan. 23.—U. S. C. and Pomona, at U. S. C.

Jan. 26.—U. S. C. and Occidental, at Occidental; Whittier and Pomona, at Claremont.

A large number of Occidental students attended the Pomona-U. S. C. game yesterday at Claremont. Though they have been beaten by both teams and though their chances for the championship were gone, they wanted to be there at the finish and root for the winners.

WHY WE LOVE DOGS.

They Give Caress for Caress and a Faithfulness More than Human.

Considering the gulf that separates man from the lower orders, I often wonder how, for instance, we can have such a sense of companionship with a dog, says John Burroughs in the Atlantic. What is it in the dog that so appeals to us? It is probably his quick responsiveness to our attention. He meets us half way. He give caress for caress. Then he is that light-hearted, irresponsible vagabond that so many of us half-consciously long to be if we could and dared. To a dog, a walk is the best of good fortunes! he sniffs adventure at every turn, is sure something thrilling will happen around the next bend of the path. How much he gets out of it that escapes me! The excitement of all the different odors that my sense is too dull to take in; the ground written over with the scent of game of some sort, the air full of the lure of wild adventure. How human he is at such times, he is out on a lark. In his spirit of hilarity he will chase hens, pigs, sheep, cows, which ordinarily he would give no heed to, just as boys abroad in the fields and woods will commit depredations that they would be ashamed of at home.

When I go into my neighbor's house, his dog of many strains, and a great crony of mine, becomes riotous with delight. He whines with joy, hops up on my lap, caresses me, and then springs to the door, and, with wagging tail and speaking looks and actions, says "Come on! let's off." I open the door and say, "Go, if you want to." He leaps back on my lap, and says, "No, no, not without you." Then to the door again with his eloquent pantomime, till I finally follow him forth into the street. Then he tears up the road to the woods, saying so plainly, "Better one hour of Slabsides than a week in humdrum at home." At such times, if we chance to meet his master or mistress on Kid Dalton is keeping in condition in this city and would like to get on with Kid Reese at 133 pounds and would not object to fighting Morrie Bloom, if Bloom will consent to make 135 pounds. Bloom is really a welter now and has entirely outgrown the lightweight division. He hopes to get a match here with some welter.

NEW CROQUET CLUB.

Courts Are Being Constructed On Mt. Washington for Championship Play.

Croquet courts are being built on Mt. Washington under the direction of H. H. Beall, who will have supervision of them after completion for a new club which is being formed.

No pains are being spared to make the courts accurate and suitable for championship play and it is the purpose of the management to encourage schools, colleges and athletic clubs to organize teams that shall play their championship games on the courts.

Special balls and mallets have been ordered in the East and are expected to be here by the time the courts are ready to be dedicated.

IN THE AIR.

BIG LEAGUERS NOT ALARMED.

NO PLACE FOR FLETCHER'S NEW BALL ORGANIZATION.

Large Cities Cannot Stand for More Teams as Several Cannot Give Proper Support to Even One Club—Kling Reported as Manager for One of the Bunches.

Throughout the West there is considerable talk about the third big league which D. A. Fletcher is supposed to be organizing, but in the East little has been heard that would make one take the new organization seriously. Philadelphia is supposed to be included in the Fletcher circuit. No one can be found in that city who is supposed to be connected with a new club there. There seems to be little chance of securing suitable grounds for another club in that place, as the owners of the two major league clubs are supposed to hold options on any of the grounds that would be suitable for a new baseball club. Besides Philadelphia, the eastern cities named in the circuit are New York, Washington and Boston. In the West it is Pittsburgh, Chicago, Louisville and Detroit. The only place where Fletcher has shown any activity is in Pittsburgh, where the new league interests are reported to have purchased old Recreation Park.

The circuit as framed up at present appears to be a weak one. In the West, Detroit does not support a winner in the American League, and it would be impossible for another team to break in there and make money. Louisville has never been a great ball town; but would be better than Detroit. It is a question whether Boston and Philadelphia would support three clubs; New York might, but it would have to be a great team to get the crowds away from the Giants and Highlanders. Washington could never support two clubs. It seems that a much stronger circuit could be picked out. It would be all right to invade the major-league cities if the newcomers would be sure of getting the patronage. But there can't be a winner in each of the eight cities in the circuit.

The reported backing of the new league is said to be between two and three millions of dollars. Sounds big, and no doubt would have been enough ten years ago, but at the present time, with two big leagues in the field, $3,000,000 won't go far. In these days of improved baseball plants it requires $500,000 to fit up each city, which alone means $4,000,000. Both the National and American Leagues are in a better position to fight a rival than the old National was ten years ago. The new baseball promoters will find that it won't take long to drop $3,000,000 in a baseball war, and it looks as though nothing but ruin can come of the venture if it really gets started.

Some of the ball players are said to be nibbling at the bait hung out by Fletcher. He is said to be paying $10,000 bonus for players to sign a five-year agreement without reservation after the expiration of the contract. Johnny Kling, the Chicago catcher, is reported to have signed to manage one of the clubs for Fletcher. Kling is also credited with stating that Fletcher has signed ninety-two players, twelve of whom were members of the Cubs of last season. Kling says the players are anxious to free themselves from baseball "slavery."

Ball players always have a grievance. Most of the time it is more fancied than real. But without organization baseball could not live. A baseball war is fine for the players from a money viewpoint the first year, but when the war is over the player finds himself back in the same place to start on a new era and salaries settled down again to a paying basis.

Decline of Jury Trial.

A straw that shows which way the wind is blowing—in England, at any rate—is supplied by the latest statistics from the county courts. Of 897,042 actions tried in these courts during the year 1909, only 725 were tried by juries. This is not only the lowest percentage in any year, but is the lowest total, being 101 less than in the preceding year. Some years back, when the annual number of actions in these courts was below 800,000, the jury trials ran above one thousand. On four of the circuits not a single action was tried with a jury during 1909, and on fifteen others the number was less than five. However it may be in criminal prosecutions, the fact seems fairly evident that the institution of jury trial in civil cases is swiftly moving toward that bourne from which the three-toed horse, the pterodactyl, and the rest of the justly celebrated Saurian family—Ichthyo, Dino, and the others—have never returned.—[Law Notes.

BOWLERS PLAN BIG TOURNEY.

OLD TIMERS TO MEET AGAIN IN ALL-DAY CONTEST.

Men Who Were in the Game a Dozen Years Ago Intend to Come Out of Retirement Just for a Day. Five-Man Team-Play to Open the Show this Morning.

Old footprints and beaten pathways will come again into view today in the all-day bowling tourney to be held at the Brunswick alleys when the old and new bowlers of this city are to meet.

The tourney is something of a reunion, for it will give the enthusiasts a chance to see how the bowlers of eight years ago compare with those of the present time. Many of the old-time players are still in action, and their performances during the last summer show that they can hold their own with any now in the limelight.

Entries for the tourney closed last night at 9 o'clock, and while the complete list will not be available until this morning, enough is known to indicate that the tourney should be a big success. All of the old-timers will be on the alleys.

In the five-man team list teams will be entered from Pasadena, Venice, Electric League, Levy's, Wild West, Granda, Commercial League, Colts, Buckeyes, Morley's and the Orpheums, and while eight teams are sure to bowl, there may be eleven. In the two-men team list will be Gilman and Dysinger, Simpson and Mackenzie, Tompkins and McGee, Lustig and Bowron, Kohler and Quinn, Platt and Payne, Griffith and Tupper, Young and Lacey and Thormat and Benfer. These are names to conjure with in the bowling line, for 200 scores at tenpins are not uncommon with the majority of these men.

The individual entries are many in number, and include such old experts as Kohler, Best, Dysinger, Fred Simpson, Charley Simpson, George Griffith, Quinn, Dr. Kirkpatrick, E. J. McCulley, Benfer, Gilman, Bob Lacey and McGee. There are enough new ones to offset these, and consequently the indications are that the contests will provide all the excitement necessary.

Among the new ones that have promised to appear in teams are Myers and Roop, George and Gysin, Grass and Arbogast, Ballard and Taylor, Nigg and G. Smith, Balch and Burns, Bunn and Lawson, Barber and Callahan, Goyette and Webber and Rising and Van Lean. There may be a dozen other teams.

Play is to start at 10 o'clock this morning, and will probably not be finished until 10 o'clock this evening. The five-men teams are to start the tourney. Dr. J. H. Kirkpatrick, president of the Southern California League, Waldo Tupper of the Commercial League and John C. Fendler of the Electric League have been appointed as an arbitration committee to pass on all protests and disputes. Bowlers have entered the tourney from San Diego, Redlands, Riverside, San Bernardino, Long Beach, Venice and Redondo.

COIN EASILY EARNED.

FOUR UTILITY PLAYERS CONSIDERED VERY LUCKY.

THERE are several athletes on the pennant-winning Athletic team of the American League who can thank Dame Fortune for the part she played in allowing them a chance to share in the receipts of the world's champions.

Take Paddy Livingston, for instance. Three years ago Paddy was a member of the Indianapolis team. In 1908 by his great catching he helped greatly in the winning of the pennant by Indianapolis in the American Association. When it came time to report in the spring Paddy was offered a contract some $600 less than he received the year previous. He refused to sign and failed to report. Shortly after the opening of the American League season Doc Powers died and Connie Mack was shy catchers. Some one told him that Livingston was at home and idle. Connie opened negotiations with Indianapolis. He bought Paddy's release, and paid him more money than he ever received before. Paddy's great work in 1909 got him an increase that made his salary almost twice the amount he received at Indianapolis. Now he falls heir to something over $2000 when the Athletics trimmed the Cubs. No wonder Paddy smiles.

Then there is Cy Morgan. Cy was a good pitcher when a member of the St. Louis team, but the fans didn't think so. Every time he took his turn on the rubber he was unmercifully roasted, and as a result he did miserable work. St. Louis sold him to Boston. The story goes that Morgan lost a game to Detroit one day as a member of the Boston team because of his failure to touch Cobb at the plate. Owner John I. Taylor of the Boston team, who also does a little managing, accused Morgan of shirking. Cy resented the accusation in strong language. The result of the episode was the trading of Morgan to Philadelphia for Schlitser. That the Athletics got all the better of the trade is proved by the fact that Schlitser soon passed out of the major league ranks, and is now a member of the Chattanooga team of the Southern League. It was indeed a lucky thing for Morgan that the St. Louis fans disliked him, and Owner Taylor butted it on the management.

DONOHUE HAS HORSESHOE.

Another lucky individual is Pat Donahue. Pat was originally a member of the Boston Americans. He couldn't get along with the Boston management and was sold to Philadelphia when Mack's catching department was crippled by the absence of Thomas and Livingston. When Cleveland was shy on catchers Donahue was turned over to the Naps, but his throwing arm was so bad that he was sent right back again. Now, Pat is far from being a high-class catcher, but Connie retained him because he had delivered in a pinch. It was worth a couple of thousand to Patrick.

Bris Lord is another individual who has much to be thankful for. In the middle of the season Bris was traded by the Naps to the Athletics. It pleased Bris principally because it permitted him to be at home every evening, as he resides at Chester, just outside of Philadelphia. He had no idea it would mean so much to him then as it did at the close of the big series. Paddy Livingston, Cy Morgan, Pat Donahue and Bris Lord have much to be thankful for on "turkey day."

CHAMPS SHOULD REPEAT. DOPE MAY WORK RIGHT

Manager Mack has nearly all of his players signed for next season, and there is every reason to believe that the Athletics for the first time in their history will become a pennant winner for two successive seasons. There is very little deadwood on the Athletics' team at present. One or two of the old players may be dropped next year, but Mack has good new material to take their places.

"Cy" Morgan, upon his return to his home in Wheeling, was tendered a banquet and when called upon for a speech "Cy" told why the Athletics were successful. Morgan said that Connie Mack held a meeting with his players every morning at 10 o'clock from the first day of the spring practice until the last day of the world's series. At these meetings plays which proved disastrous to the Athletics in the past would be gone over, and Mack would prescribe a remedy which was to be tried next time the play came up. As a result, the team was constantly improving, and had all these difficult problems solved long before they tackled the Cubs. Sounds very reasonable and other managers would do well to follow Mack's method.

Jab For Johnny Evers.

Evers for manager of the Phillies. That sounds good if Dooin is to quit as head of the team. It also sounds plausible despite the reports from the West that Chicago would not let the scrappy second baseman go. What good is Evers to Chicago if he can't play next year? From all reports it seems doubtful whether Johnny will be able to get back into the game on account of his broken ankle. The Cubs will no doubt take either Walsh or Knabe of the Phillies. Evers might make a good bench manager. He has a great reputation as a quick thinker, a baseball general and a student of the game. If Johnny is all that they claim for him there is no reason why he should not become a successful manager. It has been his ambition to manage, and there is no better opportunity open anywhere than in Philadelphia. President Fogel hit upon the right man when he named Evers as a possible successor of Dooin. The latter is popular in this city, and there are many who would be sorry to see him go, but his usefulness here would be at an end if the deal with Cincinnati does not go through.

A "Capital" Story.

There Was Once a Man Who Went into a Restaurant and Ate a Big Dinner.

Twenty Years Before the Same Man Had Been in the Same Town, and He Had Just Been Seeing the Sights Again.

"Well," Said the Man, as He Settled His Bill with the Waiter, "It's Twenty Years Since I Was in This City, but It Looks Just the Same—Just the Same!"

The Waiter Took up the Penny He Had Left on the Table.

"Hum," Replied the Waiter, "No, I Don't Find Much Change, Either!"—[Spare Moments.

A Wonderful Girl.

The most wonderful girl in the world lives in Massachusetts. The "story says she is 19, weighs 159 pounds and carries no superfluous flesh," and it must be true for further on it is stated "she stands 6 feet 2 3-4 inches in her stockings," under which circumstance the adipose tissue would necessarily be visible if she had it. Recently she ran 100 yards in 11 1-2 seconds, "wearing skirts," and swam 100 feet in 22 seconds—without the apparel, of course. One is led to wonder what her sprinting record would be should she change costumes. She has thrown a baseball 262 feet 6 inches and skated a half mile in 40 seconds, but the time is not given for the greatest endeavor—Can she button her waist up the back, and how quickly?—[Portland Oregonian.

LEGISLATIVE.

NEED REVISION OF GAME LAWS.

Quail and Deer Are Scarce in Late Years.

Smaller Limits Necessary for Preservation.

Shorter Season Required for Restocking.

The far-seeing sportsmen of Southern California are looking forward to the coming session of the Legislature with a great amount of anxiety, for they realize that the wild game of the State is at stake and unless some new laws are made this winter hunting and fishing may become two of the lost arts. The natural increase in the population is exterminating the fish and game and particularly the game of the South.

The remedy that is offered is the shortening of the open season for both game and fish and no one need be surprised if this is done when the Legislature convenes.

The duck hunters as a whole have been complaining all winter about the scarcity of birds as compared with previous years and it is practically impossible now for anyone not a member of a club to get any birds worth going after, owing to the great number of hunters out in any spot that promises any kind of shooting. Poison and disease have something to do with the decrease in the number of ducks and it appears that the safest and only way in fact to give the birds a chance to increase is to so amend the law as to have a closed season for the next two years. One plan is to reduce the size of the legal limit to about ten ducks, for that number is as many as any one family can eat in several days.

The same scheme applies with equal force to the quail situation in a more marked degree for the gradual settlement of the country has produced an abnormally large number of hunters while the quail have not increased in proportion. They have not been able to keep up to the number of new hunters and this has been shown in many instances. Ground that was alive with quail several years ago can show but few now, notwithstanding the fact that the Game and Fish Commission has liberated hundreds of birds in this county during the last two years. This shows that the season is not only too long but that the bag limit is too great and it is probable that the Legislature will cut both.

BIRDS SEEK SAFETY.

According to all reports but few men have had the legal limit this season and those who have been lucky enough have had to go far afield. One hunter reports plenty of birds in Castake Canyon above Newhall, but that is a very wild country and far from the beaten path. The same condition of affairs exists in San Diego county, where the birds have gradually been driven back into the wilds and away from the heretofore good hunting country.

Elizabeth Lake was once a paradise for hunters, but now the shooting is far from being the best for the reason that many hunters make the trip to that country in their autos, where it formerly required a week for the round trip and the few days' hunting. It seems rather incongruous to say that the automobile has been the cause of the scarcity of game but this is a fact, for it enables hunters to reach the good grounds in a comparatively short time.

The deer season is altogether too long as has been proven by the comparatively small number of bucks killed this fall. The spots where deer can be located are few and far between and these spots are fewer in number each year. There have been a number of bucks killed recently in the mountains back of Sierra Madre but this slaughter was more in the nature of legalized murder, for every hunter knows that any one can kill the bucks in this time of the year, as they are very tame.

It seems from all accounts that the wisest thing to do would be to have a closed season for two years on deer and also on quail, but it seems to be the general opinion that ducks could be amply protected by reducing the bag limit.

Something radical must be done if the quail are to be saved for even the Fish and Game Commission will probably not feel like spending much of the State money importing quail from Mexico if they are to be scattered to the four winds each year by an increasing number of reckless hunters who shoot in and out of season.

SPINS IN CARTERCAR.

Woolwine Takes a Joy Ride and Is Ready for Business After Severe Illness.

Woods R. Woolwine, president of the Woolwine Motor Car Company, took his first ride in a Cartercar since his illness when he drove out Wednesday. He expects to be about this coming week and is recuperating rapidly. His health has improved since he was taken ill following his early sales campaign.

There is much doing just now that demands Woolwine's attention. Cartercars have been received in steady shipments and more are expected this week. There is a demand for the friction-driven cars and Woolwine has arranged to make an interesting showing at the Fiesta Park exhibit.

One of the new sensations which he is to spring a fore-door model of the Cartercar. This is particularly stylish and attractive. Another show model that will attract is the torpedo type of Cartercar which the factory has promised to ship here in time for the exhibit.

In addition to his Cartercar display Woolwine plans to show a complete line of Rapid trucks in the commercial department. The factory has promised to get machines here in time for the show. The trouble has been to get them soon enough for the trade.

The exhibit made by the Woolwine Company will occupy 2000 square feet of space. The booth will be large enough to show a Cartercar in the touring model, a gentleman's roadster, a torpedo and a fore-door model. The trucks will be sent to the annex.

ANOTHER FACTORY HERE.

Los Angeles has secured a new manufacturing company, which will make the Western Ignitor dry-cell batteries and the Greyhound multiple batteries. L. Bassett and H. J. Nice, both from Minneapolis, Minn., with Dr. Downing D. Nice of Los Angeles, after having looked over all the Pacific Coast towns, decided to locate their factory here. Incorporated under the name of the Standard Carbon Company, and locating their factory at 1151 Stanford avenue, they have been shipping their products for the last thirty days and already have completed plans for doubling the capacity at once. Bassett and the company's chemist are in the East now placing additional orders for machinery. As soon as this is received and installed the company will have as complete a factory for the manufacture of dry-cell batteries as can be found in the country.

ALL KINDS.

WOODWARD HAS FINE SPORT WITH GAME AT WILDOMAR.

A. C. WOODWARD has just returned from a trip to Wildomar, near Elsinore, where he spent two days hunting on Col. A. W. Woodford's ranch, where, he says, quail are plentiful and that he got the limit of ducks on two successive days.

Woodward made the trip from Los Angeles in his Overland car, and used it in hunting over the ranch, going over plowed ground and through sands that were almost hub deep. The car was not stuck once on the trip. Part of the ranch is marshland, and good feeding ground for ducks, but it is quite a distance from the edge of the marsh to the favorite ponds of the birds, and because of this few hunters get to the places of the best shooting.

Woodward acted on the judgment of his chauffeur, and ran his car into the swamp, which is covered with tullies and grass that served to keep the wheels from sinking into the mire and afforded good traction. The biggest sport of the trip was shooting jackrabbits from the car in the sagebrush and cactus.

The jacks were not accustomed to the coughing of the motor, and all within a half-mile of the path of the Overland took to their heels; when one was jumped close to the car the chauffeur gave chase, while Woodward let loose with his gun. The bounding of the machine and the running of the frightened animals made them an exceedingly hard target to hit, and often it took two or three shots before the fleeing jack was halted.

Valley quail are plentiful in the district, but are hard to get, few hunters without dogs having success in bagging limits. Woodward says that he scared up one covey that numbered at least 150 birds. The quail in the vicinity are in the best of condition, the feed at this season being especially fattening.

Woodward asserts that there is much illegal hunting being done in the neighborhood. There are a number of hunters killing game for the market, and as there is no game warden in the vicinity, many of them pay no attention to limits, and do their shooting any time of day or night. Doves are also being killed. Woodward was lucky in bagging a goose, there being few that come to this end of the State.

PROMISCUOUS.

COMPLAINING OF POACHERS ON GUN-CLUB PRESERVES.

MANY of the members of Southern California gun clubs are making complaints of poachers on their preserves. Not only are the residents in the vicinity of the club grounds guilty but many shotgun enthusiasts from Los Angeles make a practice of visiting the preserves on mornings of the days when the clubs hold no regular shoot; they not only succeed in getting away with a good bag before they are detected by the keepers but frighten the ducks so that they are few on the preserves on the days the members set aside to do their gunning.

Although the law forbids the discharging of firearms on the public highways, there are a number of hunters who travel the roads almost daily in the districts where the clubs abound and shoot at the ducks as they fly back and forth between the preserves and the ocean. The only complaint that the gun club members make is that their firing frightens the birds so that they do not alight on the feeding grounds, but fly on over and into the Orange county district to the celery fields where they do much damage to the young crops.

There is also complaint as to the attitude of many of the farmers in the neighborhood of the preserves. They look upon the club members as millionaires with more money than they know what to do with. Some of them who control land adjacent to the clubs get out with their guns on the days when a shoot is scheduled and make all of the noise possible in order to scare the ducks out of the vicinity so they will not injure the crops. This game has worked in several instances and the grangers have either been paid to discontinue the practice or their lands have been rented by the injured club at a good stiff price.

Usually the lands secured by duck clubs have no value for farming purposes and make very poor pasture, as about the only forage that grows on them is salt grass and tules. When the gun clubs secure the land in order to get water they have to drill wells which are valuable assets to the owner upon the termination of the lease. The land is also very much improved as the water standing in the ponds dissolves much of the alkali and is carried off during the rainy season, making the ground much easier to reclaim.

The sportsmen say that all of the ducks that are being killed in the country are in the best of condition, some of them being almost too fat to be good for eating. The birds that have been coming in from the North, until lately, have been so poor that the hunters assert they could tell them as soon as they were handled. The feed in the sloughs here is in its best condition, as the grass is long enough to be easily plucked and is yet very tender.

The clubs in the Del Rey country are having the best shooting that they have had this year. Sprig, that have been the most numerous in the district since the season opened, are being bagged in greater numbers than any of the other kinds that frequent this part of the State. Spoon-bills are beginning to put in an appearance on many of the clubs and nearly all of the hunters who bagged the limit during the week had a few of the birds on their string.

On the Centinella preserve where there has been very little shooting until recently because of the building of new levies to put more land into feeding grounds, W. J. Phelps, H. L. Corson and F. K. Eckley made limits during the week and Arthur Jackson succeeded in knocking down fifteen. All of the men made their kills without being in the blinds more than three hours.

The El Patron members, whose club is not far from the Centinela, assert that last week's shooting was the best that they have had on their grounds this season. J. B. Banning, Capt. Hancock Banning, Dr. R. Wernicke and W. Lacy, shot the limit Sunday, and J. W. Vaughn and S. Harwood came within one and two birds, respectively, of getting all the law allows.

The Green Wing Club members who were to shoot Wednesday found only a half-dozen birds on the ponds when they arrived at the club preserve. Oscar Trippet, one of the disappointed clubmen, is of the opinion that poachers had been on the grounds earlier in the morning, as the Sunday previous there was good shooting and many birds were seen in the club's territory during the first of the week. In the Sunday shoot, Tom Stovall was one of the lucky bunch to get the limit, bagging teal, widgeon, sprig and a few spoonies.

Nearly all of the quail hunters have given up the quest of game for the season in the hills near Los Angeles and even those who have been making trips to Elsinore and Acton say they are not getting enough birds to pay them for their time.

W. Y. Teetzel and E. S. Becher have just returned from a hunt on the Santa Marguerita ranch in the vicinity of Fallbrook and Escondido. They hunted in the district three days and shot the limit each day. Teetzel says that there are a number of hunters in the district and according to the ranchers the birds are not as plentiful in the country as they were at the opening of the season. On two of the days that the men were out they had all they could do to get twenty-five each and had it not been for their dog, the hunters claim, it would have been impossible for them to have bagged limits.

TO KILL WILD GOATS.

Club Organized to Rid Catalina Island Of Four-Footed Pest—Prizes to Be Awarded.

AVALON, Nov. 19.—Bert E. Makkley of San Pedro, with G. E. Perrin of Pasadena and Harvey B. Perrin of Washington, D. C., has organized the Chateau Gun Club with its headquarters at Middle Ranch. Honorary members elected were A. M. Jamison, W. N. Kirkpatrick and Prof. C. B. Parker.

With club rules the members propose to kill the Catalina wild goat, systematically, giving buttons and prizes to hunters who have secured their trophies under the specified regulations. It is estimated that there are more than 10,000 goats on the island.

The kind of rifle used, the distance and the condition of the specimen will all count in the number of points credited to prize-winners. The goats will be divided into three classes. Hunters desirous of securing membership into the club must first kill a goat with a spread of horns measuring not less than twenty inches across.

J. Splitstosser was appointed chief ranger of the ranch and George Greely chief guide.

ALCO AGENCY LANDED.

American Locomotive Car is to be Handled by Local Concern and Cars Are on the Way.

Alco motor cars are to be handled in Los Angeles by the Los Angeles Alco Motor Sales Company, a new concern which is to have its headquarters near the center of the automobile trade circle. The American Locomotive is to be shown to the public in the latest models turned out by the factory.

Limousines and landaulets are to be brought here for the trade by the new concern which has arranged to ship the latest 1911 models of the Alco in time for the Christmas season. A shipment of cars is on the way. Others are to follow.

One of the demonstrators here is the exact duplicate of the Alco that twice won the Vanderbilt Cup race. It is the same type of car that Harry Grant drove to victory this year and last. The stylish motor has been admired by a number of autoists and Ralph Chandler, one of the members of the firm which has the agency, has driven the Alco faster than sixty miles an hour on the Straightaway and up steep hills.

This six-cylinder motor is snappy and fast. It has an abundance of power and when placed in the large limousines will whirl a car anywhere. It has four speeds forward and the motor is flexible and can be throttled down to any of the city speed requirements.

The Alco people build a powerful truck which the local agents are to bring here as soon as possible. The truck is furnished with a perfectly balanced chasis and the motor is not larger than is actually needed for the load.

MORE MEDICINE.

JUST AS MANY MEN ARE HURT.

REVISED FOOTBALL HAS ITS LIST OF KILLED.

Open Field Work Produces Injuries From Collisions and Falls With Ends and Back Field Men Suffer. Legs and Collar Bones Stand the Brunt of Trouble.

The number of injuries resulting from the intercollegiate style of football has been very little if any decreased by the changes in the rules this year so far as Southern California is concerned. In both college and high school teams there have been the usual number of men crippled and bruised and while none of the injuries received have been serious, most of them have resulted in temporary or permanent suspension from the game. Some teams have been more unfortunate than others in this regard, but all have suffered more or less from wrenched knees and ankles or broken collar bones.

It is true there is very little possibility of a man being permanently maimed or crippled, as so often happened under the old sausage grinder plays where the object was to bunch up and trample the opposing side under foot. Also there has been a visible diminishing in the piling up of players. Most of the injuries have come from open field tackling or collisions, and the men crippled have been back field or end men. A large proportion of the lameness which results from the game is in the legs of the players, either the knees or at the ankle joints. Another peculiar fact is the way in which some players of less than average vitality and strength seem to be immune from injury while other players, apparently robust and strong, are continually being crippled.

Tommy Cohn, the little quarterback at the University of Southern California, seems to be a remarkable example of this. He carries the ball more than any other man on the team and is tackled hard in every play and often is carried from the field exhausted but never with an injury.

SEASON NOT OVER.

The season is not yet closed in the East so that the deaths resulting from the game cannot be summarized, but from the published reports there seems to be less than the usual number of mortalities directly resulting from the game.

The open field tackling is undoubtedly the cause of a majority of the injuries and the prevention of the flying tackle has likely lessened the evil results of that feature but referees have found that technically there are few such plays as a flying tackle ever made. This means that the feet of the man who is making the attempt shall have left the ground before the man carrying the ball is reached and in only one of two cases have men been penalized for violating this rule.

Whether the advantages in the new game other than those relating to the injuries will be great enough to overbalance the failure in that direction is largely a matter of conjecture. The reported death of one man is sufficient to start the whole country on a tirade against the sport and it would be impossible to conceive of a game anything similar to football that would entirely exclude a possibility of injury and an occasional death.

Another reason why the new game has not brought about any great radical difference at once in regard to the danger is the fact that most of the fatalities occur to inexperienced high school men or in little country town teams where the men who enter the game have not gone through the process of training that the college man has. Such teams are slow to take up with the changes in the rules and in most places continue to play rough and tumble style and with the usual resulting injuries. Football in general suffers.

COUNTRY CLUB GOLF.

The golf players are to be on the links all day at the Country Club. Choice score and medal play will be the order of the day. The links are in fine condition and the recent rain has started the grass on the course so that it is covered with green. It is expected that a large number of the golf lovers will be out with sticks to enjoy the day.

IT'S TWO LATE.

THOMSON ASTOUNDS PRINCETON BY SCORING TWO TOUCHDOWNS.

Fred Thomson, the Occidental athelete who won the all-around championship last year at Chicago and who is at present attending the Princeton Theological Seminary, surprised the members of the Tiger student body the other day by the wonderful showing he made against the Princeton varsity football team.

Fred, who has said nothing about himself and kept his identity "as the all-around champ" dark, went out on the field the other afternoon and quietly took his place on the scrub team. Before the afternoon was over he had broken through the line of the Tigers for two touchdowns.

One of these touchdowns was made after a run in which he covered 100 yards with the whole of the Princeton team running their heads off to catch him and wondering who this wild westerner was who could tear off the distance with the ease of a century sprinter. The other touchdown was made after Thomson had bucked the ball down the field, playing like a demon and giving the Princeton rooters who were present the thrill of the season.

The whole Princeton student body is talking of the great western athlete and it is generally conceded around the campus that he would hold down a birth behind the line were it not for the fact that his four years' work at Occidental bars him from competing further in intercollegiate athletics. But while he will not be able to play on the Tiger varsity, the big boy will still find a lot of sport and exercise, going out on the field and tearing off a few touchdowns against the Princeton team and in this way keep himself in condition for the all-around contest of the coming season when he is again going after the world's record held by Sherkian.

one bullfinch he possessed reached the age of sixteen years. Exhibition or "fancy" bred birds, on the other hand, are comparatively shortlived, and the variety known as the "Scotch Fancy," the canary with the half-moon shaped body, is decrepit when two or three years old, and is becoming extinct.—[Dundee Advertiser.

TURTLE FISHING IN TROPICS.

People of the Cayman Islands Have Pursued the Industry for Many Years.

The little Cayman Islands, just south of Jamaica, are seldom mentioned in the periodicals of the world. Although the population of Grand Cayman is only 5000 and of the lesser Caymans 1000, these people lead busy lives. One of the industries is turtle fishing for supplying green turtles and the tortoise shell of commerce, to which the governor of Jamaica refers as follows in his annual report:

For about one hundred years the Caymanians have engaged in this industry, fishing for turtle chiefly around the cays off the coast of Nicaragua. It was formerly the custom to bring the turtle from the cays to Grand Cayman, where they were "crawled" for a few days or weeks and then taken to Jamaica for sale. It is the custom now to sell the turtle on the fishing ground, from whence they are taken (principally to Key West, Fla.) by boats run by the purchaser. Very few are imported into Grand Cayman. This arrangement has caused a drop in the value of exports and imports as the value of the turtle figured under both heads in former years.

In reality the present arrangement is more profitable to the turtle fishers and the country at large than the old arrangement. Because: (1) The fisherman does not loose by the mortality of turtle, which sometimes was great, owing to the long sea voyages; (2) he is paid for his turtle on delivery at the cays and brings his money back to Cayman to spend it; (3) he can remain fishing a longer period than formerly because he can get rid of his turtle as he catches it. The above remarks apply only to the green turtle. The 20 vessels engaged in the industry in the fiscal year 1906 caught 2234 turtles.

The inhabitants of the lesser islands engage in the fishing of the hawksbill turtle around the coast of Cuba and the coasts of the Cayman islands. This turtle is rapidly decreasing in numbers. It is only valuable for its shell, the meat having no market value worth considering. The present price is about $5 a pound.—[Consular Reports.

The Utilization of Volcanic Steam.

Certain Italian engineers have conceived the idea of utilizing the steam jets from the natural vents called suffioni for driving motors. Suffioni abound in various parts of Tuscany and in other ancient seats of volcanic energy. Jets of water vapor at a high temperature are discharged from them with great regularity.

Some of the suffioni in Tuscany, we are assured, have remained invariable in their discharges during a period of almost twenty years that they have been under observation. It is thought that a considerable amount of mechanical energy can be derived from these sources.

One of the principal difficulties in the utilization of the natural steam arises from the corroding acids that abound in it.—[Harper's Weekly.

Mixed, but Logical.

One day a farmer drove into town with a load of produce and spent the rest of the day and part of the night with convivial companions. On his way home he fell asleep, and his wagon came in contact with a tree by the roadside, startling the horses into a burst of speed. They broke away and went clattering down the road. The farmer slept on. He was thus found next morning at daylight by a stranger on horseback.

"Hello!" called out the horseman. "Who are you and what are you doing here?"

The farmer peered up and down the road in a dazed way. "Well," he said, "my name is Rogers and I've lost a blamed fine span of horses."

Then he got down from his seat and inspected the vehicle. "And if I ain't Rogers," he added, "I've found a blamed fine wagon."—[Everybody's.

Ahead is a tunnel of light—walled in at the sides by impenetrable blackness and arched over above by the shadowy masses of foliage between which perhaps you can see the starlit sky.

"Night Riding"

If this had been written by Mr. Kipling or Mr. Hubbard it would be called real literature. We think all advertising should be good literature.—Chalmers Motor Co.

Do you know the joys of "night-riding"—of automobiling over country roads in the darkness? If you don't—if you are only a daylight motorist—you have missed half the delight that your car can afford you.

To slip quietly along some woodland road, to watch the beam of brightness from your lamps boring its way into the wall of darkness ahead; to listen to the call of night birds and the eerie noises of the forest—this is to feel again the thrills of childhood, when bogies lurked behind parlor chairs and ogres haunted the dark hall stairway.

At night an automobile seems to run better; its motor, in the night air, hums a sleepy lullaby of peace. At night the roads seem better; little inequalities that would bother you in the daytime are passed over unnoticed.

As you glide along what a wonderful panorama unfolds itself! Ahead is a tunnel of light—walled in at the sides by impenetrable blackness and arched over above by the shadowy masses of foliage between which perhaps you can see the starlit sky.

As you turn corners or swing around curves what wonderful vistas does your headlight beam explore! You are in the nave of a vast cathedral. The roadside trees, their boles shining white in the glare, stand like mighty columns.

All the while you sit rapt in wonder, your eyes ever following the light-beam. Each turn of the road is an adventure; the top of each hill an unknown land. On you go into the darkness, till the spirit of the woods enwraps you with its mystery and the spirit of the night breathes into you its calm. You forget your worries and cares. Then you wend your way homeward, rested, refreshed and at peace.

And how you do sleep! —CHARLES M. STEELE.

"It Runs with Eagerness"

That is what the owner of a Chalmers "Forty" said recently, describing his car.

A telling phrase that! It describes better than any we ever heard the peculiar charm of a "Forty." We could talk to you by the hour giving you the statistics of this car, the cold reason-why facts of it—bore and stroke, wheel base, frame dimensions, length of springs and all that. And in all these things this car is the equal of any made.

And yet that wouldn't give you an adequate idea of just what this car is. Beyond the design, the steel, iron, wood and rubber, there is still a great something in this car which dimensions and materials cannot account for—an intimate, human quality. "It runs with eagerness."

People are all made of exactly the same materials. In general features they are all alike. Yet some are "different." There is about some a something you can't explain by external terms—a personality, a superiority which rises from within, from reasons unexplained.

A Chalmers "Forty" among automobiles has that rare quality. A quality of youth and life and unflagging energy. "It runs with eagerness."

A great many very particular people agree that there is no more beautiful car, either in line or in finish than the Chalmers "Forty." The price of [illegible] includes Bosch magneto, Prest-O-Lite tank and gas lamps. If you want high power, maximum seating capacity and some of the final words in lines and finish, then you really should see this car. We shall be pleased to show you the new model any time you call.

A Perfectly Appointed
Throughout

The announcement of a large five-passenger touring car, fully equipped, for $1400 and bearing a Stoddard nameplate means a sensation in the motor world. The Stoddard Company has always been ultra-conservative in its advertising. Extravagant praise for its many elegant models has never been one of its policies. Rather we have preferred to let the cars speak for themselves.

This new car, with its 4x4½ motor, is simply another Stoddard thoroughbred. It has those aristocratic lines which you all want in a motor car, no matter what the price. The detail of finish is immediately noted. It has everything found in the larger cars, with no suggestion of cheapness in any line or mechanical feature.

And when you take this car off our salesroom floor it is not necessary to immediately expend several hundred dollars for necessary extras. It comes fitted with the highest grade mohair top, a glass front, magneto, Stromberg carburetor, Goodrich tires, a set of three oil lamps and two gas lights, a generator, robe rail, horn, jack, tools, tire repair outfit and additional equipment seldom furnished with a car.

If you are interested in this class of car you cannot buy without fully inspecting this new Stoddard.

What You Get When You Buy a Model "M" Stoddard

First of all you get a large, handsome, finely finished and elegantly appointed five-passenger touring car.

It is not a small, cheap appearing automobile. The wheel base is 112 inches. The tonneau is large and roomy, easily accommodating three passengers. This long wheel base, with its three-quarter elliptic springs on the rear, makes one of the easiest riding machines on the American market. And those who have ridden in hard-riding cars can fully appreciate what this one feature is worth.

The motor of the Model M is 4 by 4½ and develops in excess of 30-horse power. That means enough power to follow the highest powered automobile

HE WIDOW WISE

Verses by Paul West ▾ Drawings by W. H. Loomis

Weed had been a widower for two long, lonesome years, by he chippered up and wiped away his tears.
wife to share his wealth, which was of goodly size, led his footsteps to the shrine of Widow Wise.

met, and soon 'twas evident to all her friends around that she at last a kindred soul by fortune great had found.
And when Weed gave a dinner at his country house for her guests said:—"Their engagement soon the swagger set will stir!"

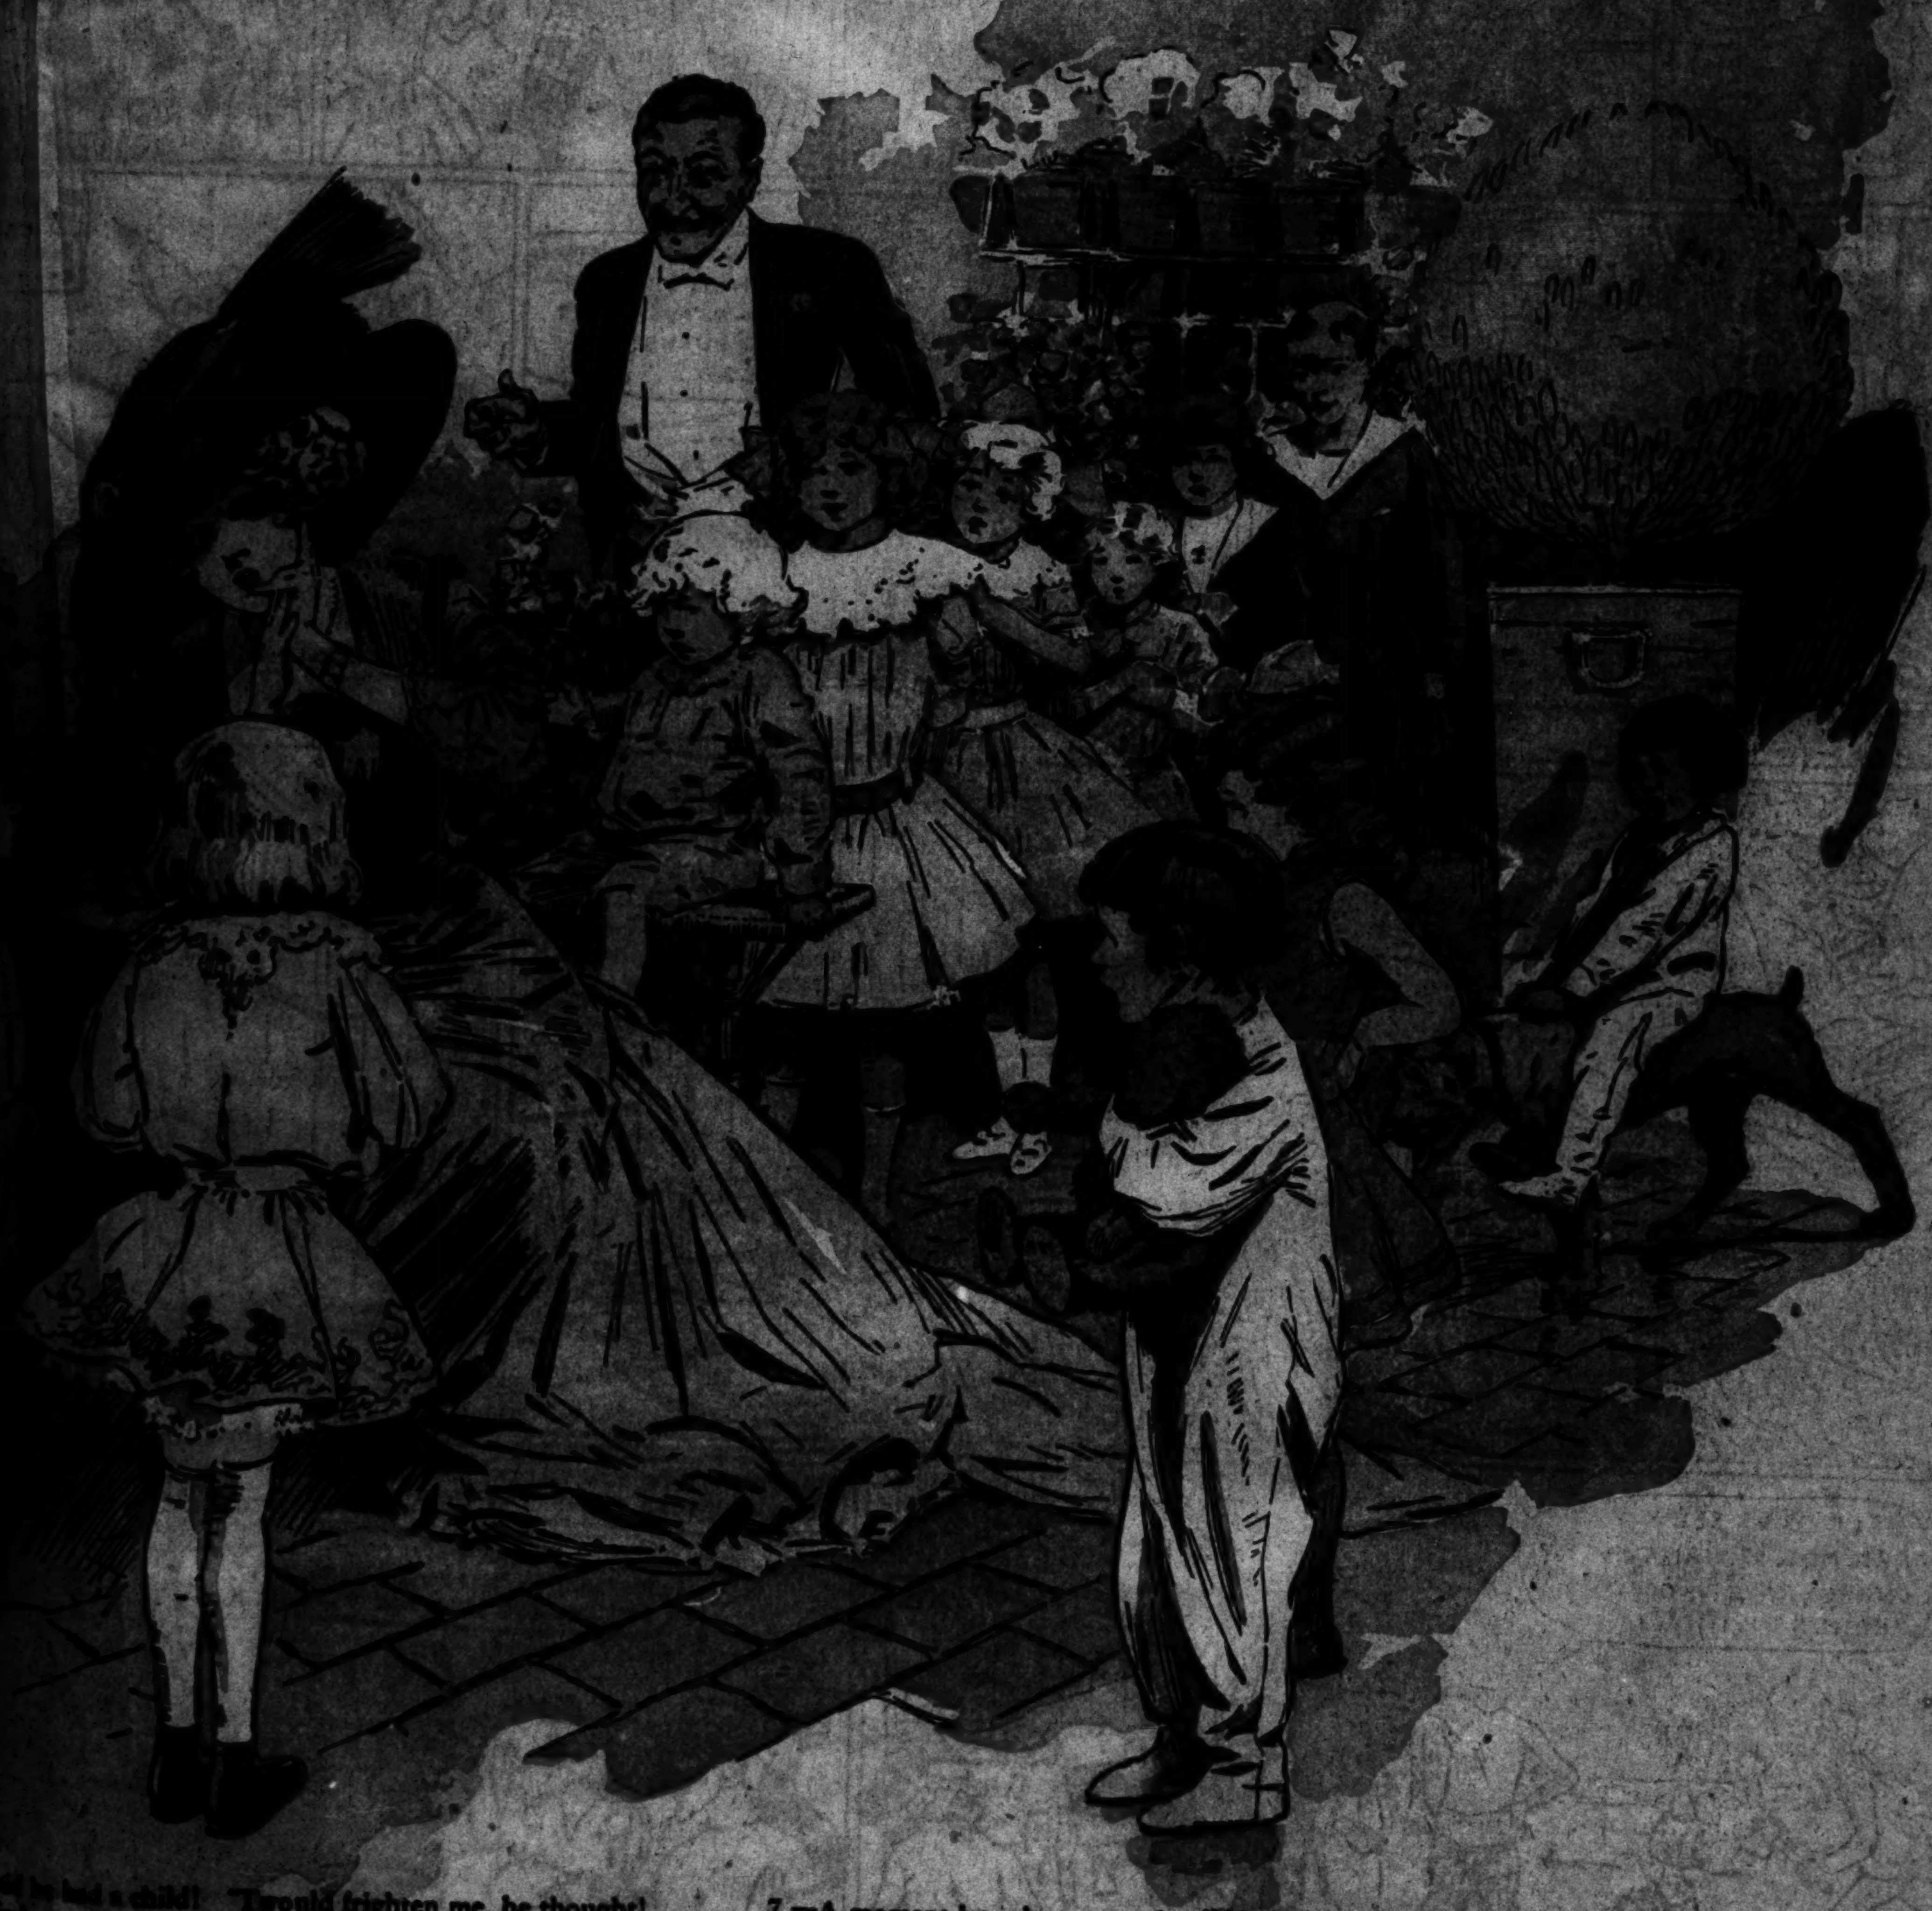
3.—The dinner o'er, the guests deployed about the handsome place,
And an eager, anxious look they saw upon Weed's ruddy face.
The Widow guessed and slipped away to the conservatory.
"'Twill be a perfect spot," she thought, "to hear Love's old, old story."

4.—Among the flowers she waited and the anxious time beguiled,
When suddenly there toddled in a fair haired, pretty child.
"Come here, my dear," the Widow said, "and say who may you be."
"I'se Johnny Weed," the tot replied. "Oho! Aha!" thought she.



said he had a child! "Twould frighten me, he thought!
find us making friends and set his fears at naught!"
up she took the tot and stroked his golden hair,
John Weed discovered them when he came strolling there.

Why, Mr. Weed," the Widow said, "you never said, you know,
You had a little boy like this—and I love children so!"
"You do!" cried Weed. "Then wait a bit!" and hurried from the room.
He counted on a triumph, but alas! he wooed his doom!

7.—A moment later he returned. "Ah, Widow fair," he cried.
"The fact that you love children makes me ask, Come, be my bride!
Be mine! And to your care I give not only this one here,
But these!" and then he turned and called, "Come in, my children dear!"

8.—The door sprang wide. Ten cheering tots came trooping in a row!
"Behold your new mamma!" cried Weed. The Widow said, "Not so.
I could adore say one or two, but"—— here she dropped her eyes,
"YOU NEED A NURSE GIRL, NOT A WIFE!" exclaimed the Widow Wise.

-the way to healthful Pie Crust is via Suetene

Pie has been declared indigestible—but there is no reason why it should be so if the crusts are made with a pure shortening—for pie contains, as a rule, within its covers, only fruit, which is nature's most healthful offering. In making pastry, absolute cleanliness of utensils and purity of ingredients are essentials.

Suetene is a pure vegetable product, white, odorless and healthful, and when properly used, never makes other than light, wholesome and nutritious food, that can be readily digested by the most delicate stomach. You can bestow no greater blessing upon the family than to be able to serve them with the things they love without the attendant discomfort of indigestion.

And if deep enough beneath the man of highest civilization, you will come to strata which differ so little from those in the person of the lowest scale of being that no words are subtle enough to express wherein one differentiates from the other.

Children all come into the world the same one as another, speaking in a broad and general way. In whatever land they first see the light, in whatever surroundings they may be found, they are the pure product of human existence unchanged by environment, unaffected by merely accidental circumstances. The infant offspring of humanity carries the mind back through all the ages and manifests the influences of life as they affected the members of the race hundreds of generations long passed into oblivion. The children of the peasant play with the same toys as those of the monarchs. In the main the toys of the hut are those of the palace. They differ only in finish, in decoration, in splendor. But they all embody in embryo the history, the development, the aspirations and hopes, of the human race. How young master "Sumptuous" loves to throw stones in the water and watch the ripples spread. You may see an Indian child in the remote districts of Mexico do the same. The kinky-headed savage in the "bush" in Australia does the same baby "stunt." From remote ages comes this impulse. The earliest specimens of humanity gained experience and knowledge of things in precisely the same way.

"Male and female made He them" is the way the man who penned the first chapter of Genesis observed that the races were constituted. And here human nature differentiated by sex persists in all zones of the world among men in all conditions of life. You may have seen boy babies play with dolls and girl babies take to bat and ball. Either education or instinct is not normal in such cases. The boy takes to locomotives, autos, "playing horse" and trying to catch a ball, as easily as to his food. The girl with motherhood in her small soul is prone to hug a doll, dress it, put it to bed, as a young duck is to take to the lake.

Well, these are all facts we all have observed. What of it? What have these facts to do with anything? Very much with all things. We all observe the facts; few of us apply our knowledge in the affairs of life. First there is an idea that there is some essential difference in the soul of the youngster "born with a silver spoon in his mouth" from that of the one who comes into the world without endowment of any kind of spoon, or of anything to use a spoon on. Not a bit of it. It is marvelous how little the babe of the same race born in the midst of luxury differs from the one born in a hovel. The features of the one are as plastic as those of the other. Change them in their cradles and at 10 years of age there will be no mark to indicate that any change was made. It is the actual experiences of life in the individual which form the lines which make ugliness or beauty. Who has not seen the most degenerate commonness of features where all the surroundings are luxurious and where abundant comfort would suggest regularity of features and pleasing expression? And you see much more frequently in the midst of poverty, toil and trial features that put to shame the angels limned by the greatest genius. The slave children taken from the Celts of Great Britain, and from the Angles of England, appealed by their beauty to the heart of a Roman pontiff, who vowed that so much comeliness should fit them to be angels. You may see in rags all over Mexico girls of from a few months to 20 years of age with faces as regular as you would find if permitted to visit every palace in Europe. Why? Because affection surrounds them in their squalid abodes; because pleasant thoughts are in their minds in the midst of poverty; because they are contented with their lot, humble though it be; and because love works in their heart feelings of pleasure often not found where wealth abounds.

Reformers as well as ethics philosophers should never forget how persistent a fact human nature is. The wise orchardist may convert a crooked sapling into a straight tree. He cannot do it by hitching a yoke of oxen to the sprout. It is done with a stake no larger than a walking stick and a bit of cord such as a grocer uses to tie up his goods. The binding is done with care and skill, and a bit of soft material is placed between the tender bark of the young tree and the cord which holds it straight.

The hot, earnest reformer of our day is too apt to forget or ignore human nature. He is too prone to use the "big stick," to use the big voice, to attempt to put a bit and bridle on the average man and then apply the lash to generate speed on the road to higher citizenship and better manhood. The laws of Draco did not reform the world. The reason of Salon had a better, quicker, more lasting effect.

It is all very well for the Harvard honor man to realize the advantage he has in his scholarship. So it is for the reformer "with a mission" to set the world right. But if these apostles of any new gospel forget that the humblest working man has a will of his own, that he will have to be shown the road he should walk of his own volition, after he has chosen it for himself, the work of reform will not make progress. To reform human nature in the concrete we must reckon with human nature in the abstract. To make the individual better we must get at his soul where all the race is concentrated and where all its passions, prejudices, virtues and vices must be dealt with.

My Company of Friends

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

"That I may publish with the voice of Thanksgiving."—Psalm xxvi, 7.

Lord, let me thank Thee for the rains,
And for the sunshine and the dew,
For grass that carpets hills and plains,
For flowers that make glad the view,
For snow that hides the naked trees,
For all that in completeness blends;
They have brought comfort, all of these—
These, and my company of friends.

These are the things that make me rich:
My heart where faith still holds its place,
My hands that have no miser-itch
To grasp the prize before the race,
My soul that waits its day, serene,
A hope that falters not, nor ends
When life seems sordid, crude and mean—
These, and my company of friends.

As some worn pilgrim tells his beads
I count today my scanty store
That is sufficient for my needs;
But deep within my being's core
There is a truer thankfulness
For this rare goodness that life sends.
I would not ask for more to bless
Than this, my company of friends.

Though I might heap up gold and gear
And, prideful, have a ruler's sway,
Without my friends I know my year
Would not have held a happy day.
Though I am grateful for what gain
My simple toiling comprehends,
I know my life would be in vain
Without my company of friends.

Lord, bless them all, for I am glad
Because today I call them mine
I would not give them up to add
Unto my store of corn and wine.
I thank Thee for this year of peace;
But I am one who now commends
To Thee for blessings without cease
His goodly company of friends.

EUROPE'S "MAMMOTH CAVE."

The "mammoth cave of Europe," as the newly-discovered series of subterranean chambers near Obertraun in Austria is now called, is described for the first time by Hermann Boch, an engineer, who with a small party of Alpine climbers explored the cave, which is situated under the Dachstein, a mountain in Upper Austria 9800 feet high. The entrance to the cave is at an elevation of some 4500 feet. Italian road menders knew of the existence of a small grotto here where they had been looking around for gold. Behind a great boulder at the end of this grotto the party discovered a national tunnel which a powerful stream in earlier ages has hollowed out of the rock. At the bottom of this tunnel there was a six-foot-deep river bed, formed by what remained of the earlier stream. Here and there pools of crystal-clear water were found. The tunnel continued for 1000 feet and led to an apparently bottomless abyss. The party crawled along the edge of the precipice and up a gallery 150 feet high, also seared with the action of dried-up mountain torrents. At the top a narrow hole was found which led upward to a series of stalactite caverns and then narrowed down again to a curving passage leading downward for 1500 feet. Suddenly the party came upon a vast hall leading portal-like to another still larger dome 340 feet high. Here a cavern had piled up a conelike heap of debris 250 feet high. From here radiated a maze of other halls, passages and galleries many of which ended precipitately in dark abysses. As food was running short, the party had to return.—[London Correspondence New York Sun.

TRIBUTE TO PAINTER'S SKILL.

One of the still life paintings by Jan van Huysen of the museum at The Hague was recently injured, but it is believed that the perpetrator was neither vandal nor thief.

The picture represents a basket of fruit on which a number of insects have gathered. On a pale yellow apple, which is the center-piece in the cluster of fruit, is a large fly, painted so true to nature, so say the officials of the gallery, that the canvas was injured by some one who endeavored to "shoo" it and brought his cane or hand too close to the canvas. "A tribute to the painter's genius," says the letter recording the fact, "for which the work had to suffer."—[Chicago Daily News.

JERUSALEM.—The Germans are gobbling the Holy Land. I use the word "gobble" advisedly. It means "to swallow in large pieces, to swallow hastily, to seize upon with greed and to appropriate graspingly." That is what the Century Dictionary says; and that is what the Germans are doing. They have established colonies in the richest parts of the country and are shipping in emigrants. They own the best lands about Jaffa, Haifa and Mount Carmel, and they have vineyards on the shores of Galilee. I shall describe some of their colonies before I leave Palestine and shall show you how they are working this land of the Lord for Germany's good. They associate faith with their work and are laying up treasures in heaven at the same time as on earth.

Right here in Jerusalem, under the very shadow of the Holy Sepulcher, a great German church has been built. For the past eight or nine years the masons have been working on another church situated on Mount Zion beyond the tower of David and across the valley of Kedron on the ridge known as the Mount of Olives a great limestone hospice is going up over which the German flag floats.

This will be a resting place for such Germans as are traveling through the Holy Land and want to stay a week or so at Jerusalem. It is being erected in honor of the Empress of Germany, and is known as the Empress Augusta Sanatorium. The money with which the site was bought and some of that used for the building was a silver-wedding present to the Empress. It was known that she greatly loved Palestine, and her friends planned this memorial as a silver-wedding gift.

The hospice will have a chapel connected with it, and eminent Germans will preach there. It is beautifully located, being situated on Mount Scopus, which is really a part of the Mount of Olives. It is several hundred feet above Jerusalem, and standing upon its roof on a bright day one can look across the hills of Judea and see the silvery thread of the Jordan and the shining Dead Sea with the blue mountains of Moab beyond.

He Took Our Cemetery.

The Kaiser is no respecter of persons, either living or dead. The spot on which he is building his big church on Mount Zion was purchased by him of Sultan Abdul Hamid when he visited him in Constantinople. He went there on his way to the Holy Land, and while hobnobbing with the Sultan got him to sell him this tract for $24,000. The land, however, was not large enough, and it adjoined the American cemetery. The Germans bought this, the Americans here claim, in an underhand way, at a cost of $16,000 additional. They had the bodies removed, and when I visited the place recently, I found the graveyard covered with building materials. There were lime barrels in some of the holes, and the sites of many of the tombs were covered with bricks. In digging up the cemetery, a house was excavated which some say was used by the Virgin Mary at the time of the crucifixion. The tomb of David is also supposed to be near there, and the spot is considered especially holy. The Kaiser has given the land to the Roman Catholics of his country, and the church is to be under the order of the Benedictines.

The German Church inside the city is owned by the Lutherans. There is a German colony outside Jerusalem on the way to Bethlehem, the church of which is said to stand on the site of the house of Simeon, who recognized the infant Jesus as the Messiah. A little further on is a leper hospital, also run by the Germans.

Kaiser Wilhelm at Jerusalem.

The Emperor of Germany when he made his trip through the Holy Land created as great an excitement as Theodore Roosevelt when he cavorted through Europe. I have had a talk with the man who had charge of the imperial excursion. He was connected with Cook & Son, and acted as its dragoman. He tells me that Kaiser Wilhelm and the Empress started in at Beirut and crossed the mountains of Lebanon to Baalbec and Damascus. They then returned to Beirut and took ship down the coast, past Tyre and Sidon, to the Bay of Acre. Here horses were waiting for them and they rode down around the slopes of Mount Carmel, over the plains of Sharon to Jaffa and thence up the hills of Judea to Jerusalem. There were about a thousand in the party and it required 1250 mules and horses to carry them and their baggage. The Emperor himself had a staff of 120, who ate at his own tables, and there were in addition 140 naval and military officers outside. The Empress had her ladies-in-waiting with her, and there were 175 high Turks and officials supplied by the Sultan as a special escort. The Emperor's tour was so arranged that he had four camps, and he slept in a different camp every night and had a new one for each meal.

Although the journey was made in October, the weather was hot and the chief trouble was to supply the expedition with water. Some died of thirst, and between Haifa and Jaffa six horses dropped dead of sunstroke. It was so hot that the trip to the Dead Sea and the Jordan was not attempted, but the Emperor went to Bethlehem and other places near here. He remained seven days

An American Store.

This colony lives together as a community, and its members hold all things in common. At first they threw their money into a common fund, and lived without working. They found, however, that this was soon spent, and of late years they have established a business of their own and are now self-supporting. They have their own house outside the walls, where they live very comfortably, eating at a common table with worship morning and evening. They frequently take Americans in as paying guests, charging them less than they would have to pay at the hotel for much better quarters. They also have a bakery from which they sell bread and cake; a shoe shop and an art school, where girls are taught painting and drawing. They have factories in which they make desks, boxes and other beautiful things of olivewood; and a weaving establishment where cloths of wool and linen are made.

It is now about ten years since they established what is known as the American store. This is near the Jaffa gate inside Jerusalem, and right on the way from that gate to the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. It is under the New Hotel.

This store is about the only one-price establishment in the Holy Land. In all other places three times what is expected is asked and one has to dicker and bargain and beat down the merchants. In the American store one can buy photographs and slides of the Holy Land, brass work from Damascus, rugs from Persia and Turkey, and anything of a curio nature made in the country.

During my stay in Jerusalem I have several times visited the colony, and have been delighted with the peace, quiet and brotherly love which seem to prevail. Its members are well bred and intelligent; and as far as I can see they believe what they profess. An interesting feature is their grace before meals. This is always sung at the table, the members and strangers uniting.

THANKSGIVING IN SWITZERLAND.

Thanksgiving seems to the majority of people strictly an American holiday, a day of family reunions and seven-course dinners. However, a similar holiday is celebrated in a different way in an entirely different country. To us it was rather odd at first, but the spirit of true thankfulness was everywhere manifest, striking a note of kindred feeling between the Swiss holiday and ours.

Thanksgiving in Switzerland is a movable feast, coming at the end of the harvest season, and usually falling on a Sunday in the middle of October. The country is at the height of its beauty in this month, the chrysanthemums are in full bloom in every garden, the terraced vineyards are showing autumn colors, and there is a golden haze over the rugged mountains. A feeling of peace and plenty prevails; the harvest is garnered, the wine is made, and the people of this thrifty little country are grateful for the earth's bounties.

It may not be entirely according to our ideas of artistic decorating to have the interior of the churches on Thanksgiving Sunday resemble a market place, but nevertheless the right spirit is at bottom. In place of flowers, strings of apples are festooned from arch to arch, clusters of grapes adorn available corners, the altar and pulpit are banked with every kind of vegetable, carrots, turnips and even cabbages being used. Song prayers are offered in gratitude and thanksgiving for the good harvest and a lengthy sermon is delivered appropriate to the occasion. The sun outside is warm and the air inside is heavy, laden with a strong odor of the Marche. At the end of the last hymn one hastens gladly into the open.

The Sabbath stillness of the afternoon is broken by the blare of a brass band. A long procession winds its way about the narrow streets, followed by a crowd of men, women and children, for the Swiss people have the love of a small boy for a parade, and they indulge themselves in their fancy on every possible occasion. On this day the procession goes from church to church, stopping in front of each one, while the band plays a few selections. The crowd is not particularly attentive, but makes up for that lack in good humor. Small groups stand about the church square, talking and laughing, until the last number is finished, and then take up their position in the rear of the cortege and follow it on to the next church.

Thus the day wears on, in ydluf sbfwkyp fwykl gratitude for the bounties of nature. A strange Thanksgiving and a simple one compared to our historic holiday and our elaborate manner of celebrating it, but beneath the surface runs the same under-current of sincere gratitude.

HISTORY OF THE SAFETY PIN.

A historian of invention tells us that to the wails of a long-suffering infant we owe the boon of the safety pin. Here is the story: A little boy named Harrison, an English blacksmith's son, had to look after his baby brother. The baby often cried, and its tears were usually traced to pin punctures. The boy nurse tried a long time to bend the pins in such a form that they could be used with safety to his brother's flesh. In this he failed, but his father, the blacksmith, perceiving the utility of the idea that the lad lad had been at work on, took it up on his own account and eventually turned out the safety pin that is in use today all over the world.—[Kansas City Star.

BETWEEN THE LINES IN CALIFORNIA.

(Quotations from Bryant's "Death of the Flowers.")

"The meancholy days are come, the saddest of the year;
"Of wailing winds, and naked woods, and meadows brown and sear."
The southland muse no season knows so chilling and so drear;
The southland knows no leaden skies—'tis golden sunshine here.
"Heaped in the hollows of the grove, the autumn leaves lie dead;
"They nestle to the eddying gust, and to the rabbit's tread."
The groves that garb the southland hills have leaves of living green;
They dally with old Ocean's breath, they shimmer in their sheen.
"The robin and the wren are flown, and from the shrubs the jay,
"And from the wood top calls the crow through all the gloomy day."
The mocker's liquid music floats from eucalyptus spire,
The linnet and the lark have joined the glad, autumnal choir.

"Where are the flowers, the fair young flowers, that lately sprang and stood "In brighter light and softer airs, a beauteous sisterhood?"
A plaintive query fair enough 'mid bleak New England hills,
It wakens no responsive chord by sunny, southland rills.
'Alas! they all are in their graves: the gentle race of flowers
"Are lying in their lowly beds, with the fair and of ours."
A requiem, a falling tear, a sad and pleading strain
That fain would sweep the southland lute—but swee and sweeps in vain.
"The rain is falling where they lie, but the cold November rain
"Calls not from out the gloomy earth the lovely ones again."
A blazing garden to the hills, November showers bring;
No spectral Winter stalks between our Autumn and our Spring.

"And now, when comes the calm mild day, as still such days will come,
"To call the squirrel and the bee from out their winter home;
"When the sound of dropping nuts is heard, though all the trees are still,
"And twinkle in the smoky light the waters of the rill,
"The south wind searches for the flowers whose fragrance late he bore,
"And sighs to find them in the wood and by the stream no more."
Do mellowed remnants flitting by proclaim the summer done,
The passing of our autumn means another spring begun.
The nuts are falling from the boughs, but close at hand are seen
The apples of Hesperides outcropping from the green.
The southland muse knows naught of dread, but only living flowers;
The southland knows no leaden days, but only golden hours.

LURE O' DREAMS.

"Where do you keep your dreams, my boy?
Your face is lit, and for very joy
Your feet are swift in the vale and lea—
Tell me, pray, where your dreams may be."

"They are wonderful dreams," he made reply,
"And I share them not with the passer-by.
Here in my heart I have hid them deep;
They bless my waking and thread my sleep
With golden strands—but I must not tell—
They are wonderful dreams and serve me well!"

"Where are your dreams?" His face was tense
With the toil of years, and the wage man's pence
Was hung where the weary day grew dim;
"Where are your dreams?" I asked of him.

He raised his face in the late sun's glare
And too his cap from the graying hair.
"They were wonderful dreams," he made reply,
"And I shared them not with the passer-by.
Here in my heart I hid them deep
As men hide rubies, but, oh, the steep,
Rough way and the hunger keen,
And the dry brook-bed where the willows lean
Their dead trunks vainly!"

He drove his spade
Deep where the line of the trench was laid,
And from the swamp, across the hill,
Came the sad, far cry of the whip-poor-will.

"Ghosts" at Sea.

THE FIGHT AGAINST STRANGE AND UNEXPLAINED PHENOMENA.

By Alfred C. Pickells.

IN the evening of February 21, 1901, the Pacific Mail steamship Rio de Janeiro approached the entrance to the Golden Gate in a dense fog. Under the circumstances, the ship was a possible victim of two dangers, that of being run down if at anchor, or that of stranding if under way.

The Pacific Mail Company considered the act of anchoring the lesser of the two risks, and their regulations so ordered. The ship, therefore, anchored. But the seafaring man knows that just as much danger, if not more, threatens the ship in a fog and out of command. Hence, at 5:30 a.m. the following day, when the mist showed the first signs of breaking, the commander, Capt. William Ward, gave the order to proceed.

A few miles farther in the fog settled again. They were already in the channel; the opportunity to anchor had passed. The pilot was a man of long experience. He steered by the fog signals of Point Bonita and Lime Point on the north and of Fort Point on the south, selecting by this help a course which undoubtedly would give the dangerous rocks off Fort Point a wide berth. A half hour passed thus, then the warning notes suddenly faded into a deep, uncanny silence. The pilot tried his whistle, hoping to get an echo from the high bluffs of Point Diablo. He listened often, and having listened in vain, shook his head at the gravity of the situation. He knew that there existed a certain condition which the sailor has termed the "ghost."

Forty minutes later and barely a half-mile farther in the Rio de Janeiro lay at the bottom of the ocean, Capt. Ward had become a suicide, and 130 persons out of the 210 on board had been drowned. All this well within the range of audibility of four fog signals which, proofs afterward declared, had been kept in continuous operation.

There are 146 fog signals guarding the coasts of the United States. They are either trumpets, sirens, whistles or bells, the best product which skilled artisans and select materials can turn out. They are in charge of experienced and trustworthy men; they are operated continuously during the prevalence of fog; and they issue tremendous blasts of sound which, in some cases, have a range of audibility as great as twenty-eight miles.

A Mysterious Factor.

These facts might make it appear that such a system would give thorough protection to the navigator in foggy weather. But the accident to the Rio de Janeiro indicates that there is another factor to be considered, that because of this factor there are times when the units of this great system, though sounding their notes without interruption, are utterly useless, that there are other times when the signals become absolutely misleading, drawing the unsuspecting navigator into danger.

The volume of sound emitted from the axis of the bell of the average first-class trumpet or siren has been calculated to be from ten to fifteen times greater than that of the largest locomotive or ship's whistle. Should this enormous blast spread laterally, as it was supposed when aerial signals were first constructed, the sound waves from the siren would travel horizontally to an average distance of eighteen miles, from the trumpet, eleven miles, and from the 12-inch whistle, ten miles.

This would mean that the navigator would first hear the signal about eighteen miles off shore, and by its guidance steer directly for his objective point. But it often occurs that he will hear the signal at its outer range, then pass through irregular intervals of silence that sometimes stretch out to four or five miles in extent. Sometimes he will hear a double report from two widely different points ahead. One is the original, one its echo, but the two are exact in tone. The question therefore arises: Which is the original? Which course shall he follow? There are other times when, for instance, having heard the signal distinctly on his starboard bow, he passes through an area of silence and hears it again, equally as distinctly, on his port bow. Then the question: Is this an echo, or has a cross-current swerved him from his course?

Wrecking the Rhode Island.

Nearly twenty-two years before the loss of the Rio de Janeiro, the wrecking of the steamer Rhode Island caused the revelation of these startling facts, and upon these facts the owners based the reasonableness of their orders. But, as in the case of the Rio de Janeiro, the Rhode Island also demonstrated that it was sometimes necessary to disregard these orders. In a similar way it was caught in the channel of the West Passage leading into Narragansett Bay after having been guided by the fog signal at Beavertail Point. An hour later, while groping blindly in the thick mist in the midst of an area of silence, the vessel crashed on the rocks of Bonnet Point. When the fog lifted in the morning, November 7, 1880, it was found that they were within one and one-half miles of a fog signal whose range of audibility was about ten miles.

Naturally, the officers and passengers swore that the fog signal was not sounding at the time. Quite as naturally, also, persons residing for many miles on either side along the coast testified that it was sounding uninterruptedly, because they heard it.

Lieutenant-Commander Chadwick, U.S.N., made several investigations of the acoustic conditions surrounding this fog signal subsequent to the wrecking of the Rhode Island. In his report he said:

"In the summer of 1881, in a heavy fog, while running from Narragansett Pier to Newport, I came near wrecking the steamer Cactus by steaming as near to Beavertail as possible, that I might find out for myself if the fog signal, which I could not hear, was really sounding. It was not until we were abreast of the signal that we heard it at all, and then it burst suddenly on us as if it had just been started. We carried the sound on another course clear to Newport, and lying there the next day, Sunday, in a fog, we heard it all day. In 1885, when I spent a day cruising round Beavertail, I heard it at points where I did not hear it in 1881; and I did not hear it in 1885 at points where I did hear it distinctly in 1881."

"Infant Theories."

Lieutenant-Commander Chadwick's results and the report which, in the meantime, came from Portland, Me., that the Cape Elizabeth fog signal, nine miles away to the southwest, could be plainly heard in the city of Portland in spite of northeast gales which blew directly against the sound, and that it could not be heard in the intervening distance, aroused the scientists of both the United States and British lighthouse services to advance theories. They were infant theories and therefore aroused controversies; but out of the controversies came an accepted explanation. Refraction was considered the offending cause. Whenever the lower current of air opposes the direction of the sound and there exists a favoring current in the upper air, it was claimed that the front of a wave of sound is tilted upward. Sound waves, too, were said to have a tendency to spread laterally. Moreover, cold, denser air was found to reflect them. Hence, the accepted explanation was that the combined effects of reflection and the lateral spreading of the waves themselves caused them to descend to the earth again at some point farther on.

But there was still another explanation to be made, another question to be answered. Why should the same condition exist when the wind did not blow? A few months after the Rhode Island stranded, the yacht Galatea ran ashore in a dead calm and fog on Little Gull Island, in Long Island Sound, within a half-mile of the fog signal. The navigator did not hear the signal at all, though proof was given that it was heard in varying directions and distances as great as sixteen miles.

The suggestion was made that local conditions might be responsible. But this was refuted. And an extract from the journal of Prof. Milton W. Humphrey of the University of Virginia showed that such phenomena existed over land as well as over water.

"June 17, 1864.—Breckenridge, with 11,000 men, was joined by Early with 4000 at Lynchburg, Va. We were entrenched around the southern limits of the city. Hunter, with about 20,000 men, was driving in our cavalry from the direction of Bedford City, nearly south. The weather was very hot, and there had been no rain for a long time. About 6 p.m. I observed shells exploding in the air in our front, but could hear neither the guns nor the shells, though the distance was barely two miles. I called the attention of others to the phenomenon, and their observations were in accord with mine. About sunset, when the shells were still exploding, the reports not only suddenly became audible, but seemed unusually loud. Then we also heard the guns."

Prof. John Tyndall, the scientific adviser of the Elder Brethren of Trinity House, or the British Lighthouse Board, explained such phenomena to be due to the existence of an acoustic cloud in the atmosphere, a cloud which obstructs the waves of sound in the atmosphere in the same manner that heavy clouds break the sun's rays. He claimed that such a cloud consisted of air of different density and humidity; that it also existed in clear as well as foggy weather.

Discouraged at Results.

This revelation sickened the Lighthouse Board with the premonition that all fog signals might be similarly affected. It looked as if the humane object had been labored for in vain, that thousands of dollars in coal consumption were annually blown into the fog for naught. Indeed, quite suggestive were the facts which came from the reports of the life-saving service, showing that in one year no less than 126 vessels stranded during fog at points supposed to be adequately guarded by these instruments of warning.

Though Prof. Tyndall and other scientists explained the cause, when it came to suggesting a remedy their brains went the fog signals one better—they worked, but they suffered aberrations of products and, therefore, issued no advice. They knew of no law which would foretell the appearance of these acoustic clouds, the length of their visitation, nor the place which they might select.

But the members of the Lighthouse Board knew that such a condition, if allowed to exist, would exact a fearful toll upon the lives of ships and men. And being mostly sailormen themselves, they knew why the sailor termed this intense, sullen silence in the midst of this dense, clammy mist, the "ghost." Because, caught in its grasp, to anchor increased the danger of being run down, to proceed, even with soundings, invited stranding, to lessen the danger of collision meant reduced speed, and to reduce speed meant retarded action of the helm and the possibility of being swerved by stronger cross-currents, such as caused the loss of the Rio de Janeiro. Because, in brief, its multiplicity of possible fatalities produced the moment of greatest anxiety on shipboard. Naturally, such knowledge provided the stimulus which makes necessity the mother of invention.

It requires repeated attempts to test a fog signal for its areas of aberration of sound. On one day the results might show a perfect distribution of the sound waves, on another day a distinct and well-defined area of silence, while on still another day there might be found several patches of the ghost. Several years therefore elapsed before the investigation of twenty-five fog signals on the North Atlantic Coast was completed, but the results showed that twenty-five cases of aberration of sound have happened. Th

fact, already inve

North Atlantic Coast by submarine fog bells, it found an expectant and hoping shipping world in waiting. The men of the express lines eagerly grasped a weapon with which to gain a few more points in their fight against the ghost, and 300 Trans-Atlantic liners were provided with an equipment.

Direction Determined.

The advent of wireless telegraphy created some attention in the shipping world from a fog-signaling standpoint in addition to the use for which it was originally intended. Early predictions for any new invention are always numerous, and wireless telegraphy did not escape this trait. The claim was freely made that a means had been discovered to defeat the effect of the ghost. But one problem confronted the inventors of the various systems; namely, direction. Of what use, asked the navigator, would wireless telegraphy be in fog signaling unless we can locate the source of the signal.

Within the past year the nearest approach to a device to overcome this difficulty appeared in an invention produced by two Italian naval officers. It was designed to give direction and distance for any signals received. Several ships of the Italian navy, the Italian Trans-Atlantic Company, and the French line have used the instrument successfully. But the intricacies of wireless telegraphy limit its use to ships equipped with experienced men; and this use was still further limited by the possibility of the appearance of certain conditions in the atmosphere which affect the transmission of electric waves in the same manner that the acoustic cloud interferes with the transmission of sound waves. An atmosphere can, and frequently is, so irregularly ionized by local static electrical conditions as to completely destroy signals sent out by even the more powerful shore stations.

But whether these systems be perfect or only partially so they are, to a more or less extent, aids to navigation. To the landsman the great attention given to the smallest detail in the work of navigation is a source of both wonder and admiration. In case of fog the modern liner, for instance, will make use of the wireless telegraph outfit, the submarine bell receiver, the aerial fog signal, the lead line for soundings, and still have lookouts posted in the crow's nest aloft, on the forward bridge, and one at each end of the navigation bridge. The navigator, in fact, makes use of every possible help gained by sight or hearing under such perilous conditions.

Perhaps he is often forced to this. Competition in the maritime world has developed in him a tendency to take some narrow risks to shorten his time of voyages. Often the cutting off of a few hours from any one of his voyages will mean a reducing of expenses by several hundred dollars, and, perhaps, as in the case of irregular line steamers, the securing of a more desirable cargo. This, in turn, means a bonus to the commander of the ship, and to secure that bonus he will occasionally rely on the long experience of pilots against his better judgment and give the order which, too often, destroys his ship and injures his reputation.

Other Days of Thanks.

FIRST FRUIT FESTIVALS AND VINTAGES OF VICTORY.

By May C. Ringwalt.

YNE-PING, Feast of Moon Cakes, is the name that the Chinese give to their harvest-home festival held at full-moon-tide in the eighth month of the Chinese year. Very important is it that the night be clear, for an unclouded view of the moon is the shining promise of happiness and plenty. The fatted calf that is the appetizing center of attraction at the feast of rejoicing on that gala occasion is neither the goose of Michaelmas England nor the Thanksgiving turkey of "Our Own United States," but a beautiful roasted-brown piggy savory with herbs, while the celebrated round-faced moon cakes stuffed with minced pork, nuts, ginger, watermelon seeds and other toothsome mysteries and served with a sweet sauce, not only grace the family board, but are also brought as good-luck gifts by friends and relatives, ceremoniously presented to the accompaniment of libations offered to the moon.

Four months later, in this great agricultural country where husbandry was introduced by Shin-nung, the Divine Husbandman, 2700 B.C., comes another thanksgiving day presided over by six deities, four gods of wealth, the god of the soil, and Chin Lun, "the pure dragon."

In October and November the beauty-given months of chrysanthemum and maple, are the harvest thanksgiving of Japan, the 17th of October and the 23rd of November, both official holidays, when banks and schools are closed, flags fly from every house and all the Japanese world and its grandmother don best bib-and-tucker clothes. "The Divine Tasting," the first is picturesquely called, an offering of the first crop of the year to the first imperial ancestor, the other imperial ancestors waiting their turn of new crop offerings until the second celebration.

Very interesting is a family thanksgiving festival among the Hindus of Southern India, called Pongol. New rice in a new pot is boiled over a new fire lighted at noon on the day when, according to the heavenwise astrologer, the sun enters the tropic of Capricorn. The boiling process is eagerly watched by every member of the family, for if the milk boils rapidly the year will be prosperous, if slowly, luck a limping laggard whatever the undertaking.

On the eve before the wheat harvest in the same superstition-loving corner of the globe it is another Hindu custom for the members of a family secretly to gather a handful of ears at dusk, some to be hung up over the door, the rest to be roasted and the next morning eaten in milk by way of a joyful beginning of a day given up to rejoicing and merry-making.

In great honor is held the reaper of the first sheaf of rice in the harvest fields among the Coorgs of Southern India, where on the appointed day at sunset the whole household takes a hot bath, then goes to the rice field, each to receive a stalk of the new rice which this divinely-chosen reaper man cuts with a new sickle and graciously distributes among them.

The ceremonious eating of the new yam is a curious first-fruits custom among the Onitsha on the Niger. The country doctor places a piece of roasted yam on the lips of the one chosen for this sacred rite. The man first blows the smoke from it upward, then pokes the whole into his mouth, at the same time crying aloud: "I thank God for being able to eat the new yam."

In the land of the Zulus, the profane man who would dare get in his own crops until after the new-year festival of new fruits at the end of December knows that he may expect nothing short of being struck dead. On that new-year day of thanksgiving all assemble at the King's Kraal for a feast and dance. In a great pot is boiled an awe-inspiring mixture of various fruits, corn, pumpkin, etc., combined with the flesh of an animal that has been offered in special sacrifice, a portion of this sacred stew, in token of dedication, placed in each man's mouth by the King himself. The King also takes a prominent part in the dance, which is of a religious character, and the mantle of grass or of corn leaves that he wears is afterward burned and its ashes scattered over the ground and later carefully trodden into it by driven cattle.

The Busk, celebrated in July or August, was a most solemn harvest festival among our Creek Indians. In preparation there was a strict fast, the burning of old clothes, household utensils, and left-over grain, the final extinction of all fires.

The new fire, made on an altar erected under a festive canopy by the high priest of the nation, was to atone for all crimes of the past year except murder. Then a basket of new fruits was brought, the priest taking out a little of each kind, rubbing it with bear's oil and offering it to the Great Spirit. New fire and new fruits were carried into the awaiting houses. There followed a dance around the altar under the sacred arbor, all in martial garb, each dancer with a white feather in his hand.

Of all thanksgiving festivals none more picturesque than that wonderful ingathering Feast of Tabernacles among the Hebrew race, when at harvest-tide devout Jews journeyed miles to meet together for a holy service of praise to the great Jehovah. The tabernacles, the booths in which the faithful pilgrims sojourned during the festival, rustic arbors that provided sufficient shelter from the sun, but had big enough peep holes for the stars to look in at night, deeply significant to the Jew's religious heart, for did not the children of Israel dwell in booths when the Lord brought them out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage?

Another custom of the festival commemorating an event of sacred history was the daily processional around a decked altar, each man that took part carrying his festal bouquet, and repeating the 25th verse of the 118th Psalm: "Save now, I beseech thee, O Lord: O Lord, I beseech thee, send now prosperity"—the solemn circuit made once every day during the first six days of the celebration, seven times on the seventh, to picture forth the encompassing of the walls of Jericho.

"O give thanks unto the Lord for He is good: because His mercy endureth forever," and other appropriate verses were chanted while all present waved willow branches. The primitive dances of maidens in the old vineyards formed another beautiful part of the festival. There were ceremonial libations of water, symbolic of the need of rain to further the increase of the crops and in accordance with the command: "Pour out water before me on the festival in order that your rams for the year may be blest." And finally the weird dance where the dancers recited hymns and songs of praise.

No less interesting than all these harvest-home thanksgivings are two thanksgiving days commemorating special "providences," the Festspiel of Rothenburg and Geneva's Escalade.

The first is in honor of its town's liberation after its capture by Tilly in 1631. According to the delightfully naive tradition, the keys of the town and a fine of 30,000 thalers were demanded by the captors, but the inhabitants begged so hard to be let off that Tilly offered them freedom if any one among the citizens could be found who could at a single draught empty a beaker of wine holding over three quarts, a patriot by the name of Musch actually making good.

The Escalade is the annual thanksgiving festival of Geneva held on December 11 and 12, celebrating the repulse of a secret assault made on the city by the Savoyards in the seventeenth century. The attempt was at night, and men sprang out of bed and flew to the rescue without stopping to dress. On the nights of the festival small wonder then that men, women, and children dressed up in ridiculous fashion and wearing carnival masks, walk the streets, laughing and jesting and throwing confetti. Family reunions and thanksgiving turkeys are special features of these holidays, while the gift tokens most in evidence are chocolate bonbons in the shape of little iron pots with lids bearing the date of 1602 and that of the current year.

Thanksgiving Cranberries

SOME DAY BEFORE LONG WE MAY HAVE A NEW KIND.

By Rene Bache.

DR. DAVID FAIRCHILD, who manages the business of introducing new plants into this country, is disposed to favor the experimental planting of the European cranberry on this side of the water. It is smaller, but better flavored than ours, and might prove a very agreeable addition to the American bill of fare in winter.

Thanksgiving, of course, is always associated with the cranberry. Without its sauce, indeed, the turkey would be incomplete. According to reliable estimates, at least 75,000 barrels of the luscious red berries are required to meet the demand for the great autumn festival.

Cranberries, however, are of importance to human happiness in ways beyond mere holiday-making. They give much-needed employment in autumn to thousands of men, women and children, especially in Massachusetts and southern New Jersey, who by this means are able to gain a little money to help their families through the winter. For this fruit is gathered almost entirely by hand picking, in which even the old folks and the very little ones are able to take part. The period of harvest covers about a month, during which whole populations drop all other occupations and assemble in the neighborhood of the cranberry bogs, many of the pickers living in tents. It is for them an extremely healthful, as well as profitable vacation.

The picking begins earlier than in former days, because the crop is usually harvested green. After winnowing the berries, to get rid of leaves and refuse that may be mixed with them, they are carefully sorted, all defective ones being picked out, and are spread on the bare ground under an open shed. There they slowly ripen, acquiring a beautiful red color, and in due time are packed in barrels and boxes for market.

The early colonists in Massachusetts were introduced to the cranberry by the Indians, who had long been familiar with its usefulness as a sauce for game. It was, of course, a wild crop, gathered in the autumn on the marshes; and such it remained up to within comparatively recent years. On this account the cranberries of earlier days were much more expensive than they are now, and before the Civil War they were sometimes sold at $50 a barrel. At the present time the price is ordinarily about $5 to $8 a barrel.

Since time immemorial that part of southern New Jersey which is included within the limits of ocean and adjacent counties has been famous for its cranberry crop, the region in question embracing extensive areas of swamps. But the crop was always a wild crop up to fifty years ago, when its cultivation was first begun by a one-legged man named John Webb, at Forked River. He was a poor fellow who earned a precarious living by doing odd jobs, which included the picking of cranberries in the season when they were ripe. In some way he acquired ownership of a piece of swamp land where the wild berries grew, and his attention was drawn to the fact that the vines flourished much more luxuriantly, and bore larger and better-flavored fruit, in places where sand had been washed from high ground and carried down upon the flat bog.

Taking advantage of the hint, he pulled all the pine and cedar stumps out of his little swamp, leveled it, spread three inches of sand over it, and drained it by dividing it into oblong beds with ditches. People thought he was crazy. But three years later he had such a crop of cranberries as had never been seen before, and his fruit was of extraordinary size and excellence. When he died, he left a large fortune, all of it made out of cranberries.

Thus it was that cranberry culture, today so important an industry, was first begun. The method adopted at the present time is much the same as that originated by Webb, the first step in the making of a "bog" being the pulling of stumps and the stripping off of the top layer of turf. Next, the surface is covered with the purest white sand obtainable, which is brought in wheelbarrows and laid on to a depth of three or four inches. Finally, the bog is ditched for drainage, to carry off surface water. Partly overflowed land is best for the purpose, because the cranberry swamp should be flooded in winter, as a protection against frost. Nothing accomplishes this so well as a covering of five or six feet of water, which, on being withdrawn in the month of May, reveals the vines as green and fresh as a pasture in summer.

Flooding also serves as a means of destroying various destructive insects. The sand merely affords a bed for the vines to stand in and rest upon, their food being derived wholly from the water. No cultivation worth mentioning is requir

After the traitors in the Gunpowder Plot had been tried and punished in 1605, it was ordered that because of their deliverance the English people should keep the 5th of November every year "as a public thanksgiving to Almighty God; that unfeigned thankfulness may never be forgotten, and that all ages to come may yield praises of God's divine majesty for the same." The "5th of November" continued a legal thanksgiving day for more than two centuries; but in later years it fell into disuse, and in 1833 was abolished by Parliament.

Long before the advent of the Pilgrims in Massachusetts, all rituals contained expressions of gratitude to God for His mercies. In that of the Church of England, special prayers were provided for the Sunday service. This service, however, must be carefully distinguished from the Thanksgiving Day of the Pilgrim Fathers. Failure to make this distinction has led to the groundless claim that the Popham colonists were "the first to keep Thanksgiving Day" in America. The service at Monhegan, on which this claim is based, was the regular Sunday service of the Church of England; and while it had an element of thanksgiving, the day can in nowise be regarded as a thanksgiving day as that term is understood. Contemporary evidence refutes all claim to the contrary. From "A Relation of Voyage to Sagadoc," we read as follows: "Sunday beinge the 9th of August in the morninge the most part of our holl company of both shipes landed on this land whear the cross standeth; and thear we heard a sermon delyvred unto us by our preacher, gyvinge God thanks for our happy metings and sagge arually into the country and so returned abord again." (Massachusetts Historical Society Proceedings XVII. 102.)

The record made in his "Breeches Bible" by William White, who came over in the Mayflower, has far more significance in determining the origin of our American Thanksgiving Day than the event at Monhegan. The record reads: "William White married on ye 3rd day of March, 1620, to Susanah Tilly, Peregrine White born on board ye Mayflower in Cape Cod Harbor. Sonne born to Susannah White 19th ye six o'clock morning. Next day we meet for prayer and thanksgiving." This meeting "for prayer and thanksgiving" was not on Sunday, but on Tuesday. The fact that it was not a part of the regular Sunday service makes it more nearly accord with our idea of Thanksgiving Day than does the Monhegan event. But this similarity is not sufficient to warrant our regarding it as the origin of the American custom.

The prototype of our present Thanksgiving Day is found in the harvest festival at Plymouth in 1621. The long winter that followed the establishment of the colony had been so severe that less than half of the settlers had survived it. "At one time during the winter only Brewster, Standish, and five other hardy ones were well enough to get about." In the spring and summer that followed, their fortunes improved, and by autumn they had cleared twenty-six acres and made it ready for cultivation. This industry, too, had been rewarded by a bounteous harvest. Now food and fuel sufficient for the needs of the approaching winter were laid in. Then Gov. Bradford ordered a thanksgiving—the first in America.

The first thanksgiving was not for a day only. It continued a week. In a letter to a friend in England, Edward Winslow has given us a brief account of the festivities. This letter bears date of December 11, and in it Winslow wrote: "Our harvest being gotten in, our Governor sent four men on fowling that so we might after special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruits of our labors. They killed as much fowl as with a little help beside served the company about a week. At which times among other recreations we exercised our arms, many of the Indians coming amongst us, and among the rest their greatest king, Massasoyt, with some ninety men, whom for three days we entertained and feasted, and they went out and killed five deer which they brought and bestowed on our Governor and upon the captains and others."

From other sources we know that there were athletic contests besides the exercises of arms which Winslow mentioned. No doubt they played at "stool ball," an old form of croquet, and "pitch-ye-bar," which Bradford mentioned in his journal. There were no special religious services; at least there is no evidence of any. The Pilgrims had their daily prayers before breakfast. In this service, and in the joyous spirit that seems to have dominated the occasion as well, there was, no doubt, a devout thanksgiving to God for all the blessings He had vouchsafed them.

The records make no mention of a thanksgiving day in the next year, but in the year following, 1623, such a day was held. This, however, was not in the autumn, but in July on the arrival of provisions from England. Nearly fifty years pass before we hear of another thanksgiving day at Plymouth. There was one in 1668, and another for the accession of the Orange Stuarts, William and Mary, in 1689. An autumnal thanksgiving was held in 1690, the last in the history of Plymouth Colony, for in the next year it was united with Massachusetts.

Independently of Plymouth, Massachusetts Bay Colony had occasionally its own thanksgiving days. There was such a day for the "safe arrival of ships," July 8, 1630; and again the next February, when the provision ship, Ambrose, arrived. In 1632, the General Court ordered a "publique" thanksgiving day in recognition of the "m'cy of God vouchsafed to the churches of God in Germany and the Pallatinate." The next year the court, because of the bountiful harvest, appointed October 16 as a thanksgiving day—the first harvest festival in the history of the colony. By 1680 the autumnal thanksgiving had become an annual festival. No doubt in its games and sports it took the place of the English Christmas, for until comparatively recent date all that savored of Rome and the episcopacy was held in disfavor in Massachusetts.

During the Revolution Thanksgiving Day became national. All through the war, Congress annually set apart a day for thanksgiving; but after the "Thanksgiving for Peace" in 1788, there were no more until Washington became President in 1789. On October 3 of this year at New York he issued a proclamation asking the observance of Thursday, November 26, as a day for national thanksgiving. This was the beginning of the orthodox "last Thursday" that has since been named in Presidential proclamations. By this time the festival had general official recognition throughout New England, and in this year, 1789, the Protestant Episcopal prayer-books recognized the authority of the civil government in the appointing of thanksgiving days.

As the first new States of the West were quite generally settled from New England, the festival was perpetuated and soon became a custom not only in these, but in other Western States as they were formed. In the South there was no recognition of the custom until after 1858. In that year, eight Governors of Southern States issued proclamations after the model of New England, calling upon their people to observe the last Thursday in November as a day for thanksgiving. But the Civil War was at hand and the bitterness engendered in the long controversy over slavery caused many violent opponents of the North to oppose the proclamations because of their introduction of a "Yankee custom."

Undoubtedly our present Thanksgiving Day has its prototype in the Plymouth thanksgiving festival of 1621. It has been asserted repeatedly that the Plymouth festival was suggested to the Pilgrims by the Jewish "Feast of Ingathering." This is not probable, as the differences between them are more striking than the likenesses. They were of the same duration, each lasting a week; and in common with all other harvest festivals they had the same intent. But in the Jewish festival sacrifice and worship were the prevailing characteristics, while in that of the Pilgrims they were entirely wanting.

If the Plymouth festival has immediate kinship with similar events in the past, it has analogies with the Harvest Home of England, which may relate them. The Pilgrims were familiar with the English celebration, and many of them, no doubt, had participated in it. The dominant mark of each was the joy over the ingathering harvest. In some districts in England, too, the festival had continued a week. Richard Carew, in his "Survey of Cornwell," in speaking of the English festival, says: "Neither doth good cheers wholly expire (though it somewhat decreases,) but with the end of the weeke."

The chief differences between the two was the want of ceremony at Plymouth that characterized the English festival. In some parts of England, the merrymaking was around the "noddingsheaf," or "kern baby;" and in many places, the last load of the harvest was drawn to the barn in a wagon called the "hoch cart." In front went pipe and tabor, and around it gathered the reapers, male and female, singing joyously as they proceeded. At Plymouth there was no ceremony. The last shock of corn was not brought in "arrayed in brilliant finery," neither was there any "blessing of the cart," or "kissing of the sheaves." There was no harvest song so familiar in the fatherland:

"Here's health to the barley mow;
Here's a health to the man
Who very well can
Both harrow and plow and sow."

SCHOOL HOWLERS.

Here are some genuine school howlers, from recent examination papers, which have the merit of being new:

What are fossils? Fossils are those remains of plants and animals which keep best when left to themselves.

A volcano is a very powerful rock.

What is the feminine of bachelor? Old made, Axminster.

The minerals of Holland are gin, linen, pickles, and crockery ware.

Name some English sovereigns who died a violent death? Queen Elizabeth; she fell into a deep sleep.

Henry VII. He died by fits.

Richard I. He had his head extracted by a unskillful physician.

What is an interdict? It is caused by bad sewage.

What is a patriot? A grandfather.

How could the King have let all the people at a distance know that they must prepare for war? He might have set fire to a deacon on the top of a hill.

What were the Provisions of Oxford? Salt, beef, ham and bacon.

Between whom were the Wars of the Roses fought? Between the Turks and the Sadducees.

What was the use of a city of refuge? When a man had been murdered accidentally he might jump up and run to it.

Give the character of Henry VII. He had a downcast in his left eye.

The feminine of Robin is Robin Redbreast.

What would you have done if you had been in ancient Briton and wanted warm clothes for winter (the absence of shops, etc., had been fully impressed)? I should have cried.—[Dublin Times.

WHEN DUTY CALLS.

"You are going to the polls regardless of the weather?"

"Yep," replied Farmer Corntossel; "my idea of a real patriot is a man who will travel jest as far to cast his ballot as he would to see a circus."—[Washington Star.

Brother Dickey's Fairy Story.

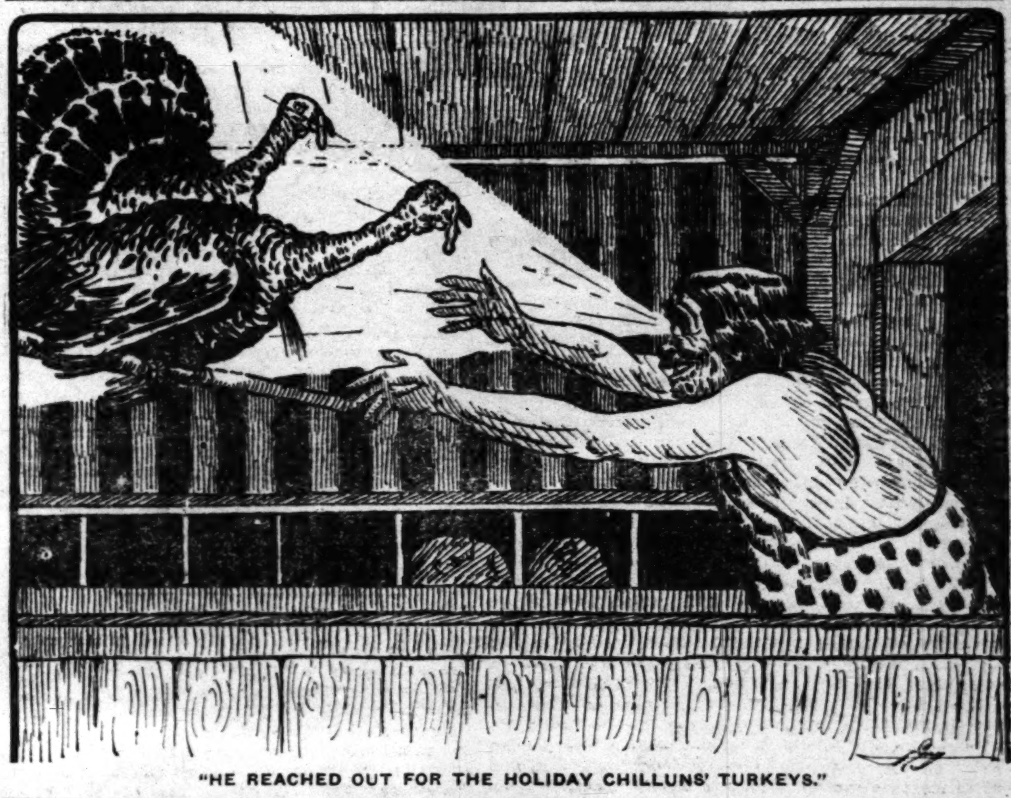
"I BEEN studyin' 'bout de time," said Brother Dickey, "w'en de Sun got up in de middle o' de night—now, der ain't no use ter laugh at dat statement, ez I notice you is fixin' ter do, kaze de big eight-day clock in de Lonesome Corner said it wuz de middle o' de night, an' dat clock had never been knowed ter fool anybody sence it fust took de contract ter give de time o' day.

"Dar wuz a reason fer de Sun gettin' up out o' his time an' place, an' it wuz no mo' n'er less'n two lil' Holiday Chillun, what had two turkeys give ter 'em—one fer Thanksgivin' an' one fer Chris'mus, an' dem turkeys had growed so big dey looked like Good Times come ter town w'en dey spread out!

"An' de two Holiday Chillun had asked some o' de poor chilluns o' de settlement ter eat Thanksgivin' an Chris'mus dinner wid 'em. But it so happened dat der wuz a Wild Man in de woods roun' dar what couldn't be kotched by nobody, an' turkey wuz de only bird whit could satisfy his appetite.

"He's mos' eat up all de wild turkeys an' had took ter prowlin' roun' in de dark o' de night, w'en de Moon wuz restin' up, an' baggin de tame ones, so dat de price o' turkey meat in dat neighborhood wuz higher'n de 'possum roosts.

"Well, on de night what I'm tellin' 'bout, w'en it wuz so thick dark dat a ghost looked whiter'n a cotton patch in cotton pickin' time, de Wild Man 'lowed dat he'd have dem two turkeys or git kotched in de attemp', an' he crope up ez easy az a cat on a mouse ter whar de turkeys wuz sleepin', low an' peaceful, an' reached out fer 'em wid his two long arms, his eyes lightin' de way ter 'em like fire coals, an' him smackin' his mouf over de enjoyment what wuz comin' ter him w'en he got dem turkeys in de pot!



"HE REACHED OUT FOR THE HOLIDAY CHILLUNS' TURKEYS."

"But des ez he got his two han's on 'em der come a blaze o' light what shined up de whole settlement fer miles an' miles! De chickens crowed fer day, de yard dog what had been fas' asleep dreamin' o' turkey bones riz up an' barked, an' de light, shinin' thoo de windows waked up de Holiday Chillun an' de whole house, likewise ever'body else in de settlement, an' dey all run out ter see how come daybreak so soon—kaze dar wuz de Eight-day Clock in de Lonesome Corner, sayin' dat it warn't day at all!

"Dey run out, dey did, an' lo an' behol', dar wuz de Wild Man in his true-true habits, stumblin' out o' de turkey house an' runnin', an' fallin', an' risin', an runnin', wid mo' dogs'n you could count barkin' right behin' him!

"He run, an' de dogs run, an' de people j'ined in de chase, mo' an' mo', till dat Wild Man couldn't run 'thout runnin' into somebody! An' he felled ter de groun', an' no sooner did he fall than people an' dogs wuz right on top o' him, an' dey tied his two han's an' his two foots an' sot him up whar de Holiday Chilluns an' ever'body else could take a good look at him, an' dey sold him ter a circus man, an' give de Holiday Chilluns de money what dey got fer him, ez well ez de reward which wuz out fer ter ketch him, an' de Holiday Chilluns 'vided it up 'twixt all de po' chilluns ever'whars eroun', an' dey had de bigges' Thanksgivin' an' Chris'mus dat ever come ter dat part er de country.

"Some folks didn't b'lieve dat it wuz Sun what got up on purpose in de middle o' de night ter keep de Wild Man fum stealin' de turkeys of de Holiday Chilluns, an' 'lowed dat it wuz a big s'archlight of a airship which wuz flyin' in de night an' shinin' all roun', an' it des happened ter hit right on dat pertickler occasion; but de Holiday Chilluns knowed better, an' dey said it wuz de Sun, kaze dey wanted him to rise more airly, anyhow; an' you know how de sunshine follers li'l' chilluns an' lights de way fer 'em thoo de worl'!"

What bumps it would have saved us on the rocky road had we known about it in time! It was my ignorance of it caused me to bet wrong on the last horse race, and to let that sanctified chap, who looked like the whole world was against him, teach me more about poker in ten minutes than I'd learned in fourteen years! He had his equilibrator well adjusted, with a magnet on the business end that attracted a whole house and lot, and I know that that was what helped him to ride off on one o' my best horses—after only a few friendly games. The very recollection of it is so keen that I have to equilibrate to brace up and forget it! And that reminds me that I ordered six gallons of equilibrator by fast express on Tuesday last and that it hasn't arrived yet, and there's only about 'five fingers' in the jug!"

shortest term in the history of the ption, of course, of the four months of John Rutledge) came the Chief Justiceship of John Marshall, not merely its longest presidency—thirty years—but probably its most important. Between 1804 and 1835 the country was passing through the crucial period of what may be called the constructive establishment of the Constitution, and Marshall's opinions, as one great case after another called them forth, imparted life and vigor not only to that historic document but to the national body politic as well. It is not too much to say that for the office, at that trying time, no other man could have been chosen equally fitted for the task.

President Adams had invited Mr. Jay to return to the post he had been first to hold, but the New Yorker had preferred to remain on his Westchester-county estate. Several other possibilities were then considered, till, when the question had been under consideration for some time, Gen. Marshall (as he was then known,) serving at the time as Secretary of State, happened one day to suggest to his chief yet a new name for the place. "You need give yourself no further trouble in that matter," said the President; "I have made up my mind about it." "I am happy to hear you are relieved on the subject," was Marshall's reply; "may I ask whom you have fixed upon?" "Certainly," said the other, "I have concluded to nominate a person whom it may surprise you to hear mentioned. He is a Virginia lawyer. A plain man, by the name of John Marshall."

So began a great judicial era. To specify and characterize the opinions Marshall delivered would be to write a treatise on American constitutional law. They themselves stand as the monuments and proper records of the man who is reported by one of his descendants to have often said that, if he was worthy of any remembrance, his best biography would be found in his decisions. Their most striking characteristics are crystalline clearness of thought, irrefragable logic, and a wide and statesmanlike view of all questions of public consequence; in these respects he has had no superior in this or any other country. Some men seem to be constituted by nature to be masters of judicial analysis and insight: as Papinian, Sir Matthew Hale and Lord Mansfield, each in his particular province, and such was Marshall in his.

Roger Brooke Taney's accession to the Chief Justiceship, in 1836, warrants explanation. Three years before the Marylander had been made Secretary of Treasury, by Andrew Jackson, for the express purpose of carrying out the President's plan of removing the Federal deposits from the United States Bank. It was a recess appointment, and when the Senate met in 1834, the nomination was promptly negatived. Taney thereupon sent his resignation to the White House, and it was accepted—but the work for which he had been appointed had been done. In January, 1836, there occurred a vacancy on the Supreme bench, and Jackson again sent Taney's name to the upper House, which, still hostile, again withheld its sanction. Then came the death of Marshall and, the political complexion of Congress having somewhat altered, Jackson for a third time nominated Taney. There was, as might have been expected, a bitter fight over the ratification of the appointment, Henry Clay himself leading those opposed to it, but the President won his way, 29 votes to 15, and "Roger B." became the fifth of the Federal Chief Justices. It was, at the time, openly charged that Jackson was merely paying his debt to the southerner in placing him in so high a position, and that the whole affair offered the most extreme instance of the spoils system.

Ushered into office in the face of such opposition, Judge Taney's twenty-eight years were marked by the most hostile criticism, culminating in 1857 when he pronounced the decision, in the case of the slave Dred Scott, that negroes "were so far an inferior race that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect, and that they might justly and lawfully be reduced to slavery for his benefit." Nothing in its previous legal history has ever so inflamed the entire country; Horace Greeley, speaking for the North, declared he was puzzled to decide "whether law, humanity, or history is most flagrantly defied" in the opinion. To say then that Mr. Taney is chiefly remembered for his "fugitive-slave decision" is but to state the fact, though it is to be added with emphasis that he proved himself (in spite of this, if you choose,) a really great jurist, and that his fame has grown largely during the generation which has passed since his death in 1864.

With Salmon P. Chase the pendulum, so far as the view of slavery was concerned, swung to the other extreme of the arc. For thirty years the Ohioan had been a strong abolitionist, ever since, in 1836, he had seen the Cincinnati offices of the Philanthropist destroyed by a pro-slavery mob, and he had acted in the defense of runaway slaves so many times (including the famous Van Zandt case just before the outbreak of the war) that he had come to be known popularly as "The Attorney-General for Runaway Niggers." As his immediate predecessor's name is for all time linked with that of Dred Scott, so is Chase's with President Johnson's, for it fell to him to preside at the only impeachment trial of a Chief Executive the country has known. He is remembered, too, as one of the four "big men" whose names came before the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1860—Chase, Cameron, Seward and Lincoln. It was the last-named who placed this one-time opponent at the head of the highest tribunal in the land, there to build for himself a lasting reputation as a brilliant exponent of "the national view."

Morrison R. Waite's appointment by Gen. Grant, in 1874, had been fully justified by the appointee's splendid achievements at Geneva, two years before, when, with Caleb Cushing and William M. Evarts, he had represented the interests of the United States before the international tribunal which was called upon to arbitrate our Alabama claims against Great Britain. Of middle height, broad-shouldered, compactly built and erect of carriage, with manners as graceful and genial as his will was firm and his thought decisive, Mr. Waite had stood well forward as one of the great figures at the conferences. Seated upon the supreme bench the country "looked to him for a tenure of office that should be careful and upright, safe and estimable" (to quote from an editorial of the day in the New York Tribune,) and it found him this, and more. The man's administrative ability was wonderful; none of his predecessors more steadily or more wisely superintended the business of the court than did he for the fourteen years between 1874 and 1888.

Fuller Was Not for Sale.

The record of the twenty-two years of Melville Weston Fuller's incumbency of the responsible post, which came to him in 1888 at the call of President Cleveland, is one of large service accomplished with skill and integrity. The turn of a handful of votes in the State of New York in 1884 would have made Mr. Blaine chief executive of the land instead of the great Democratic leader, and in that case—a chance so small and so close that one can realize the keen joy Nathaniel Hawthorne would have taken in pointing out the ever-widening circles of its resulting divergencies!—some man would have been placed at the head of the bench of a point of view wholly different, historically and economically, from Mr. Fuller; a man of a quite different theory, it may be presumed, of American constitutional law. But it may be doubted if any other could have filled the position with greater credit, not only to himself, but to his country, than did he whose obituaries have just been written.

Perhaps above all else, he stood for what has been a marked characteristic of all our Federal Justices, absolute independence of judgment. It is said, indeed, that Mr. Fuller especially prided himself upon this fact—and there used to be told in Washington an amusing little story apropos of this trait in the man. It seems there was once upon a time a good and worthy Methodist divine in the national capital who had had biblical texts printed on his stationery, and when it chanced that he was addressing the official chief jurist of the land he somehow failed (there is a lack of the sense of the fitness of things in many of us!) to "check up" the particular text which should go out over his signature. At the close of the somewhat coldly civil reply which came back he read these words: "Allow me to suggest that when I next have the pleasure of reading one of your letters, I may also have the pleasure of reading a more apposite quotation." His writing paper had announced to Mr. Fuller: "You are bought with a price!"

By States and by Colleges.

As the record of the eight names now stands, Ohio leads, so far as State "honors" are concerned, two of her residents, Chase and Waite, having been nominated to the roll; New York (with Jay,) South Carolina (with Rutledge,) Connecticut (with Ellsworth,) Virginia (with Marshall,) Maryland (with Taney,) and Illinois (with Fuller) having one each to their credit. If, however, the State of birth be considered, Connecticut jumps into first place, both Waite and Ellsworth being written down her sons. As Chase, moreover, was a native of New Hampshire, and Fuller of Maine, New England may rightfully lay claim to four of the judicial eight. This leaves the trio of Rutledge, Marshall and Taney, to the southern tier, and John Jay to New York.

Marshall and Rutledge were the only Chief Justices not college graduates, the latter having studied at the Temple, in London, prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, and the great "Expounder's" educational training being the product of his father's instruction, a couple of years under a private tutor, and less than that at a school in Wesmoreland, where he sat elbow to elbow with James Monroe. Jay was a member of the class of 1766 at King's College (now Columbia University,) and Ellsworth, having had a year at Yale and then having changed his youthful allegiance, graduated from Princeton in the same month. Yale's Chief Justice was Waite, one of the class of 1837, on whose roll appear also the names of William M. Evarts, Benjamin Silliman and Samuel J. Tilden. Taney was a son of Dickinson (1795,) Chase of Dartmouth (1826,) and Fuller of Bowdoin. Harvard bases her sole claim to "get in line" on the fact that Fuller was a student in her law school.

Three of the Chief Justices had previously served in the Cabinet. Marshall, having declined the Attorney-Generalship and the post of Minister to France, had been first Secretary of War and then Secretary of State under Adams; Taney was Jackson's Attorney-General and Secretary of the Treasury, and Chase held the last-named office under Lincoln. Both Rutledge and Chase had, previously to their appointments to the supreme bench, served, twice each, as Governors of their States; Jay, after leaving the bench, was for several terms the chief executive of New York. Both Ellsworth and Chase had been members of the Federal Senate, before their judgships (Ellsworth, by the by, was the first to receive the nickname of "Cerberus of the Treasury,") and Marshall had sat one term in the lower House of the national Legislature.

There have been three instances of Chief Justices serving in other capacities while retaining place on the bench. In 1794, a twelvemonth before his resignation, Jay was sent to England as special envoy, and in 1799, Ellsworth, yet presiding officer of our highest court, went to France with Patrick Henry and W. R. Davie on a similar errand. When Marshall presided at the winter term of the Supreme Court in 1801 he still retained the office of Secretary of State, as such, indeed, continuing to act till the close of Adams's administration, several months later.

BABA BHARATI PURPOSES TO BUILD HINDU TEMPLE IN LOS ANGELES.

By a Special Contributor.

BABA BHARATI, the renowned Hindu ascetic philosopher, who has lately returned from India, and reissued his old magazine, "The Light of India," under the new title of "East and West," is well known through his lectures and writings. It was from Los Angeles he took his departure for India in September, 1907, having resided here during two years subsequent to a three years' stay in New York and Boston, in which last city he was elected vice-president for the International Peace Congress held in 1904.

His new home at No. 1430 Dana street, this city, delights the Baba and gooroo, because of its adaptability for his work, the large rooms, especially the spacious reception halls, being suited to class or even public-lecture audiences, while the grounds are sufficiently extensive to admit of his having a temple erected on the place.

The building of this temple in Los Angeles is one of the Baba's plans, entertained by him even before his departure for India; if constructed according to his present plan, it will give to Los Angeles the distinction of having the only genuine Hindu temple, from an architectural and ritualistic standpoint, in America. He purposes not only to duplicate in it the ancient and symbolic style of structure still used in India, but to have the Hindu guest quarters in close proximity to the temple building, such as are frequently found connected with temples of worship in his land. As the Baba is teaching his philosophy unchanged from its ancient meaning, so he desires to establish a center where its religious practices may be observed with all—or as nearly as possible—of its ceremonies, as they are still observed by the devout of his countrymen. For the building of the temple, funds are to be furnished by his countrymen, money havng already been subscribed by many leading Hindus. Two of these—one a member of the Imperial Council of India and the other a Supreme Court judge, expect to visit America in time to assist at the laying of the corner stone of the temple.

On the eve of his departure from India for America the Baba was presented by the people of Madras with a beautifully-carved and inlaid sandalwood and ivory casket, inclosing an address from the people of Madras, at a reception held in his honor by notables of the southern capital. The meeting was presided over by the highest legal official of Madras, Hon. Shivaswami Iyer, advocate-general, who, in presenting the address to the Baba, spoke in eloquent terms of praise of his work, both in India and America.

The following extracts from the distinguished Indian's speech are worthy of the consideration of thoughtful minds, both East and West:

"The contact of the East with the West has contributed to a free exchange of ideas much to the advantage of both sides. The East has for its part learned that spirituality alone cannot suffice to preserve a nation in the struggle for existence. It is beginning to realize the necessity for material and economic progress. There are some among us who deplore this tendency; but I confess I am not one of them. It is feared by some among us that there is a danger of our losing our innate spirituality. I am not, however, haunted by any such fear. It seems to me to be impossible to destroy the spirituality which is so deeply ingrained in us, not merely as a part of the common heritage of all humanity, but by centuries of development along our own peculiarly national lines. On the other hand the West has for its part learned that there are truths to be gleaned and advantages to be derived from a study of the systems of philosophy and religion of the East. The West has achieved many a wonder. It has not, however, achieved one thing. It has not founded any great world religion. The West has always had to borrow its religion from Asia, and it is to Asia the West must always look for spiritual light. (Cheers.) It seems to me therefore to be absolutely necessary that the activities and labors of the Swami should find proper place in that country. . . .

"There have been two great Hindu missionaries in recent years who have been engaged in this work of popularizing the teachings of Krishna and of spreading far and wide a knowledge of these truths, and I need hardly tell you that I refer to the late Swami Vivekananda and our friend Swami Baba Premanand Bharati. There is perhaps a slight difference in their methods of work. Still both of them have been followers of Krishna. It seems to me so far as my limited knowledge of Swami Vivekananda's teaching goes, that he laid more insistence upon the philosophical aspects, and the intellectual side of Hinduism. The other path, which is complimentary to the one upon which Swami Vivekananda laid so much stress, is the path of love and devotion, a path which has found an illustrious exponent in our guest. I am rather inclined to think that the success which Swami Baba Premanand Bharati has achieved and is yet to achieve is likely to be even greater than the success which was achieved by Swami Vivekananda. (Cheers.) It is possible for the most educated classes of the community to live in the highly rarified atmosphere of the Vedanta. But I don't think that even they will find it always congenial to live in that atmosphere. Even the most critical often find that their hearts hanker after something personal, something more concrete than a mere system of philosophy. I do not know of any cult more calculated to satisfy this deep innate craving of human nature, a craving for a high and personal conception of the deity, than the cult of Sri Krishna. It is the cult which our friend has been endeavoring to spread abroad in the United States. I am sure that the expression of our humble appreciation of the good work that the Swami has been doing, that the expression of our gratitude to him for his labors will inspire him to still greater energy and induce him to go on in the same field in which he has been working and render still greater service to humanity and to this country than he has been able to do in the past. And I also feel sure that it will strengthen his position in America not a little if the Americans learn that he is not a person unknown in his own country and without any credentials, but that he is a man highly honored, loved and esteemed by his own countrymen and whose services his countrymen are anxious should be dedicated to the cause of humanity generally."

Following the Baba's reply to the above address, Mr. Justice Krishnaswami Iyer moved the following resolution:

His Father's Son.

THE UNEXPECTED REBELLION OF NICHOLAS JETT.

By a Special Contributor.

OUTSIDE the Jett farmstead the early morning air carried a sting of frost, and a sharp-nosed collie, crouched under a bench beside the house, barked dismally. On the hilltop across the Pawnee River, a lone coyote answered, and the dog left his slight shelter and growled defiance, while the hair on its back rose in anger. From inside the house a clock struck 4; and instantly the dog ran to the back door and whined in expectation.

Nicholas Jett, with eyes still heavy from sleep, opened the door and the dog bounded into the kitchen. Furtively the young man caressed the animal, fed it, and then thrust it out again just as a wizened, beady-eyed little woman bustled into the kitchen.

"You're astir early for once, Nicholas," said the little woman, in German. Then she went on in English:

"Go get up Grandfather Adameister, son, or he'll lay there all morning, and we must get off for town early, yet. I'll make the breakfast while you tend to the horses—and get the little team ready for us, Nicholas, and don't let the dog in the house when you go out, neither."

The young fellow pulled a coat over his broad shoulders, and then turned to his mother in meek protest:

"Don't let's go to town today. I tell you, mother, I don't want to run for no office."

The little woman blazed up at him in her native tongue:

"Well I know it, sheephead, but you shall try for the office, all the same. Coward! afraid to be one of the simple township board, when your father's father was a burgomaster. Your father and I came here when the place was a desert, working like cattle and living worse than you would let your worthless dog live, if I did not prevent you, and all that we might make a somebody out of you. And now that your father has been dead for so long, you think you can undo all his plans for yourself. Go tend to the horses."

Nicholas's face reddened under the shrill rebuke; and he went out into the dawn, toward the stock sheds, with his collie trailing at his heels. Presently when he returned to the house the morning meal was smoking on the table, and his grandfather, small and beady-eyed like Mrs. Jett, was already seated.

The breakfast was hurried through, to the accompaniment of Mrs. Jett's running tongue. Her mind vacillated from the household affairs to be looked after by Grandfather Adameister, to the business upon which she and her son were going to town; and through it all Nicholas received many a verbal sting.

"Remember the cream for the churning, Grandfather," she admonished. "And you, Nicholas, need not put aside all the good meat for the dog outside. Today, boy, I will get you a new coat, after we have seen the men regarding the election."

"Mother," put in young Jett, in English, "I told you I don't want to run for no office."

She replied in German:

"And I tell you again I want you to, so you shall. What else is all our money for, but to advance the family? Your father and I worked—rather slaved—for it; and often he would say: 'Never mind, my Katchen, he shall be greater, even, than a burgomaster.' Well for you that he died before your stubbornness showed itself. He beat me—once—for crossing his will; even though you are a man grown I tremble to think what he would do if you told him you wanted to stay at home and be a farmer. We have three farms; let others work there for us. There is something else for you to do."

The young man squared his shoulders and shook his head, and then protested again, this time in German:

"I care not what my father's wishes were; he had no right to bind me all my life to something I detest. I want to be a farmer—I do not want to go with you today to have me nominated for some paltry office—and so I tell you."

"And so you tell! Pah! I rule—I am more like your father than you are. He carried out his desires in spite of everything. He married me, even though his parents were bitter against it. Always in our household his will was law—now mine is. You may grumble, and hang back like the big gray on our plow team, but in the end you will pull my way. Bah! Milk-and-water, you are not the son of your father!"

Nicholas pushed back his chair from the table and muttered, in English:

"Mother, I ain't got time to go away today; the stock——"

"Go get the horses, Nicholas; go."

Slowly the young man turned toward the door to obey. In another room the telephone rang the call of the rural line, and Grandfather Adameister went to answer it while Nicholas waited. In a few minutes the old man was back again.

"A fire in town," reported the old fellow. "It's the jewelry shop, lad, on the main street. You know——"

Nicholas waited to hear no more, but rushed out after the horses.

Mrs. Jett giggled mischievously, and turned to the old man:

"Can you tell, old wise head, why your grandson changed his mind so suddenly about hurrying off to town? No? The jewelry shop is very near the house of those Duttons—old Dutton's orphan lives there. Your grandson is foolish enough to want to marry the Dutton girl."

"Certainly he might do worse, Katchen. Let him, if you want her for a daughter-in-law. And do not forget my snuff box is empty," and he held his horn box bottom upward before her.

"Ach, the Dutton girl is not for Nicholas; I shall make him understand that as we go to town. See how quickly he got ready? Take good care of the place. Yes, yes, I shall not forget the snuff," and she went out to meet the wagon coming down the yard.

All of Nicholas's previous opposition to the trip to town had gone. He drove rapidly out of the Jett lane and down the road, his mother sitting beside him, with an enigmatical smile curving her thin lips, and his collie dog trotting behind.

Presently Nicholas pointed with the whip to a hazy smoke column visible against the sky ahead of them.

"See, Mother," he said, "it's still burning."

"Ach, no matter to us, son; we were not going for jewelry today. When the time comes we will go to the city for good jewelry for you—and for your betrothed. You shall not select a common country girl for your wife."

A strange look in her son's eyes startled Mrs. Jett for an instant.

"Lieber Gott!" she cried, "never before in the twenty-two years of your life has your face recalled to me that of your dear father; but just then he looked out of your eyes—as he used to look on me when he was planning something, or had set his mind on a new subject. Ach, Nicholas, what a man, indeed, he would have made of you!"

Listlessly, in the same dull accents of the morning, Nicholas replied:

"Mother, I tell you I want to remain a farmer."

Mrs. Jett drew breath for another outburst, but checked herself, and cast a covert glance at her son. Then, in a quiet tone, she continued:

"Son Nicholas, you must listen to me. Soon we will be in town, and you shall go with me to have yourself announced as a candidate. This paltry township office is a stupid thing, I know; but it will lead to better; and with a good marriage——"

She paused in the middle of her sentence, but Nicholas seemed not to heed her. His eyes were fixed on the hamlet ahead of them and he urged on the horses. They swung into the village street at a gallop and rattled along toward a crowd gathered about the smouldering remains of the town jewelry store.

The small building that had housed the watchmaker and his stock in trade was in ruins. One wall had been pulled down to check the flames, and lay in fragments on a heap of glowing ashes. Small boys prodded with sticks in the debris for partly-destroyed clock movements which they cooled in a pool of muddy water in the road. Such stock as had been saved by the village bucket brigade was piled on a blanket on the sidewalk.

Nicholas took no heed of the watchmaker's disaster; his eyes were fixed on a cottage that stood back from the street next to the burned store. Here water-soaked and heat-blistered furniture littered the yard, where it had been thrown upon flower beds and trellises. A gaping hole in the cottage roof, and burned and blackened areas above doors and windows showed to outsiders what utter ruin was within.

Nicholas bore down on the brake and pulled on the reins with a suddenness that almost threw the horses on their haunches. Then he leaped over the wheel to the ground.

"Come back!" cried Mrs. Jett, angrily. "You shall not stop at the Duttons today—nor ever again. It has already gone too far. Come back, I say."

"Take the reins," Nicholas answered, and a new tone in his voice made his mother thrill with astonishment. "Take the reins, or I'll throw them on the horses' backs. Quickly, mother."

Wonderingly, and with a submission she had shown to none since Nicholas's father died, Mrs. Jett gathered the reins in her hand, and settled herself to wait for the return of her son.

"Ach, Lieber Gott," she murmured; "that look in his eyes again—for the second time in his life. He has the blood of the Jetts. Is he just now beginning to show he has their spirit, too—the spirit of his father?"

For a long time she sat patiently, busy with her own thoughts: of her son's future as she had planned it, so utterly at variance with his own inclination; of her dead husband's masterful will; of Nicholas' hitherto docile nature; of his sudden transformation.

A sound from within the devastated cottage caused Mrs. Jett to look up; just within the doorway was her son, and his arm around a weeping girl, who clung to him. When the girl had grown calmer Nicholas left her and came out to Mrs. Jett.

"Mother," he said, and the calmly determined ring was still in his voice, "Eliza and I are betrothed; and we shall be married very soon. One of the farms my father left me I shall keep—the others are for you."

"Nicholas!" she replied, with command and entreaty in her accent.

"Enough, mother; I am my own man at last. You shall have two-thirds of all we have, but I shall live my own life; so make your plans to fit. And yet," and his young voice broke, "you are my mother and I love you—and Eliza would be friends with you——"

Mrs. Jett turned to him, and her mother love was shining through tears of defeat and disappointment:

"Ach, if you only love me, son, I shall ask no more. You have your father's spirit; so well I know nothing can move you now. But you're a good boy, after all. The land—you shall have it all, except a corner somewhere for grandfather and me. Go get the betrothed, Nicholas—let us take her home to see the grandfather."

AN ADVENTURE WITH A GHOST IN SOUTHERN INDIANA.

By a Special Contributor.

JUDSON GORDON never had a more terrific call upon his nerve than on a certain night in November, when riding horseback through one of the loneliest regions of Southern Indiana.

The day was raw and chilly. Half the afternoon had drifted past before he awoke to the fact that he had lost his way hopelessly. He was heading for the hamlet of Arkwell, and had been told that by following directions, and going at an easy pace, he would reach that refuge at dusk or shortly before. Somewhere on the road, however, he had gone astray, and night was closing in with no dwelling in sight.

The country was open for most of the distance, with occasional stretches of forest and scant evidences of cultivation. He had noted one or two straggling bits of fence, but they had long fallen into decay. The single cabin of which he caught sight a hundred yards from the highway was only the gaunt skeleton of what at best had been a flimsy affair, and offered no protection from the weather.

"Hang it!" he muttered in the deepening gloom. "Somebody must live in this part of creation, even if I haven't seen any one for ten miles past. I'll tackle the first house that dare show itself, and fight, if necessary, for lodging and supper. I can wait till morning, but Jennie can't." He spoke cheeringly to his blooded mare. "We'll hit it pretty soon. You have done your duty, young lady, as you always do, and I am more concerned for you than for myself."

Less than half an hour later, and within two or three rods of the road, a large building took shadowy form. Though it exuded no inviting ray of light, the sight was tempting. The mare pricked her ears, for she knew what it meant.

"At last!" sighed the rider, twitching the rein, in response to which the spirited animal stepped off more briskly. "This beats a roadside camp by a thousand majority."

At any other time, Jud Gordon would have ridden past without halt. The house was of faded brick, and in style recalled some of the colonial structures seen now and then in New England. It was two stories in height, with a couple of dormer windows, a narrow, covered porch in front, with mouldering, lopsided steps, and was surrounded by grounds that had received no attention for many a day.

The fence, which once shut off the dwelling from the highway, had long disappeared. A leafless walnut towered before the house; a few scraggly vines weakly twisted themselves along the front and between the windows; the panes were small, square, and each showed a slight curving inward before the pressure of winds and storms throughout the previous century. Not one disclosed a fracture. They did those things better in the days of our grandfathers than now.

Gordon had reined up his mare, and for a few minutes he studied the strange scene. Before coming directly opposite he had noted the small, gray barn at the rear. It was that which decided him to stop overnight in the place. Jennie would be sure of shelter, and probably of food.

The most striking feature in this singular picture was that, although the night had closed in, not the first twinkle of light shone through the curtainless windows, nor could the traveler discern any evidence of life about the premises. It might be the occupants were of a frugal mind concerning lamps and candles. He shouted:

"Hello, the house!"

The call was repeated in loud tones, but no reply came from the old brick dwelling.

"Those folks are not overburdened with hospitality. All the same, I don't intend to be bluffed."

A word to the mare, and with a slight snort of misgiving she turned into the open grounds and walked up the short, sloping path, and around the gable end of the stone house, where a small spring bubbled. Her master allowed her to drink sparingly, and then guided her to the small barn, where she halted. Swinging out of the saddle, he left her and walked forward to investigate. The entrance was secured by a hook and staple, which were unfastened, and he drew open the door.

Everything was blank darkness, the dim illumination behind him not being strong enough to reveal anything. As a precaution, he again called out, but with no more result than before. Not only was no other person present, but the structure held neither cow nor horse nor any kind of animal.

Gordon drew a small, rubber safe from his pocket and snapped a match across the rough bottom. Holding the tiny flame above his head, he stepped within, where he gained a good view of the interior.

"Well, I'll be hanged! This fixes Jennie. If I can't break into the house I'll share her quarters with her."

He had entered the barn and paused in front of two stalls. In the manger of each was thrust a mass of hay. On the right, several tons were piled almost to the shingles of the roof. It looked as if things had been specially prepared for the coming of the mare.

"And, by Jove, she shall enjoy them!" added her master, stepping briskly outside. He removed bridle, saddle and saddlebags. The first he dropped on the barn floor, near the door, but rested the other articles over his arm.

"Walk in, miss," he said to the mare, who with a second of timidity obeyed. As she passed in front of him he slapped her haunch.

"You're in luck, sweetheart; good night to you."

Obeying a natural impulse, he closed the door and secured it. Then he walked toward the house.

"Now I'll see what awaits me," he mused, with a little faster beating of his heart. "The folks must have watched me, and most likely do not like my style."

With saddle and bags he approached the rear door. The obscurity did not prevent him from seeing that it was of the old-fashioned kind, being divided across the middle, the upper half opening by means of an iron latch. He pressed down on the tongue with his thumb and pushed. As he expected, there was no yielding. It was locked.

"A gentleman should always present himself at the front," he said, walking round and stepping upon the shaky porch. A massive brass knocker, green with age and lack of care, bulged from the upper part of the door. He banged it vigorously.

"It sounds loud enough to wake the dead."

He listened, but the silence "gave no token." Instead of a knob, there was a heavy iron latch as at the rear. He raised it and pushed. To his astonishment, the door swung inward easily, and he stood at the entrance of a hall so dark that his eyes could give him no help. Instinctively, he dropped his hand to his hip. His revolver was there, and he drew out his match safe. As a matter of precaution, he hailed the house again, but as vainly as before.

The little flickering flame held aloft told an interesting story. He was standing in front of a wide, bare hall, from which broad steps, free of carpet, led to the rooms above. On the left, a door was open. With the expiring match in his fingers, he stepped across the threshold and lighted another match.

He was in the spacious front room, whose furniture consisted of two strong, wooden chairs and nothing else. The walls that at some period in the remote past had been whitewashed, were streaked with yellow stains. Directly before him, and on the opposite side of the room, a vast fireplace yawned. It was piled with oak, hickory and bits of pine, underneath which a wad of newspaper had been shoved. The touch of a lighted match would set the whole mass aflame. Moreover, a goodly pile of wood lay beside the fireplace, ready for use, when needed.

Gordon strode hastily across the floor and applied the point of flame to the paper. It caught, and the fast-growing blaze wrapped the bits of pine. In a few minutes the harder wood broke into a roaring fire, whose sparks shot up the chimney. He stepped back to the middle of the room, where he still felt the genial glow and had thrown his saddle and bags. The whole apartment was filled with the vivid illumination.

He watched the flames, listening the while for noises from other parts of the house. None reached him. He pushed open the door leading to the kitchen and dining-room. That, too, was bare of all furniture and every kind of utensil. The wide hall was at one side of the dwelling, so there was no other room on the first floor to inspect. At the foot of the stairs he hesitated. Then he began slowly ascending the steps, each of which squeaked under his tread. He entered into blank darkness again, and once more had recourse to his match safe. Two apartments corresponded with those underneath, and the closed doors yielded readily. He examined them and the attic above. Still he saw no furniture or sign of living person.

"I'm the only one here," he reflected, as he came downstairs and re-entered the big front room bathed in light. "No one would hide in the cellar, and I won't disturb its mould and cobwebs."

He sat down on his saddle at a comfortable distance from the blaze. While impressed by his surroundings, he was not scared. Athletic, powerful and self-reliant, he retained faith in the loaded weapon at his hip. When exploring the building, he kept one hand on the butt of the revolver, ready to whip it out the instant the need arose.

"I don't know whether I shall have any callers before morning, but I shan't budge from here till break of day. If these folks had been thoughtful enough to leave a meal for transient guests, I should thank them, but I don't mind, and will average up things at the next meal."

He drew out a cigar and lighted it. To a certain degree he enjoyed the peculiar situation. As he sat, he faced the two front windows. Through the one on his right he observed the crescent moon between the spider-like limbs of the big walnut.

Gordon had sat thus perhaps ten minutes, quietly smoking, when he was startled by the whinny of his mare. He bounded to his feet, dashed through the adjoining room, unfastened the bisected door, and reached the barn in a twinkling. One glance showed the catch as he had left it. Consequently, no one could be inside the structure. But he unloosed the door and peered into the gloom. Jennie welcomed him with a subdued neigh.

Lighting a match, he investigated. Nothing suspicious appeared, and he returned to the house, half convinced that the animal had been disturbed by some visitor. In the shadow at the rear of the building he waited several minutes, watching the barn. All remained as before, and he went back to the front room.

He was tired, for he had ridden many miles since sun-up. The approach of sleep is so insidious that, assuming an easy posture, he glided off into dreamland before he had a thought of the possibility of anything of the kind. Probably he would have remained unconscious until morning, but for the warning of that mysterious faculty, which, because no one understands it, is sometimes called the "sixth sense." Suddenly, without any apparent cause, so far as he could learn, he awoke.

As is the rule with all of his sex, a minute or more passed before he recalled where he was. That he had slept a long while was proved by the fire, which had sunk to a mass of coals, whose warmth diffused a soft glow through the room. He could see every portion, though the illumination was faint. He shifted his posture, and thereby became sensible of his cramped limbs. He held his watch so as to reflect the light.

To his amazement the hands showed it was exactly midnight.

his warm territory, was close on the trail of his game! His lungs expanded and his nostrils widened with the zest of a bloodhound instinct.

As he swung himself into the saddle he deliberated a few moments upon his immediate course of action—whether to seek a proper hiding place and watch the spring in hopes of catching his man unawares, or to first pay his intended respects to old man Mitchell.

While he was thus engaged, a frowsy-haired country youth with his hat shoved well over the back of his head and a small rifle dangling carelessly across his left arm came striding along the trail and turned toward the spring.

"Hello, there," he accosted, genially, evincing no surprise at sight of the strange horseman. "Ruther warm day, this, fer November."

"How de do," responded the deputy, in the familiar country dialect befitting the character he had assumed. "Yes, it's sure hittin' the high mercury out in the valley, but she's mighty comf'table in here by the spring. Guess me an' the nag have left enough for a small drink, so help yourself."

"I'm from the sweet spud ranch over in the valley," the youth informed him, with offhand frankness. "Name's Pete Collins. What's yours?"

"Sanford—Bob Sanford," replied the detective, feeling that he was well within the bounds of truth while merely transposing the two sections of his original name.

"Stranger up here, I reck'n."

"Yes; from over Fresno way Thought of lookin' up a piece of timber that a feller 'pears willin' to sell if he gits two or three prices for it. Expecting him to meet me out there at the forks of the trail an' show me what he's got an' where it is. Ain't seen any other stranger about here recent, have you?"

"Wal—yes; a feller did come along this way 'bout a week ago, headed up the river," said the youth. "Lemme see," he ruminated, scratching his head in a reflective way. "Yes, reck'n 'twas jest about a week ago. He stopped here fer a drink, an' then hit the trail ag'in as if he was in a hurry to git somewhere. Mouse-colored broncho pintoed sorter white. No saddle."

"Short, heavy feller?" inquired the deputy.

"No; long, wiry-lookin' cuss with mighty short hair, an' scrubby whiskers. Nose sorter flat, an' one cross eye."

The detective was nearly startled into betraying the keen interest which he felt. The youth had exactly described the bandit, Bloodstone. No longer was there any shadow of doubt that he was close upon the lair of his wary game.

While talking, the young rancher had been glancing, somewhat craftily, the deputy thought, at the mystic figures on the face of the rock, but seemed disposed to offer no comment thereon. Could it be that this innocent-looking stripling was one of those connected with the game? No; else he would not have described the outlaw so glibly to an inquiring stranger.

The sleuth was frankly puzzled, but refrained from any mention of the mysterious symbol. He diplomatically turned the current of his inquiries toward old man Mitchell and his daughter, and here he seemed to strike the youthful rancher in a very susceptible spot, for the latter immediately plunged into a voluble stream of reminiscent information full of the liveliest interest to his listener.

"The girl's all right, an' a heap too good for the place she's livin' at," he said, in conclusion, "but the old man he's a bad one. Don't allow Cappie any fun in life at all, nor any fellers hangin' round on her trail. If he caught one at it he'd fill him full of lead, too quick. Bet yer life."

When the youth had proceeded on his way, and he was again alone, Roberts no longer hesitated. Raising the bridle rein, he headed his horse in the direction of the Mitchell cabin which he had been informed was something like a mile and a half up the canyon.

A little before sunset he found the place. It was a rough, but substantially-built log house, surrounded by a small clearing.

He found both the old man and his daughter at home, and though the former eyed him at first in a rather surly and suspicious manner, his reception was more commonplace and roughly hospitable than he had been led to anticipate. Upon stating his errand with regard to purchasing a section of timber owned by certain parties at Fresno, and the desire to obtain a night's lodging, if not too much trouble, he was briefly and without hesitation invited to dismount, hitch his horse in the open-front log stable at the rear of the house, and take a rest while supper was being cooked.

The old man, for a while somewhat gruff and uncommunicative, warmed up considerably when his most cherished hobbies had been sounded for and adroitly brought into the conversation. He even went so far as to bring out a small demijohn of good rye whisky and insist upon his guest joining him in a generous appetizer before sitting down to the evening meal.

While they ate and chatted with almost the freedom of old acquaintances, the deputy had a good opportunity to study both the host and the daughter as well as some of their characteristics revealed by the interior of their rude but quite tasty and comfortable home.

The girl was not bad-looking of feature, and rather comely of form, as native California girls are apt to be. She had her father's dark eyes and self-reliant curve of the lips, and Roberts, trained as he was in reading human nature, felt convinced upon one point. Whether the old man did or did not have secrets hidden from the civil authorities, his daughter had secrets of her own not revealed to her father.

The meal was a plain but substantial one, well served, and he enjoyed it.

Over a number of fragrant pipes and another glass of stimulating refreshment the evening passed pleasantly. Doubtless the old recluse had not thus opened the social depths of his nature to the gaze of a stranger guest for many years.

At bedtime a couple of heavy woolen blankets were hauled down from a small loft at one end of the cabin and a crude but fairly comfortable shake-down made for their visitor upon the floor of the larger front apartment which served as dining and general living-room combined.

His unexpectedly cordial reception had convinced Roberts that he was freely accepted as just what he represented himself to be, and that he could lie down to sleep with perfect safety. But he remained awake far into the night, his hand upon a small revolver in his shirt pocket and his mind busy sorting out the tangled skein of many complicated theories.

No untoward incident disturbed the night, and he at length fell into a restful sleep. When he awoke the sun was shining over the hills, and the old man and his daughter were up and stirring. His horse was already munching a fresh mangerful of grass, and the odor of coffee and fried bacon came from the direction of the kitchen.

His good-morning greeting from both father and daughter was pleasant and genuinely unaffected, and the breakfast meal was a most agreeable repetition of the evening repast.

Before bidding them good-by and resuming his journey, the visitor was not a little surprised and secretly gratified by the girl, Capella, finding a moment's opportunity to say to him, in private:

"I want to thank you, truly, Mr. Sanford, for this visit. Poor Dad is cross and sour most of the time, and it makes life pretty hard for me. I believe you've done him lots of good. You've cheered him up more than any one who has been here for years."

When he was ready to depart, he proffered generous payment for the kindness and hospitality shown him, but this the father and daughter each flatly refused. And he was earnestly invited to come again and spend a night with them before taking final leave of the neighborhood.

Nothing of a suspicious aspect had he found anywhere about the solitary mountain home, and clearly enough his next move in the game was to prepare for an extended vigil at the sentinel rock.

This he lost no time in doing, and the afternoon found his animal staked out to good grass and water well out of sight and hearing, some necessary provisions laid in for himself, and an ideal hiding place secured within plain view of the spring and the smooth wall of rock.

Several hours had quietly passed and the sun was nearing the westward treetops when to the watcher's ears came the sound of light, swift footsteps along the Cedar Canyon trail.

A few minutes of tense, eager expectancy, and then he saw Capella Mitchell coming rapidly toward the sentinel rock.

She glanced keenly about in all directions, went straight to the wall beyond the spring, and gathering up a handful of moss, erased the mystic figures of chalk.

Scarcely had she done so when a second footfall sounded from the opposite direction and the youthful rancher, Pete Collins, strode into view.

An eager smile lighted his freckled face, and the next moment the girl was nestling in his arms in a most affectionate embrace.

Then light dawned upon the mind of the deputy Sheriff. He was the uninvited witness of a lovers' meeting. The chalk marks upon the rock had been a message left by the girl for her forbidden sweetheart, and this had brought Pete there the day before, when he had met and talked with the deputy Sheriff.

Like a magical inspiration the meaning of the figures now occurred to him, and glancing at his watch the inspiration was verified. It was 4:45 o'clock, and this was the 11th day of the month. The figures simply told the youth that she would meet him there on this particular day and hour.

Somewhat crestfallen Roberts manfully turned his back upon so sacred a scene and stole cautiously away, unobserved, to take up anew the trail of his perilous duty.

CLYDE SCOTT CHASE.

LIFE ON A BATTLESHIP.

To the "land lubber" one of the peculiar and ofttimes discomforting elements of life on a warship during target practice is the necessity for numerous baths. After each volley all the men on deck must take a bath. Sometimes there are four of five baths a day. This becomes quite monotonous. The Japanese inaugurated this practice. A bath is taken before and after shooting, to guard against possible infection of open scratches and cuts from the flying powder. When the big guns go off, the landsman on deck is thrown into consternation. A horrible, sickening wrench makes one feel as if each limb was separately grasped and pulled in various directions, and it is a long time until he gets his "sea legs" again. Life aboard ship is not the ordeal that rumor has characterized it. The hard-tack legend is erroneous. The sailors are well fed with the best viands procurable, and their bread, far from being hard-tack, is as good as that which is served in any high-class hotel or restaurant. There is a spirit of good-fellowship among the men below decks. Each man has his separate duties definitely designated and there are no petty jealousies.—[J. W. Aide, in Leslie's.

Edinburgh, Old and New.

A "MODERN ATHENS" OF MUCH HISTORIC INTEREST.

By a Special Contributor.

EDINBURGH has been called the modern Athens and is in many ways one of the world's most beautiful cities. History and legend unite to make Edinburgh fascinating to the traveler. With its its towering eminences of Colton Hill and Castle Rock, with its picturesque old town and its beautiful new town, it forms an impressive sight. Its location is most picturesque. It is situated n the north part of Midlothian, nearly two mile from the Firth of Forth. A large open valley separates the new and the old towns.

Few who have not visited Scotland calize how beautiful is its capital, no how filled with interest it is. New Edinburgh is modern in every respect. Its charmingly laid-out streets, its lovely parks, its elegant buildings speak of prosperity. The new town has three principal streets—Prince, St. George and Queen. Prince is called by some the most beautiful business street in the world. Right in the midst of the business district are Prince's and Queen's Grdens, noted the world over. The stores and buildings, the churches nd monuments, the galleries and museums all attract the visitor's attention. While at the lower end of the new part Carlton Hill, surmounted by its Parthenon-like monument, towers a lofty eminence of impressive aspect. In broad Prince's street stands the great monument to Scott. On St. George's street are statues of many of Scotland's great men.

The beauties of new Edinburgh are such that one might cover pages in telling of them.

And yet, though the New Town, with its modern buildings, its gardens, and parks, may hold the visitor and invite the weary traveler, it is in Old Edinburgh that greatest interest centers. From Holyrood Palace up to Castle Rock every street and every spot is connected with the romantic past of "Old Scotia's glory."

Holyrood, the palace of the Scottish kings, the place where Mary Queen of Scots lived and where Rizzio was murdered, is located in the lower part of the old town. This is where the pious David I of Scotland, through his vision of the Holy Cross, founded a monastery, which later became a palace of Scottish royalty. Its location, on rather low ground with Arthur's Seat towering 822 feet high, back of it, is gloomy rather than beautiful. In fact, the palace is a gloomy, solemn place. The rooms of Mary and the ruined chapel alike tell their tale of gloom. It was a sorry spot for a comely, young queen—this grim home of stern monarchs. At its best it could never have been a pleasant residence. The stern Scottish kings may have been satisfied, but no wonder Mary pined for France when cooped up in gloomy old Holyrood.

The visitor here is shown the rooms where Mary lived, the place where Rizzio was stabbed, Darnley's apartments and the old ruined chapel.

From Holyrood a street leads up the hill to Castle Rock, and by following this street, Edinburgh's points of greatest interest may be seen. There is the ancient Tolbooth, the last of the old prisons left standing, old fashioned in architecture, stern and forbidding in aspect. Further on is the Church of St. Giles, with its queer crown-shaped steeple, interesting on account of its connection with the name of John Knox. All along the way the streets are strange and ancient in look, the houses are high and narrow. There are queer little closes, which may be likened to modern alleys. Every one of these old places has its story. There is the house of John Knox, and near by the Church of St. Giles are the Old Parliament Houses, in front of which a stone in the pavement bearing the initials "J. K.," marks there in the street, under horses' feet, the last resting place of Scotland's hero, the great reformer, John Knox.

Beyond St. Giles Church, there is a heart in the pavement marking the site of the Heart of Midlothian, immortalized by Scott in his novel of that name.

This old town is a sort of epitome of Scottish history for the last 500 years. Even back of history to legend run the tales of this ancient burgh. But the visitor, having passed up the long street first called Canongate, then High, and near its end Lawnmarket, reaches the castle esplanade, fully 350 feet in length, at the end of which on the summit of the rock stands Edinburgh Castle. The esplanade, now used as an infantry parade ground, in ancient times was the spur and used to serve as the place of execution.

The castle, an impregnable stronghold before gunpowder was invented, stands on a precipitous rock about 300 feet above the valley. It is now an infantry barracks. Here the Scottish kings used to live, here the ill-fated Stuarts dwelt.

The location of the castle is wonderful, towering as it does above the city, resting on its black, steep, rocky cliffs, looking down in majestic scorn on passing people and changing generations, it speaks aloud of Scotland's glory, certainly Edinburgh is the Majestic.

On the battlement of the castle called the King's Bastion is the famous gun Mons Meg, a huge piece of ordnance forged from bars of iron welded together, with twenty inches bore, now burst and useless. On the same bastion is located the chapel built by Margaret, the Saxon Queen of Malcolm Canmore in 1050, the oldest and smallest sacred edifice in Scotland.

It is, however, in the Grand Parade or Square of the Stuart Palace that greatest interest centers. Here are located Queen Mary's rooms, the Crown Room and Parliament Hall.

Here in the palace is shown the tiny room where James the VI was born, also the larger room occupied by Mary, Queen of Scots.

Here in the same old crown room (somewhat restored) rest the crown jewels of Scotland, her most precious possession. The story of their loss and recovery through the agency of Sir Walter Scott, after being hidden over a hundred years, is of interest; but, as Kipling says, that is another story. Here in the crown room stands the ancient chest in which the crown jewels reposed, here protected by a glass case may be viewed all the ancient Scottish regalia, including the crown of Bruce, the unconquered Scottish crown.

Here also in the Palace of the Stuarts is the great most famous of these "charity banks" is the Piete of Paris. Paris has many sins to answer a disregard of the condition of its humblest is not one of them. The middle classes may so well as those of America and smaller wages heavier burden of taxation have reduced the workingman's standard to a level below that of in the United States.

the extremes, both of wealth and of poverty, are touched in Paris. It is easier to find the dis- the very poor in New York, for instance, than French city, because they are far more extensive want is much more conspicuous.

there are more than one reason for this. the smaller population of Paris, the few for- , the infrequency of large families, the ability to live in comparative contentment little, his reasonably temperate habits and thrift of the people. But more important price realized over the sum lent may still be claimed. The Mont-de-Piete lends about $11,200,000 annually on about 2,000,000 articles. The sale of unredeemed pledges produces about $800,000 annually. Loans upon deeds up to $100 are made.

The Comedie-Francaise Theater, the best-known and most popular of the government-owned amusement houses of France, is required to devote its profits to the support of the public pawnshop. This is the chief endowment of the Monte-de-Piete. The appraisers who pass on the value of articles on which loans are made are all experts. The care they exercise in fixing amounts may be understood when it is known that they are made to pay the deficiency out of their own pockets when the sale of unredeemed pledges fails to bring as large an amount as they have lent on articles.

Besides the head office there are twenty-five branches in Paris. The Prefect of the Seine, or Mayor, is at the head of a council which oversees the operations of the Mont-de-Piete. Members of this body are selected by the French Minister of the Interior from a triple list submitted by the prefect. They serve without pay.

In immediate charge is a director, also appointed by the minister. He is required to devote all his time to the work, and he, of course, receives a salary. He is selected because of his business experience, his knowledge of men and affairs and his executive ability. His political affiliations are not asked, for partisan politics has no part in the operation of the Mont-de-Piete.

Employees of all grades are selected by the Prefect of the Seine from a triple list presented by the director. The governing council is composed of nine men, three members of the Paris Municipal Council, three members of the Assistance Publique, and three other citizens in private life. They are named by the Minister of the Interior from triple lists submitted by the Prefect, and hold office three years, a group of three retiring annually.

"In general the Mont-de-Piete ministers to the wants of three classes," said Martin Feuillee, the present director of the "charity bank." "Its chief patrons are workmen who may be temporarily idle; small manufacturers who require assistance in 'tiding over' a dull season, and tradesmen on a small scale, whose means are so limited that they are without credit at a bank.

"The average Frenchman, you must understand, is not a depositor in a bank to the extent that he would be if he lived in the United States and followed the customs of that country. He invests his small savings in government bonds, for instance, investments which, while netting him profits, afford no source from which to borrow. The Mont-de-Piete supplies this deficiency.

"Among our borrowers, too, are many travelers, persons who have met with accidents or been stricken with illness in Paris and are temporarily embarrassed, financially. Not many Americans are among the number. People who are able to travel in Europe can generally meet whatever emergencies may arise. Almost all the foreigners to whom we lend money redeem the articles they pledge with us well within the allotted time.

"Yes, we have another class of borrowers, too—men who have spent their savings in dissipation and who want to replenish their purses before going home to the wife and babies," M. Feuillee confessed, in response to a suggestion. "But the percentage of these is very low. Frenchmen, as a rule, are not given to carousing, and it is to the credit of our people that their first thought is for the well-being of those dependent upon them. Besides, very, very often, the wife attends to the savings, particularly when she suspects her husband's faithfulness in the matter."

In times of labor disturbances much money is lent by the Mont-de-Piete. Had the recent strike of railway employees been long-extended, workmen by the hundreds would have pawned goods at this government-maintained institution.

The first Mont-de-Piete was established in Italy. It was in 1440 that Barnebe, a monk of Terni, while preaching in Perugia, assailed the usurers and induced wealthy men of the community to form a bank for lending money to workmen, on goods, without interest.

The institution was opened on a high elevation just outside the city. Literally, "piete" means piety or devotion. Hailing the advent of the "charity bank" as a demonstration of Father Barnebe's devotion to them, the poor people named the hill Mont-de-Piete, or Mountain of Devotion, and that name has been given to all similar establishments which have since come into being.

Many other Italian cities followed Perugia's lead. Florence opened a public pawnshop in 1492, the year Columbus discovered America, and Rome in 1539. Near the beginning of the seventeenth century the Italians carried the idea into the Netherlands, which, at that time, was a favorite operating ground for "Shylocks," since so many communities in Italy had manifested opposition to them.

The plan pleased Archduke Albert of Belgium and he directed the establishment of such "banks" in Brussels, Antwerp and other cities, in 1618. Late in the same century Mont-de-Pietes were opened in Montpelier and Marseilles, France.

The administrators of the Paris General Hospital were given permission, in 1777, to open a pawnshop, under the direction of the lieutenant-general of police, all profits to be devoted to the needs of the hospital, which was a free institution. This was the beginning of the Paris Mont-de-Piete. In the next few years several branches were opened in the city. The Revolution interrupted their work, but they were re-established in 1797.

A reorganization was effected in 1831, when, for the first time, a council of administration was named, with the Prefect of the Seine at its head. The resent system of state control was adopted in 1856.

Historical Paris retains reminders of the days when the usurers carried on their business without interference. Not far from the Place du Chatelet, where the Sarah Bernhadt and Chatelet theaters stand, is the Rue des Lombards, which owes its name to the Lombard money lenders, who operated there many years ago.

The Rue de Venise, near by, is one of the oldest and narrowest streets in the city. It was formerly called the Alley of the Usurers, and it still retains the cutthroat aspect of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. But nowadays there are only low drinking shops where once were the establishments of the "Shylocks." Perhaps these shops help to keep some of the people poor. The Mont-de-Pietes give the people hope, at least.

WHY A RABBIT SQUEALS.

It is the general belief that rabbits only squeal when in physical pain, or when captured, and few people are aware that they do so from no other cause than sheer fright occasionally. During a disastrous rainstorm a small warren in my neighborhood was flooded, says a correspondent, and the occupants betook themselves to a nearby hillock for safety. It was a curious sight to see nearly fifty rabbits huddled together in an almost solid mass while the rain beat pitilessly down on them. And then, as the flood increased, and the water reached those at the bottom of the group, they began to scream just as one of their kind does when caught in a trap. The occurrence struck me as being well-nigh unique, and in years of nature study I have never come across the like of it. The sight and sound was weird in the extreme, and probably what was of most interest was the fact that the squealing was not confined to the rabbits, which actually felt the water lapping on their bodies as it rose, but was taken up by the entire company, even by those at the top of the mound. Fortunately, the rain ceased soon enough to allow of all but a few escaping a watery death. The rabbits seemed, however, to be semi-paralyzed for some time after, as it was only when they were literally pushed off the hillock by one of the farm men that they realized they were out of danger, and scampered off. During last year's harvest I was walking one evening through a field of sheaves, when my attention was attracted by the screaming of an animal in distress. On reaching the spot where the noise came from I was astonished to see a large rabbit lying on the ground squealing loudly, and yet there was no enemy visible. Nor, when I picked it up, the rabbit screaming loudly meantime, could I find wounds or anything to account for its strange behavior. On placing the rabbit on the ground it bolted away, and then recommenced screaming in a different part of the field. I again got to it, when it allowed me to pick it up as before, and it appeared to be in a state of exhaustion. Carrying it to the edge of the field, which was a large one, I put it down at the corner of a wood from which I knew the rabbits came; it immediately scurried off to its tree-guarded sanctuary, and I heard no more screaming. On talking the matter over a few days later with a gamekeeper, who is one of the authorities of his profession, he told me that in the harvest fields rabbits sometimes get quite lost amid the monotony of the sheaves, and rush round aimlessly in a circle, just as a human being does when lost in a fog. The rabbits continue running until they become exhausted, and then they lie down and scream. I have often heard a rabbit, when chased by a weasel, start squealing long before the hunter had its teeth in it, so that it would seem as if the screaming on such occasions came from what can be termed as nothing else than despair.—[Dublin Times.

HE FINDS A COUNTERFEITER AND KEEPS A SECRET.

By a Special Contributor.

YOUNG Jimmy Ryan arrived in Paradise Plain a little in advance of the first load of steel rails and redwood ties that was to transform the loneliest spot on the California desert into a busy railroad town.

When Jimmy added himself, his tent, a half-dozen big tubs and a clothes wringer to the population of Paradise Plain the only other inhabitants were a handful of Mexicans who were grubbing out mesquite and sage brush from the company's right-of-way, and who being limited to a single suit of wearing apparel apiece could not be counted upon to furnish a paying patronage for Jimmy's purposed laundry.

To the superficial observer the outlook at Paradise Plain was not encouraging for one of Ryan's calling, and Paradise Plain did not hesitate to say so, but Ryan, with characteristic Irish optimism, smiled knowingly, gathered in a goodly supply of the twisted mesquite for future firewood when the wash boilers must be kept bubbling, turned his biggest tub bottom side up and sat down upon it to wait for custom.

He didn't have to wait long. The next week, a strangle of dust rising up out of the desert signaled the approach of the grading crew, advance guard of the railroad, and following close upon its heels a swarm of dusty, sweating, swearing men, and as they came there stretched behind them two narrow, shining lines of steel. It was then that Jimmy Ryan unpacked the rest of his tubs and sent down to Los Angeles for a helper.

In the next few months, by that mysterious, swift evolution which is characteristic of western towns, Paradise Plain had grown from a construction camp to a thriving town, and Ryan's place, keeping pace with the camp's growth, had developed from a laundry into the leading general store whose proprietor was pointed out as the man who had risen, figuratively speaking, from a wash tub to be the town's most progressive and influential citizen. And then it was then that Jimmy Ryan made his great and memorable mistake.

Jimmy didn't know it was a mistake when he did it, but the opinion expressed by the crowd that nightly gathered on the long porch in front of Ryan's did not leave their host long in doubt as to how it regarded the big-hearted, Irish benevolence which had prompted Jimmy to engage as his cashier the half-starved waif of a boy who had dropped into Paradise Plain from the brakebeam of an eastbound freight one reeking August night, sick and starving, and had headed straight for Jimmy's as if guided by instinct to the warmest heart and freest hand in the place.

"It's the most darned foolishest thing I ever knowed Jimmy to do," announced an especially perturbed individual to the crowd on Ryan's porch. "These here charity stunts of his'n have been numerous, an' some of 'em downright ridic'lous, but none of 'em has ever made him out a plumb idiot before like this here one. What made you give the kid the job, Jim?"

"Didn't give it to him," denied Jimmy apologetically, "he jus come a-trailin' along and took it. 'Lowed it was too darn lonesome for him up on his ranch in the hills an' thought it was time he found a change of employment," ended Jimmy, with unconscious mimicry of the lad's careful speech.

There was a laugh from the crowd. "Told you he had a ranch, did he?" some one asked. "How'd you know he wasn't lyin' to you?"

"Well, he didn't bring the ranch along to prove it," said Jimmy testily, "but there's some few fellers' word I'd take without their oath to back it" As he spoke he jerked his big red head toward the open door inside which the boy sat upon a high stool beside an antiquated cash register. "He's one of 'em," he said decisively. There was a moment in which no one dared dispute the assertion, and then a man on the step said slowly: "Mebbe Jim thinks it wouldn't be no great loss just at present if the kid did light out with a few thousand."

"I reckon I ain't rich enough to stan' that, Jo," smiled Jimmy with his characteristic instant return to good humor.

"I didn't mean you was. I wasn't talkin' about how MUCH money you got—I meant the kind," the other said insinuatingly.

"The kind?" Jimmy asked, mystified. "And what might you mean by that?"

The other hesitated, and a man named Banks, who lounged on a bench by the door, answered for him.

"Jo's thinkin' about them queer four-bit pieces," he explained laughingly. "There's said to be quite considerable of 'em floatin' aroun' town just now. A fellow's got to watch his change mighty sharp or he's ap' to git one or two shoved off on him. I reckon you ain't got caught yet, have you, Jim?"

"I ain't seen one," declared Jimmy. "An' where do the slippery things be comin' from, you think?"

There was a silence until the man called Jo, who was a comparative newcomer in Paradise Plain, snickered suggestively. Jimmy had knocked him down on the day of his arrival for beating a burro, which latter act is, as every one knows, a perfectly necessary and justifiable performance, and Jo was perhaps the only man on the desert who was not a friend of Jimmy Ryan's.

"Where do folks think this here bad money's comin' from?" Jimmy repeated with most innocent curiosity.

Then Jo spoke. "I reckon there ain't much diff'rence of opinion about that," he said, with deliberate, sullen courage. "Folks is pretty well agreed where it's comin' from."

His tone underlined the words as visibly as by a pencil stroke, giving them an emphasis and meaning that the dullest could not fail to understand. In a flash Jimmy had whirled down the steps and caught the fellow by the collar. What seemed about to follow would doubtless have put a tragic finish to the evening had not some of the men sprang forward and wrested the two apart. Jo was led protestingly away by the peacemakers, and the crowd broke up, leaving Jimmy and Banks alone on the porch. The fire of the little Irishman's rage was rapidly cooling to the steady heat of aggrieved resentment.

"He's the first that ever dared call Jim Ryan dishonest," he stormed to Banks, "an' I'd 'a' made him took it back if the boys had 'a' let me have a chanct at him."

Banks shifted his pipe to the other corner of his mouth, where it might not interfere with his verbal exertions, and turned a reluctant but determined face toward Jimmy.

"If you think Jo was accusin' you of floatin' bad money, you're wrong," he said decisively. "He wasn't referrin' to you at all."

"Wasn't?" blustered Jimmy. "Man, you heard him, didn't you?"

"I heard him, sure," agreed Banks, with the irritating composure of the unexcitable man, "an' I knowed he didn't mean you. So did the rest of the boys. That's the reason they butted in when you went to break him up. You shorely don't think Paradise Plain has sunk so low that it's goin' to interfere between gents that's got a real cause for killin', do you?" he asked aggrievedly.

"I reckon he made it plain enough who he meant," insisted the unconvinced Jimmy, ignoring the other's question.

"He did," consented Banks, "to everybody but you, it seems. All the rest of the boys knowed Jo was hittin' that there kid protejay of yourn in there."

There followed a silence, broken at last by Jimmy's gasp of amazement.

"You don't mean—the boys can't think that Tom's the counterfeiter?" he stammered.

"Not the counterfeiter, no. Tom ain't got sense enough for that," returned the unflattering Banks. "It's suspected that the real counterfeiters are makin' the stuff somewhere acrost the Mexican line an' have got a gang up here in the States exchangin' it for the real articlle. It's thought Tom's one of 'em."

Jimmy sat silent, his senses quivering under the shock of this appalling revelation, and Banks went on.

"You know there ain't a man on the desert better thought of than you be, Jimmy; an' we all hate like hell to see you get mixed up in a deal like this. If 't hadn't been for that, the thing wouldn't have been let go on as long as it has, but the boys want to wait till they're sure they've got a clear case against the kid, so's not to drag your name into it onnecessary. They're workin' up a clew they think'll land him in a day or two. They don't want him to suspect anything till they get an officer here. Of course there'll be no danger to you. There ain't a man in California, 'nless it's Jo Weeks, but 'd take oath any day to your honesty, an' you'd ought to be glad to see the little rascal pinched, sence he ain't really anything to you."

In the darkness Banks could not see the look that crossed Jimmy's face at the last words, nor did he catch the saddened ring in the little storekeeper's voice as he got up wearily from the step. "I reckon it's about closin'-up time," he said. "I'm right glad, for I'll be needin' rest an' time to think this over." Then as he came up the steps into the light of the porch lamp his manner brightened to a subtle alertness, while his face took on an expression of cunning utterly foreign to his open Irish countenance.

"I reckon after all it's a favor Jo done me, puttin' me wise to this," he admitted, "an' now I'll just be doin' a little detective wurrk on my own hook."

"Well, you've got a good chanct," Banks encouraged, "an' if you're a min' to you can have the little sharper safe by the time the officer gits here."

Jimmy turned in the doorway and sent a peculiar smile over his shoulder. "Safe," he repeated in an odd tone. "Yes, I reckon the lad'll be safe by the time the officer gets here."

There was a single oil lamp burning feebly under its fly-specked shade in the big room, and by the dim light Jimmy could see Tom bent over his desk, his head upon his arms, sleeping soundly. The boy was very young and frail, and he was obviously exhausted with the heat and fatigue of the day. The sight of his helplessness touched Jimmy strongly, but nevertheless he went forward and took the boy firmly by the shoulder.

"Time to turn in, son," he said, giving him a little shake. He was nervously anxious to be rid of the boy's presence. He must have the room to himself for what he had to do.

Tom started, raised his head and opened a pair of sleep-dazed eyes into Jimmy's face. They were very blue eyes. They made the man beside him think of the blue waters of Queenstown Harbor and the dear Irish skies. And there were dark shadows under them that Jimmy knew were not caused by fatigue.

"I—was—dreamin'——" murmured Tom, struggling back to wakefulness. "Say, ain't it just too awful hot, Mr. Jimmy?"

"Better go to bed; you'll be cooler," Jimmy said, not unkindly, emphasizing the advice with a little push in the direction of the room at the back of the store where Tom slept. When the door had shut behind the boy, Jimmy closed the heavy wooden window shutters, locked the big double doors, turned the dim lamp down until it showed the merest pin-prick of light, and reluctantly began the task he had to perform.

In his own mind the little storekeeper was firmly convinced that his young assistant was innocent of the charge against him, and he was determined that the result of his night's work should prove the boy's innocence to his accusers. From the beginning of their appearing from the the Hobo. He did not up his back. He simply ears close to his rough old head, and lashed his tail, looking meanwhile straight into the eyes of Tommy.

The black cat took a sudden nimble leap, as if she had been a rubber ball and some one had just given her the swift impulse to a straight bounce, and over the fence she went, and was lost to view. Tommy had a similar impulse. Only, he was rather at the disadvantage of being partly turned away from the Hobo. He must execute a turn as well as a bounce in order to escape to safety as did his ma.

He made the effort. That is, he tried to straighten and to spring at one and the same time. He had miscalculated either his own agility or the distance required to be made in the leap. He made the turn all right, which brought him full to the fore with the Hobo, but alas! also landed him almost plump on the enemy's back. It was a case of do or die, now.

The schoolmistress clapped her hands for joy, calling to the landlady: "Come, quick, and see our Tommy! He's really going to fight the Hobo. I just knew he could lick him if he'd only try. Oh, dear!" she added ruefully, as shrieks of ear-splitting note were borne to her ears. "I hope they will not kill each other."

Then she gave her attention more closely to the umpiring of the fight, deciding to use the broom or a pan of water, in case of any unfair tactics on the part of the elder cat. She watched to see how he would manage without the aid of teeth. She soon saw. Grasping the younger animal around the neck with his front paws, he used his hind claws as a sort of bayonet for punishing his foe. Indeed, these hind parts were a most formidable weapon. They brought shrieks and fur with equal celerity.

Young Tom had had enough. He had not really sought the interview himself, nor had he intentionally landed upon his opponent, but he did attempt, in his small way, his feeble, uneducated way, to "come back" at his opponent. He really did well for so young a cat, and taking into consideration the awful notoriety of his opponent. He made a sudden lunge, a sort of tearing loose, and then a leap to the porch. Up he climbed, on to the roof, his enemy in fierce and close pursuit.

"No, you don't!" said young Tom to himself. "You don't catch me again, not if the roofs hold out long enough and the block only stretches out a good quarter mile yet."

The last that was seen and heard of them was the dust flying, and the shingles shaking, as the two fighters fled in a mad race of pursuer and pursued. The roofs must have held out, for young Tom came home safely after a couple of hours, apparently not much the worse for the encounter. He never essayed the turn and the spring again, at the same time, at least, not within the observation of his admiring friends, though he received considerable praise and petting for his enforced heroics. If he could have only endured a little longer—well, that is the story of all prize fights.

After this encounter the Hobo was gone for some time, making known his presence more at night, by the noise of cats' heads bumping against the porch floor, as he gave them specimens of his ability to demolish them as swiftly as nitro-glycerine. He seemed rather ashamed of having had even a show of resistance, however unpremeditated this may have been, so did not appear by daylight, but held his terrible sway in the dark time.

After several weeks of quiet, the schoolmistress called the landlady to the side of the house one morning, exclaiming:

"Come here, quick! You've got your wish. The Hobo is dead."

And there he was, sure enough, stretched out flat in death, his old gray body resting quietly after such a life of fierce activity. It was, to the sympathetic mind of the school teacher, a rather sad sight to see what once had been animated with once strong emotion, now a lifeless, dead thing, a clod that could never feel, see, or strike and scratch again. It was such a contrast. His life had been so full. Then, undoubtedly, though his later years were homeless and his tram-like character undeniable, his former life had been among friends of human kind.

Perchance some baby hand had stroked his soft sides when he was a kitten. His affections were not roused without the training of some human agency. He could purr and rub and arch his back gracefully too well not to have been a one-time house cat and pet. Yet now, in his later life, when all these human ministrations could have been of such comfort to him, he was alone, though undaunted by his loneliness.

"Yes, he certainly looks dead enough, and there isn't a doubt but that it's the Hobo,' admitted the landlady, as she surveyed the lone body of the cat, "and I'm mighty glad he's gone, the old reprobate."

Several days went by, and the time drew near when the instructor of youth must again take her departure to the scenes of her labors. She was loth to leave the pleasant associations that she had formed with the cats of the neighborhood. At the sound of her voice in the back yard, the whole hill seemed to give out cats: black cats, gray cats, blue, white and yellow, the place swarmed to the welcoming note of affection in her voice. She found much to interest and please her in their responsiveness.

One morning she was standing by the window, looking idly down at the side of the front porch, when something familiar came in the line of her lateral vision. Half-seeing, she did not realize, at first, what it was. When she did look, she gave a gasp and an exclamation of surprise. Then she looked closer. Yes, it was, it certainly was the Hobo, come again to life. She was conscious of a half fear as she gazed at the unmistakable molten but unmottled gray of his fur and the fierce outlines of his head and jaws. She recalled the landlady's remark about the impossibility of killing him. She smiled, a chilly smile, and called the keeper of the rooms.

"Come, quick, and see what is here!" she exclaimed.

Something in her tone made the other woman say as she came down the hall: "What is it? The Hobo come to life again?"

"Yes, that is just what it is. See for yourself."

The two women stood spellbound before the great ugly fellow, neither one daring to deny the truth of the present apparition or the reliability of the past mortuary circumstance of the cat. This cat looked at them leisurely, lay down, stretched himself out for sleep, and yawned.

"Ah," exclaimed the teacher, "now I have the explanation of the resurrection. This is, in fact, not a resurrection at all, but a reincarnation. This cat has teeth. He is the strong scion of his noble dad, and is not an unworthy-looking one, either. He looks as if he could hold up the honor of the departed with much credit."

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed the other, "he will be after my cats, I suppose, just like the old Hobo."

And she went away sighing.

E. M. STETSON.

A PHILIPPINE VOLCANO.

NTERESTING PHENOMENA IN CONNECTION WITH TAAL.

[Manila Times:] The central or main crater of Taal is nearly round, its diameter on an air line north and south is 6233 feet and the east-west diameter 7546 feet. The edge of this crater is somewhat irregular, but is nowhere broken through its highest point standing at only 1050 feet above sea level and its lowest at 426 feet.

It is said that Coshima, in Japan, is the only other volcano of similarly low altitude. Within the rim are two hot pools, known respectively as the yellow and the green lake, and a little active cone above fifty feet in height, from which escape steam and sulphurous gas in varying quantities.

In the smaller lake every few minutes the water in the center is blown up like an immense bubble, which rising above the surface finally bursts, revealing a black orifice and causing the boiling and very turbulent water to assume all imaginable colors. The aqueous vapor escaping is sufficient to form a broad smokelike column which is visible especially during the night and in the early morning.

At some distance and before reaching the edge of the crater, where a view of the botton can be obtained, the rumbling sound produced by the escaping vapor, under the influence of the mysterious subterranean forces, can be heard like that of an immense boiling kettle.

The greatest eruption of Taal took place in 1754. It consisted of only fragmental ejecta, but these were sufficient to destroy four villages lying about the lake. "The ash," Semper says, "has now indurated and a new growth of bamboo and palms has sprung up around the projecting ruins." Father Buencuchillo wrote also a pathetic description of this eruption, from which the following is taken:

"The eruption began on May 13 and did not end till December 1. During this time the intensity and aspect of the eruption were continually changing. It was 200 days of devastation and ruin for the inhabitants, to whom the time must have appeared an eternity. During this terrible time the four principal towns of the laguna of Bombon disappeared, viz., Sala, Lipa, Tanauan and Taal, with the numerous villages around them."

It is impossible to describe the beautiful coloring effects caused by the different mineral deposits on the walls and cliffs of the crater.

As the lake is fed from underground springs and no surface water drains into it, it is as clear as crystal and much cooler than sea water and has an abundance of fine, hard-fleshed fish which are highly esteemed by the Filipinos of the region. They are game fish and some reach a size that makes their capture with light tackle a matter of some difficulty.

The clear water of the lake has another marvel that is well worth seeing. Some comparatively modern eruptions of the volcano covered some towns, in two of which only the church roofs are visible. Others are completely submerged, and on days when the surface of the lake is unruffled one can look down into the streets of these submerged towns and see the fish dart through doors and windows of once populous barrios. The water is twenty-five feet deep, but so clear that every detail is visible.

CHAPELS ON TRAINS.

Everybody knows that the Trans-Siberian Railway is the most wonderful railway in the world, says a writer in the November Strand, but it is not generally known that the principal trains, among their other luxuries, have a chapel attached to them, and that a priest travels with the express. These chapels are quite handsome structures, paneled with wood and lavishly decorated and gilt. They are not only for the benefit of the passengers. At an appointed hour on Sundays the train halts at a wayside station, and the peasants living in the neighborhood flock to the service. Church and State are very closely allied in Russia, and the government seizes every opportunity for promoting the cause of the Orthodox faith.

DELICACY.

A young man who had lost his wife married his deceased wife's sister while still in mourning. While on his honeymoon a friend of his whom he had not seen for a long time met him in a restaurant. The friend, after being introduced to the bride, said sympathetically:

"But who are you in mourning for, old man?"

"For my sister-in-law," was the delicate reply.

"What do they carry guns to church for?" the boy asked, with sudden interest.

"For fear of the Indians," was the reply. "The Indians were apt to lie in wait for them at every turning. Ah, what pious men they were, to be sure! Think of them the next time you want to shirk your religious duties. Through snow and sleet, through bitter cold, through the perilous ambuscades of the savage Indians, they wended their way to church, Sunday after Sunday, with pious, thankful hearts. Yet you——"

Never Too Much Mince Pie.

MAYOR FRANK J. RICE, in a Thanksgiving speech at a newsboys' dinner in New Haven, praised mince pie.

"Mince pie," he said, "is the crowning glory of a Thanksgiving dinner. I am sure you will all agree with me when I declare that it is impossible for any one, at any time, ever to get too much mince pie.

"Once upon a time a mother said to her little son during the Thanksgiving Day repast:

"'Tommy, this is the last piece of mince pie you can have.'

"Tommy frowned as black as a thunder cloud.

"'There was a little boy like you,' his mother continued sternly, 'and he ate mince pie and he ate mince pie, and finally he burst. Yes, he burst from too much mince pie.'

"'No,' said Tommy. 'There's no such thing as too much mince pie.'

"'Then,' said his mother, 'why did he burst?'

"'There wasn't enough boy,' Tommy answered."

MISS ANNIE S. PECK, the distinguished scholar and mountain climber, described, in one of her addresses in Boston on mountaineering, the strange effect that some mountains have on some men.

"In a word," she said, "it is an effect of mendacity. Thus, in a Boston club, one mountaineer said to another:

"'So Smith, fat Smith, actually climbed Mont Blanc!'

"'Smith? Not he!' the other mountaineer replied.

"'But he said he did.'

"'True. But in September, on his return from Chamonix, he only said he'd been to the foot of Mont Blanc. Since then he's gradually lied himself all the way up to the top.'"

How to Eat Waffles.

THE Republican nominee for Governor of Ohio is very fond of waffles.

"I have a regular formula for eating waffles," said Mr. Harding to a friend, "and I recommend it to every one. You eat the first fourteen waffles without syrup, but with lots of butter. Then you put syrup on the next nine, and the last half-dozen you eat just simply swimming in syrup. Eaten that way waffles never hurt anybody."—[Success Magazine.

"I almost forget. Oh, yes; I think I mostly called her 'Say,' the first year."

"How about this?" asked Lyon.

"'Yes,' said Tomlinson. 'I'm thankful it's him instead of me.'"

Found—One Literary Tramp.

RIDER HAGGARD, who wrote "She" and "Ayesha," was traveling across the United States as the guest of John Hays Hammond in Hammond's private car.

"What I want to see," said Haggard, "is the real tramp. I haven't seen one since I reached this country. I can't believe you have as many as has been stated to be the case."

Harris Hammond, the eldest son of John Hays, promised:

"I'll show you one at the next stop."

He had seen one riding on the trucks under the car, and, at the next station, he went down and called the hobo out. When the tramp entered the car, he was covered with cinders and dust, and looked like something from the lower regions.

Hammond shook hands with him, and introduced him, saying:

"This is Mr. Rider Haggard."

"Rider Haggard!" exclaimed the hobo. "Why, I've read all of your books, and loved every one of them."

Then he sat down and discussed literature with Haggard for half an hour. At the end of the talk Harris took him back, let him get some of the dust and cinders off, and handed him a good cigar.

"That fellow's not a tramp," said Haggard. "He's a gentleman in distress."—[Popular Magazine.

Blackmail.

"I WAS taking lunch with a friend of mine recently who has a small boy about three years old," said a gentleman. "As a very special favor, and to please me, his mother allowed him to come to the table, telling me that she could not promise that he would behave in the proper manner, as she had never tried him before. The boy behaved very well until the dessert came on the table. As this proved to be ice cream, his favorite dish, he wanted to have a second dish. His mother refusing, he said: 'If you don't give me some I'll tell on you!' The mother still refusing, he cried out: 'If you don't give it to me before I count ten I'll tell. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten.' His mother still paying no attention, he shouted: 'My pants are made out of the window curtain!'"—[Metropolitan.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Ground

ANCIENT GARDENS.

HOUSE AND GROUNDS TREATED AS INSEPARABLE BY THE ROMAN.

By Ernest Braunton.

THOUGH the gardens of Egypt are not the most ancient on record, they were the first of which we have any definite description. At that time all gardening was formal, and down almost to the last century no serious attempt had been made to copy nature, either in the matter of details or as an entire landscape. The Egyptians were able to grow grand flowers in profusion, for they sunk all flower beds below the paths and roads and irrigated them from their extensive canal system which tapped the Nile.

The ancient Greeks also had their gardens, but seemed to make a far greater use of trees and, with a due regard for the inner man planted fruits of all kinds. It is quite evident, from what little we can learn of these gardens, that fruit trees and vines were mixed with ornamental flowering trees and shrubs and the walks bordered with smaller flowering plants. There is no doubt but the Grecians did some group planting with trees, for they were fond of groves, which are often mentioned in their literature. It is probable that summer-houses or miniature temples were prominent features in the larger and more pretentious gardens.

The Romans carried the architectural features of the garden still farther and the house and garden were treated as "one and inseparable." In those days formal gardens were at the zenith of their glory, for a large part of Rome, "with her seven hills," demanded terracing if any gardening at all was to be done. Thus came in grand terrace steps and ornamental buttresses surmounted with statuary and all sorts of carved designs. In some gardens masonry was by far the most prominent feature, and plant growing seemed to be merely an incidental embellishment to take the "raw edge" off the harsh and monotonous lines of architecture. Even in the growing of trees they followed the topiary style of pruning that was in vogue in Lydia more than 2000 years B.C. Both the masonry and topiary work are prominent in our finest formal gardens of today. In England the topiarist is more in demand, but in the Hunnewell estate in Massachusetts there is some of this work that rivals the best. For many centuries following the fall of the Roman empire, gardening was a lost art, to be revived finally as the Italian style with which we are so familiar at the present day, where all the territory owned by a citizen was treated as a whole and clearly on an architectural basis, all of one style and therefore harmonious in the highest degree.

THE DOMINATING PALM.

The Dominating Palm.

NO other plant in use in Los Angeles gardens has spoiled so many front yards as the Canary Island date palm, Phoenix canariensis. Though beautiul in itself, the use to which it is often put eventually overwhelms the general garden vegetation so that our garden landscape consists of or is dominated by one single plant. The one we illustrate is less than twenty years old, yet has a spread of forty feet. On one side it thrusts its leaves into a front porch and on the other hangs them over the sidewalk so that in each case the leaves must be mutilated by shortening or trim off the leaves until an insufficient head is left. Beautiful as such large palms are, they look sadly out of place where they alone constitute the entire ornamentation of a front yard. Instances in Los Angeles are not wanting where two of these palms were planted on little green squares in front of a building but ten or twenty feet from the public sidewalk and on a lot but thirty or forty feet wide. In a dozen years a pair of palms so planted so seriously overwhelm all else and so crowd and darken the windows as really to detract from the value of the property. With the wealth of the whole vegetable kingdom to draw upon, we may easily plant property of any size so that each year's growth brings an added value.

Plant Freaks.

A NEWS item states that a Colorado man has nearly perfected a seedless watermelon. While it may be desirable to reduce the number of seeds now found in the average melon, a perfectly seedless one who stops right at that point, for it would have no means of perpetuating its kind. More than that, when it has nearly lost its seed-forming powers or habit, it will be found that few seeds are potent and that a strain of melons in that State will rapidly deteriorate. The seedless apple is another fake, for what need or advantage to remove the seeds while the now-edible core remains. Plant breeders should aim to give us something better than we now have, rather than seek to perpetuate freaks of questionable value.

Planting and Transplanting.

TREES should be dug with care, getting as many roots as possible without incurring too great expense. If a deciduous tree or shrub, a good mass of roots may be removed with the trunk and must not be allowed to dry. A hole for their reception should be dug large enough to allow all of them to be spread out in a natural manner. Soil should be finely pulverized so that it may be sifted down among the roots and permanently closely settled by the use of an abundance of water. This question of close contact between roots and soil is an important one. Soil may be tramped down fairly solid, but if an abundance of water is subsequently applied, this tramping will have been of but little use. The coarser the soil the more necessary the compacting of the soil by treading heavily over all the roots.

Plant Food.

The writer is frequently asked why the three elements of plant food—nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid—are necessary and what they do. As there is no doubt as to the necessity of them in the soil, we will only consider what they do. They have various uses, some of which (coloring and flavoring fruits) does not enter into a consideration of ornamental plant life. The writer uses nitrogen to produce rank vegetative growth; potash to fill in and mature or harden this succulent growth and phosphoric acid to produce seeds or fruits and hasten their maturity. We do not hold that much of the latter element is necessary to produce flowers, though not without effect, but its chief effect is upon the seeds and fruit; in short, it is a "finisher."

Plant Catalogues.

The modern plant catalogue is more and more getting to be numbered among our necessities. Through this medium the public keeps posted on what is new and rare. Cultural directions are also a prominent feature with planting calendars very fully and fairly covering the entire year's gardening. These calendars and those printed in seed store and nursery advertisements render somewhat less necessary such lists in gardening periodicals and departments. Nearly all up-to-date plant and seed catalogues are reliable, and those of Los Angeles firms are noted for their truthful statements and descriptions; they do not even err in stating the unusual pleasure and profit to be derived from gardening in our delightfully reciprocal climate.

A catalogue of wild has lately been issued, one of un- perfect mine of information con- native flowers of horticul- illustrated with a dozen photo engravings of species common about Los Angeles. The title page reads: "California Wild Flowers, Their Culture and Care, a treatise describing upward of a hundred beautiful species with a few notes on their habits and characteristics. By Theodore Payne, 245 South Main street." A price of 10 cents is placed upon it, though the cost per copy was much greater. Aside from care and culture notes there are lists of species adapted to sun, to shade, etc., as well as color lists—of blues, of whites, of yellows, and other colors and shades, annuals for borders, perennials for covering dry banks and such an array of usable information as to make it an invaluable aid to all fanciers and growers of our native wild flowers.

Cobble-stone Gutters.

NOW that we have had one light rain, the insufficiency of gutters of loose cobble stones may be seen. It is said that Los Angeles allows no more of them to be built, but those we still have are sufficient to aggravate all who examine them. Weeds appear everywhere in them, for the roughness of the mass forms a good place for lodgment of all weed seeds. Where these are pulled, the sand filling comes out with the roots, the place to be filled again with debris from the street during the next rain. If weeds are cut off, the stumps stick up to catch floating rubbish and form the nucleus of a small dam which diverts the water on to the street soil, causing serious washing.

Housing the Poor.

THE Los Angeles Housing Commission desires to call especial attention to the necessity of compelling landlords and property owners to bring their premises up to the required standards. A great uplift in the moral tone would be wrought as well as a decrease in disease and crime, by providing proper housing conditions for the working classes. Overcrowding should be absolutely prohibited, even at the expense and necessity of establishing police officers in the various large house courts at night. The addition of arc lights in many of these courts would be of value as crime and immortality thrive in the darkness.

The commission also feels that public-spirited citizens who wish to invest small sums should form a stock company for the purpose of building and maintaining house courts. Such a company could lease property and build properly-constructed homes for the working classes, provide the necessary sanitary conveniences, plenty of light fresh air, and maintain such courts in a proper manner. They could take over the management of other properties and see that they were properly cared for. Such a plan is absolutely feasible and should return a net profit of from 4 per cent. to 5 per cent. on the money invested. This idea has been operated to advantage in eastern cities and could be very well taken up here.

Thorough Work of Housing Committee.

THE field of our Housing Commission lies in the homes of the poorer classes which need special laws to regulate and educate them along the lines of keeping such laws, which would otherwise be dead letters. For this purpose it has been found in the East and abroad that both men and women inspectors are essential.

The men do the general inspecting of the conditions of houses, yards, etc., with regard to their conformity or non-conformity to the building and sanitary laws and the housecourt ordinances; to serve notices on the landlords when the houses do not conform to the ordinances; to watch the construction of new courts, seeing that they are properly built; to prevent overcrowding, see that the courts are maintained in good condition etc. etc., using common sense and tact as well as the authority of the law to bring about improvements.

It has been found that women inspectors are indispensible, in the betterment of the houses of the people, for the reason that men inspectors are reluctantly admitted into the homes and frequently refused altogether and therefore cannot do interior inspection. When it is considered that the inspector must enter every part of the home, for such it is to the herded humanity crowding it, and that during the day only the women and children are usually to be found, it will readily be seen that well trained, tactful women can investigate interiors both more thoroughly and with greater propriety and fairness to the women whose little all must pass in review.

The Royal Poinciana.

ABOUT a year ago there appeared in the press a news note from Sacramento stating that some one in Florida would be pleased to send seed of the royal poinciana, which had never been tried in this State, etc., etc., all of which, except the offer, might be termed "bosh." The generous Floridan did not know that we had been trying to grow it for over a quarter of a century, but that our climate lacks the nearly tropical humidity so necessary to the health of this truly royal plant. She now sends to the writer the startling statement that she presumes our soil is also too hard! Another statement is that Florida has more flowers than any other State in the Union, though much of it, from a floral standpoint, is a dreary waste compared with our winter flower crop. The whole State of Florida cannot muster as many flowers of garden value as the southern one-fourth of California. Come out to this Coast and see mile upon mile in a blaze with floral beauties of every hue.

Cactus in the Holy Land.

ONLY a few mornings ago a solicitor with a fine portfolio of Bible scenes, called upon the writer and in the lot was an illustration of Joseph, Mary and the infant Christ fleeing into Egypt. On the right hand was a large plant of the large flat-leaved cactus (Opuntia tuna) so common in Southern California, especially about the old missions. All cacti, except a little parasitic species a few inches high, are natives to the Americas and adjacent islands. None were seen in Europe until the Spaniards took them home from South America and Mexico. None were grown in the Holy Land until the Spanish planted them there. While cacti may be seen there in abundance at the present time, it is easily apparent that in the time of Christ there were none within thousands of miles.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

EVOLUTION OF A BREED.

THE FAMILY HISTORY OF AMERICAN BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

THERE is possibly no breed or variety of standard fowl recognized in our domestic poultry that has commanded wider attention alike from the fancier and the practical breeder than the American Plymouth Rock. It took its inception as early as 1847-50, its ancestral lines leading back to many sources, but the dominant blood in its veins is the old American Dominique and some black-plumaged hens. This union produced single combs with bars in plumage. By careful selection covering a series of years, the breed and variety was finally fixed as we see it today.

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS OF 25 YEARS AGO.

Fashions in Rocks have changed but little during recent years. There is some divergence of opinion among fanciers as to shades of color and breadth of barring; some are also inclined to haggle over type and form—but these are minor points. We present here an illustration of a winning pair of Barred Rocks as they were bred twenty-five years ago. Compared with the Barred Rocks of today they were less blocky and were lacking in neatness of body. Especially is this true of the hens, which in the early days possessed higher station and were inclined to be more rangy.

In the American class there is no breed nor variety that has been more popular, nor one that has commanded wider study in its perfection. As an all-purpose fowl it is as good as the best in any other variety; as an egg producer it stands second to none in its class. Being of docile character, it is well adopted to limited quarters, making of it a prime favorite for family flocks. As a table bird it has long stood high, while as a show bird and an object of beauty, there is nothing handsomer than a flock of pure Barred Rocks. Being the pioneer breed in the American class, it has by sheer force of merit maintained a high place for over fifty years—a supremacy that is only strengthened with the advancing years.

The Scourge of the Hen.

During the past week no less than three letters have come to this department of The Times, each one of which describes an aggravated case of roup, and all asking for a remedy. Reference has so often been made in this column to the subject that it seems almost futile to again call attention to the subject. Let it be here definitely understood that roup is a contagious disease caused by germs. If allowed to go unchecked the majority of cases will terminate fatally. At times roup appears in isolated cases, taking its inception in a mere cold. Contagion is produced by sick and healthy birds eating and drinking from the same vessels, by the houses and yards becoming infected with the disease germs. Once in a flock, experienced professional breeders do not doctor the ailing specimens—they at once send them to the block, burn or bury deep their bodies; then remove the healthy birds to virgin ground, and by the observation of the laws of sanitation and proper feeding and housing, many may be saved, though of course some apparently healthy fowls may come down with the trouble later on.

As for remedies, they are more or less in the nature of an experiment. At times success follows treatment; at other times it seems futile. Even when apparently successful, the "cured" specimens are never as valuable for breeding purposes as those that have escaped the ordeal. Boiled down, roup includes a discharge at the nostrils, the eyes, the slit in the top of the mouth, the throat and the windpipe. The writer has found that kerosene oil will a times cure a common cold by injection with a "squirt" oil can into the nostrils. Peroxide of hydrogen, reduced one-half with water, injecting a few drops in the eyes, nostrils, and mouth, is a simple and painless remedy. As a preventive permanganate of potash placed in water until it becomes of a claret color and then used as a wash for head and mouth, will often relieve mild cases of roup. Many of the advertised remedies are good, and often afford relief. It will be noticed, however, that most of these cures have to do with the handling of the individual bird, which makes the process irksome and in the case of a large flock, rather expensive. In the opinion of the writer, the hatchet remedy is the safest. Then thoroughly disinfect the premises, observe cleanliness and warm, dry housing, and roup may be prevented—it is cheaper and better than to waste time, labor and remedies on a flock that has become subject to the scourge.

Poultry in Alaska.

In a correspondence to the Fanciers' Monthly for October is given some interesting data bearing on practical poultry culture in far-north Alaska. For instance, we learn that the flock under discussion was kept for eight months of the year over a stable, where the birds received what benefit there might be in the animal heat given off from the animals situated under them. This, however, was not sufficient, and a coal stove was brought into action to keep the temperature up to about 40 degrees. The flock consisted of 225 White Leghorn hens, that laid during the winter from thirty-five to fifty eggs per day; increased to 400 hens in summer, the output was 125 eggs per day. In the winter, this hen fruit commanded $3 per dozen; in summer competition brought the price down to $1 per dozen. The cost of feed and care is not given, though we are informed that the former was high. Table fowl command 65 cents per pound live weight. We further learn that no effort is made to grow stock; hens are all shipped in from the States. It is said that the enterprise has proven profitable.

"I was in front of its face—and I hit him!"

For the first time on that eventful night, Jud Gordon shuddered. If that which he had seen were an actuality, a real person, how could its escape be explained? The bullet, beyond all doubt, had struck the countenance. That countenance must have been supported by a body and pair of legs, and it had fled with incredible swiftness from before him. The occurrence was beyond understanding.

Gordon had piled abundant fuel on the blaze, but was sure he could not close his eyes again, no matter how long he remained in the haunted house. Nevertheless, he arranged his surroundings comfortably, using his overcoat, saddle and bags with no little skill. And sitting thus he strove desperately to solve the mystery. The ominous rattling of the windows, the moaning of the wind, the vague moonlight outside, mingled with the fright, the solemn hour; all these united to make him hope again and again that he would soon rouse from some smothering nightmare.

And sitting thus, as the minutes dragged past, he did that which he did not think it possible for him to do—he fell into dreamless slumber.

When he opened his eyes the night was gone. The fire had sunk to ashes, and his body was chilled. The dull light of the autumn morning stole into the windows, and he came to his feet, yawned, and stretched his limbs. Then he would have suspected the whole thing had been a vision of sleep, but for that tiny orifice in the window pane, through which oozed the colder air when he held his hand in front of the opening.

Suddenly he thought of his mare, which he had placed in the stable the evening before. In a panic he hurried out. The catch showed no sign of disturbance, and he opened the door. A delighted whinney greeted him. She had passed a far more pleasant night than her master, who breathed a sigh of thankfulness when he patted her neck. He led her to the spring near by, from which he also drank, and in which he bathed face and hands. Then he bridled and saddled her, urged by his dislike of the place.

Turning into the highway he headed in the direction he was riding the evening before. He urged her to a brisk gallop, and barely a half mile away at a crossroads, where stood a small, dingy tavern, a weathered sign faintly disclosed the words, "Travelers' Rest."

The only person visible about the tumble-down structure was a stumpy, middle-aged man, in straw hat and shirt sleeves, despite the chilliness of the season. He was on the porch and greeted his visitor with an amiable grin. In reply to Gordon's question whether he could get breakfast, the landlord answered:

"That's what the Travelers' Rest is here fur; I 'spose you want your horse looked after."

"She has been fed, and doesn't need it. I can stop only a little while, as I am already late."

Hitching the mare to the wabbly post in front, Gordon followed his host through the small bar-room to the "dining room," where, to his vast relief, he found a substantial meal and much better than he expected to see. The landlord, who gave his name as Jo Biggers, said that he and Mrs. Biggers and their boy Pete had eaten a short time before. After the slatternly wife had brought in steaming coffee, the proprietor sat down with his guest at the table, to make sure his wants were supplied.

Jo Biggers had the curiosity of all countrymen. His first question was as to where the young man had spent the previous night, since his early arrival showed that he could not be far off. Gordon saw no reason to conceal the truth, and told his experience.

"Great Scott!" exclaimed Biggers; "you're the first man that ever stayed over night in the Ha'nted House. I don't see how you stood it after the ghost peeped in at the winder at you. I wouldn't resk what you done for a thousand dollars."

"I don't see that there was any risk; I wasn't hurt, and the ghost didn't suffer from my shot, so far as I could see. What is the yarn about the Haunted House?"

Jo Biggers's face lengthened.

"It was the sperit of Sam Burlock that you seen."

"Who was Sam Burlock?"

"The black feller that lived in that house with Capt. Garrish a good many years ago. One day the two had an awful quarrel, and Sam shot the captain, and for same he was hung fur. Since then his ghost comes now and then at the old brick house. It's bound to do so if there's any one inside at night."

While this interesting conversation was going on, Jud Gordon's gaze fell upon the door opening into the kitchen. He saw it move gently inward for several inches, and then observed a face peering through the opening.

"Who's that?" demanded the visitor, nodding toward the door.

Biggers turned his head. Before the entrance he called:

"Come in here, Pete; you hain't got anything to be afraid of."

A gangling, stooping, yellow-haired youth slouched into the room with a grin on his freckled face. His trousers were stuffed into the legs of his cowhide boots, and he wore no coat nor waistcoat. He paused after advancing a few steps, uncertain whether to come further, and hanging his head looked sheepishly at the stranger. When the latter addressed him, he turned about and went out without having spoken a word.

Gordon questioned Jo Biggers, but gained no more information. Having been told the right direction to take, Gordon bade his landlord good-by and rode off. And as he went the conviction grew upon him that had Biggers chosen he could have enlightened him to a much greater degree regarding the Haunted House. The traveler reached home on the second day following.

Gordon expected that the impression of his strange experience would weaken as the months passed. But it deepened rather, though the hurly burly of business kept it out of his thoughts most of the time. It was not until the succeeding spring that he was able to yield to the impulse to make a special journey to the tumbledown tavern of Jo Biggers, with the resolution to solve the mystery of the Haunted House before he returned.

The pudgy landlord greeted him with beaming unctuosity. Always in good spirits, he bubbled on this balmy afternoon when the young man drew rein and asked for supper and lodging. The wife and son, Pete, were invisible until meal time. After awhile two men straggled in from their homes a long distance away for their usual nightcap, but it was comparatively early in the evening that Gordon and the landlord sat alone on the rickety porch in front. After a brief chat, the visitor bluntly said:

"Biggers, you didn't tell me all you know about the Haunted House when I was here last fall; I have come back to get the truth."

The landlord was silent for a moment, and then chuckled.

"Wal, I reckon I can trust you; you won't give me away?"

"No."

Biggers glanced around to make sure no one else was within hearing, and lowered his voice:

"I'll give it to you straight. There was a Capt. Garrish, and he was killed by his nigger serving man, as was hung. 'Squire Horne owned the place, and on account of this pokery bus'ness, tried to sell it. There warn't many that wanted to buy, but when he lowered the price to $1000 he catched two or three nibbles. Afore he could make a bargain, however, there come stories about the house being ha'nted by the sperit of Sam Burlock. Lots of persons swore they'd seen the ghost and made some remarks to it. The 'squire pooh poohed, but, all the same, he growed a little oneasy himself. He offered me $10 to spend one night in the place to make an end to the scand'lous stories, and I tried it; but 'bout midnight I tore out the front door and yelled all the way home, me going on a canter every step of the way."

"What caused your fright?"

"Why, I'd seen what you seen, and couldn't stand it. The next day the 'squire offered to sell the property for $600, and vowed he'd let all the buildings rot afore he'd take a cent less. One of his neighbors offered him $300, but the 'squire tore his hair, got red in the face, and wanted to fight the man who offered the ridic'lous price. Matters stood that way till after you stayed overnight in the Ha'nted House. I told your story to others, and it warn't long afore it reached the 'squire. He held out for several months, but one day he felt so grumpy he went to his neighbor and told him he might have the whole blamed thing at his own price. They dickered awhile, and finally the sale was made for $200. Since that time," gurgled Jo Biggers, "there hain't been any ghost seen."

"How is that?"

"Wal, in the first place, there ain't no such thing as ghosts," replied the landlord, loftily.

"I never believed there was."

"Wal, so far as I can larn, that neighbor done a powerful cute thing. He rigged up a wooden image that looked like the head and shoulders of a nigger; then his son sneaked round to the Ha'nted House every night to find out if any stranger was inside. If there was, he scrooched under one of the front windows and shoved up the heathen idol so that it would be seen by the onsuspicious visitor. When you fired off your pistol you made a plumb center shot, but the proprietor of the business, or scenery shover, was below the winder sill, and knowed enough to stay there. When you made a rush for him he had enough notice to git clean out of your way. Warn't that a purty cute trick?"

"It was a piece of rascality of the meanest kind."

"Sorry you feel that way, my friend, 'cause the name of the neighbor aforesaid who bought that property is Jo Biggers, and it was his son Pete that played the ghost."

NIGHT.

It is night and the breezes blow gently
Through the windows and across my room,
The stars peep at me so brightly;
Far up the sky, the moon,
Sits, as ever so calmly and coldly,
Gazing down on us mortals below;
How lovely it is in its setting,
With its steady, inspiring glow.

Ah! to me the night is so lovely,
It lifts this poor soul from its clay;
How I love the pale stars far above me
And the trail of the white "Milky Way!"
Oh, I love to sit here in the stillness,
Forgetting life's rough, weary way.

And a lounging takes hold of my heartstrings
And urges me upward and on,
To something far better and nobler
Than the frivolous drift of the throng
O Lord, grant the best that is in me
I have strength to bring to the light,
Let the good illumine my darkness
Like the glorious stars, the night.

MARY STUART.

WANTED HIM TO SPECIFY.

"Will you always be true?" asked the broker's suspicious daughter, when young Sportleigh had thrown himself at her feet and begged for her hand.

"As true as steel," he cried.

"Common or preferred?" she inquired, still suspicious.—[Chicago News.

Jimmy Ryan, Detective.

There was an emphatic shaking of the close-clipped brown head.

"I can't do that—I mustn't do it, but oh, Mr. Jimmy, you'll help me, won't you?"

"I'll do the best I can," promised Jimmy, Justice beating an ignominious retreat before Sympathy. His mind working rapidly had already evolved a plan to smuggle the youngster out of town on the midnight train. As a preliminary he sent Tom to his room, and as an aid to the deception the boy had determined upon he provided him with some articles of women's clothing taken from the store's "ready-to-wear" stock, and then as customers began to appear he told with easy Irish inventiveness a thrilling, but wholly convincing tale of how his cashier, having in some secret way become aware that he was under suspicion, had disappeared the previous night as mysteriously as he had come, and while the honest little storekeeper's conscience protested at the lie, it still did not prevent a lively enjoyment of his fictional powers and the astonished interest of the town folk. How well his benefactor's plan for Tom's escape might have worked out cannot be known, for, like the former ones, it was doomed to miscarry. At the supper hour that evening, while the store was temporarily empty of all but the proprietor, Banks hurried in.

"Heard the news?" he hailed, and then before Jimmy could reply: "They've got the counterfeiter, or what's left of him—he's dead."

The surprises of the day had been too much for Jimmy. For once his ready wit failed him, and he could only stand staring at Banks in silent wonder. The latter, however, did not need to be questioned. He hurried on with the story.

"Way I heard it, seems like it was a kid up in Sacramento, that was makin' the stuff. How he got on to it I don't know. He'd floated a good deal of it there, an' when the authorities got to pushin' him too clost he lit out acrost the line. He died day before yesterday; some kind of fever, an' before he died he give the whole game away to the priest. But that ain't all. Seems like the kid had a sister. They was orphans, an' the girl thought a terrible lot of him, more I reckon because he'd always been a wild little devil, an' she was always excusin' him. He wouldn't ever work much, so she'd give him ever cent she could make above a bare livin', an' when he went into this here bad-money business she blamed herself because she hadn't been able to give him more, an' when he left an' the police was huntin' high an' low for him she found a lot of bogus four-bit pieces that had been overlooked 'mong his things, an' what you reckon she done? Well, sir, she rigged herself up to look like her brother an' left town, scatterin' the queer money on her trail, but cautious enough so they wouldn't ketch her too soon. Her plan was to keep the officers thinkin' they was on the boy's trail, but to hold them off long enough to let him get clean out of reach, then she meant to stop droppin' the money an' escape if she could, an' if she failed she was goin' to take his medicine for him. Seems like she'd some way got word to the boy what she was up to an warnin' him what to do, an' he told it to the padre along with the rest. What d' you think of that for nerve?"

"I don't call it nerve," whispered Jimmy, after a moment's reverent silence. "I call it—love. A woman that could love like that——" Then after a moment's meditation he dared a question whose answer he felt must determine his future course in regard to Tom. He knew now beyond the shadow of a doubt that his late cashier was the girl who had sacrificed her honesty and dared a terrible punishment to save an erring brother, but if the fact had not suggested itself to Paradise Plain he might be risking the girl's safety in asking the question upon whose answer he felt his life's happiness to depend. But he dared it:

"An' was the folks thinkin'—that Tom was this girl—in disguise?"

"Tom? No, he ain't clever or plucky enough to carry it off. Reckon the little cuss jus' happened to get stuck with a few of them four-bit pieces himself an' took the chance to unload 'em here. An' by the way, now he's gone, you'll be lookin' for a new cashier, I reckon."

"Got one," came Jimmy's glib answer. "Old frien' of mine in Los Angeles sent his daughter up. I saw some time back that Tom wasn't goin' to fill the bill, so I wrote him, an' the girl, Geniveve's her name, bein' tired of her old place and kinda run down an' needin' a change, she was right glad to come. She got in on the 5:30 this mornin'. I was just gettin' ready to go over to the Plains House to see about gettin' her a room when you come in. An' by the way, I wouldn't say anything about this here counterfeitin' business or the fellow that died, before her. Might kinda upset her, you know, bein' strange."

"Sure I won't," promised Banks. "An' say, Jimmy, you're young an' good-lookin', maybe you might persuade her to stay permanent, an' be Mrs. Jimmy?"

"Maybe I might," agreed Jimmy, with a readiness which showed the idea was not altogether new to him. "But till then she's goin' to have the best they've got over to the Plains House."

And then, as Banks watched, he crossed to the closed door and tapped gently upon it. "If you're ready now we'll just be steppin' over to the hotel, Geniveve girl," he called, tenderly. "I reckon you'll be needin' some rest after your trip."

EGG MAKER

I Have Ten Hens and Got Ten Eggs Each Day

by feeding "Lee's Egg Maker." Without waiting another day, go out and count your hens—count them carefully. For a week keep an accurate daily record of the eggs you get. The guarantee below means you.

WE GUARANTEE

that no matter what you are feeding, and regardless of the number of eggs you are getting at the present time, if Lee's Egg Maker is added to the daily ration—made a portion of it—the increased egg yield resulting therefrom will more than pay the cost of the Egg Maker, cost of labor required, and 100 per cent profit on said labor.

We don't care what your hens are doing now, we ask you to buy Lee's Egg Maker on our guaranty of an increased egg-production at a reduced feeding cost. Could we make you a better proposition?

The amount of good digestible protein is what counts for results in poultry feeding, and America's big feeders say Lee's Egg Maker contains more digestible protein than any other poultry food they can buy.

Lee's Egg Maker is almost entirely a meat food and with an actual tested protein feeding value in excess of 80 per cent, and you'll find in it the essentials entirely lacking in other prepared poultry food. The best feeding authorities in the country endorse it—and use it. You can't afford not to feed it, whether you have 10 hens or 1000, the proportionate profit would be the same.

FIELD NOTES.

Mix-up of Nursery Stock.

A WELL-KNOWN horticultural authority says the work of the nurseryman is often hampered and rendered more difficult by the mix-up of varieties in the orchard. The nurseryman goes into your orchard to cut scions. He is told that these trees are of such a variety and those others of some other variety. Frequently he pays the orchardist for the right to take scions and bud sticks, and yet this same orchardist all too often fails to call attention to the fact that other than the desired varieties are scattered through the block, and so the mix-up is continued and carried into new plantings.

This is all too true, yet the authority fails to fix the primary and sole responsibility for the mix-up where it belongs. I do not believe our first-class nurserymen cut their propagating wood in that slipshod way. But many nurserymen do, and hence the conglomerate blocks of trees we find in so many plantings. The honest propagator does not have to ask the orchardist as to varieties and types. He makes it his business, or should do so, to know every tree from which he cuts his scions or bud sticks. Not to be thus acquainted with the parent trees upon which must depend the future orchards is next degree to criminality, for a mistake made is like an endless chain, and can never be rectified. There is a strong feeling manifest at every fruit growers' convention to hold the nurseryman to a higher degree of responsibility. No one can anticipate his mistakes, or recognize them until it is too late. I know there are a few nurserymen who never propagate from unknown or even questionable trees. These men have their reward in increased confidence, but the public is absolutely helpless when dealing with a careless or dishonest propagator.

Orange-Box Sizes.

A LOS ANGELES correspondent "writes to know" if the standardization movement contemplates any change in the size of orange boxes. It does not, and for the following reasons: No one has yet even thought of including oranges and lemons in the standardization plan, as far as I know. Such a movement would in any case have to originate with the orange growers themselves, and in that event they would be capable of determining whether the present uniformity could be improved. The deciduous-fruit growers and shippers found it necessary to make more uniform their fruit package sizes, but here there was a great diversity of dimensions for boxes and crates containing the same kind of fruit.

For example, Tokay grapes were almost universal'y packed in crates of uniform measurements. But certain shippers who bought their fruit by the packed crate and packed it themselves found more ready sale by adding three or four cleats under the crate lids and packing the baskets high in proportion. A crate thus packed would contain six or eight pounds more than where the cleats were left off. The grower suffered, both in selling to the shipper and in competition in the markets, if he packed his fruit in regulation crates. Laxity of pack, lack of uniformity in weight and different-sized packages led to reforms that are fair both to the producer and the consumer. The main object attained by standardization is the exclusion of unfit fruit, and in that sense the movement would be beneficial to all kinds of fruit shipped from the State. But growers should understand that no plan of reform can be effective or should be tried unless it be first approved by those most concerned—the producers and shippers.

The Largest Grove.

SOME discussion has arisen in citrus circles as to what section has the honor of having the largest orange grove. Commissioner S. A. Pease claims the honor for a southern county in a late statement. He says:

"So far as I know, and I think I do know, the largest citrus orchard in the world is that of the Arlington Heights Fruit Company at Riverside, where 3000 acres are in oranges and lemons, under one ownership.

"I see mention in Los Angeles and local papers, which has been repeated a number of times, giving Porterville credit for the largest orchard of that kind in the world. The Porterville orchard contains 1800 acres. That at Riverside has nearly twice that acreage. It is under the management of James Mills, and there is no need of giving the San Joaquin Valley credit for the largest orchard, when I am quite sure we have it right here in Southern California."

A Predator's Work.

COMMISSIONER SCHELL of Fresno is responsible for the statement that the new ladybug introduced last spring from Manila has already brought the mealy bug under control in the local vineyards. Mr. H. H. Baker, whose vineyard crop at Fresno was referred to in this department as ruined by this pest some weeks ago, says the new predaceous insect saved his crop from total destruction. He reports that the fruit on his Emperor vines thought to be worthless has brought him its full value of $12,000. It is hoped that these accounts are not overdrawn and that the Manila ladybug will continue her alleged good work. We know as yet but little about the field behavior of this beneficial insect. But we do know that it multiplies equally with the Vedalia in the breeding cages and that it attacks the full-grown mealy bug with as much effect as it does the egg masses. It is most difficult to keep supplied with food at the insectary.

Stringed Apples.

GEORGE E. ROWE of Grand Rapids, perhaps our greatest authority upon apples, is on his way home after officiating as chief judge at the Watsonville apple show. He stated that there were thirty-six carloads of apples on exhibition there, while at the national show at Spokane last year but thirteen carloads were displayed and but three at the great Chicago land show the same year. The apples at the Watsonville show, if placed upon a string, would reach 206 miles, which indicates that California does nothing by halves in the exhibition of this favorite fruit. In speaking of stringed apples, that's one way I thought they grew fifty years ago. Every garret and chimney corner was festooned with strings of dried apples, and my earliest recollection associated a trip to the garret with steaming pies and cobblers. Not so palatable as fresh-apple pies, yet everything eatable was delicious "them" days.

Local Bug Collections.

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY is one of the most enthusiastic beneficiaries of the new horticultural commission law. It is conceded throughout the State that the law in effect taking politics out of the selection of commissioners is a wise act. One of the most assuring features is the fact that the Supervisors themselves are drawing closer to their commissioner than when the latter was appointed through outside influence. In a score of the thirty-five counties now under the new law the Supervisors are taking a live interest in the work and responsibilities of their appointee, and everywhere I notice improving relationship between the Supervisors and their horticultural officers.

In San Joaquin county heretofore there was no public or official interest in the work of the three horticultural commissioners. With the one-man commission, all is changed. The Supervisors are now maintaining two offices, the main one at Stockton and a branch office at Lodi. At the latter place a competent and experienced inspector is in charge. He is collecting samples of all destructive insects and plant diseases. Not only are orchard troubles recognized, but farm pests like noxious weeds, samples of grain diseases and blights are on exhibition. Every afternoon the deputy is in this office to consult with the fruit growers and farmers, spending the forenoons with them upon their ranches and in inspecting nursery stock coming into his district. These offices are collecting libraries and dispensing printed literature upon horticulture and kindred interests. I notice also that many boards of Supervisors are authorizing their commissioners to issue publications of their own, dealing with local matters. And the Supervisors are willingly paying the bills for the printing.

Committee of Seven.

THE committee authorized by the Pomona citrus convention, which was attended by over 1000 readers of The Times, has been named and will soon meet and organize for work. This committee was constituted for the purpose of enlisting the Department of Agriculture and all other assistance possible in the study of the citrus-fruit industry from a cultural standpoint. Almost every one connected with this industry believes that there are many problems of the citrus orchard that should have expert examination; that to be effective it should be thorough, long-continued and conclusive and that without it much energy and expense will be wasted in meeting adverse conditions wherever they may occur and whatever their source.

The committee appointed consists of Charles C. Chapman, Fullerton; Charles E. Bemis, Covina; J. Allen Osmun, Whittier; R. C. Allen, San Diego; P. J. Dreher, Pomona; A. F. Call, Corona, and Harry B. Chase, Riverside. Every one of these gentlemen accepted appointment promptly except the latter, who will not be in the State during the organization of the work. This unanimity is most encouraging, as the duties of the members will be arduous if they accomplish what each one so ardently advocates and what will be expected by the attendants at the great Pomona conference. In every acceptance these men have promised to give personal and prompt attention to the charge, and those who know them (and who does not?) will rest assured that the interests of all citrus-fruit growers will be faithfully served.

Gardena Dewberry.

We recently gave a transcript of eastern experience with the Gardena dewberry, a California variety, and now go away from home again to get the news. A Virginia correspondent of the Rural New Yorker writes as follows:

"There has been so much adverse criticism given John Lewis Childs for his introduction of the "Wonderberry" on the east coast, that I feel tempted to say a word of praise for his introduction of the Gardena dewberry. I ordered three years ago 100 of these vines, and set them out in the fall, about November 15, three feet apart in a row in my garden. The next spring as they commenced to grow I twined them up on hog wire 24 inches wide, set one foot above ground and fastened to locust posts placed about 18 feet apart. Not an inch of growth was lost during the spring or summer, and during late fall the tips were allowed to root. Some of the shoots made a growth of 12 feet. During this period they were sided down twice and chicken manure drilled in the furrows twice. During the winter a top-dressing of chicken manure and wood ashes was given them, then mulched with pine straw or needles. The following spring, after taking up over one thousand new plants from the tips that had rooted, they were worked and wood ashes applied again. When they flowered the row was a solid mass of white bloom, a sight to make any man proud. When they fruited they came in over one week earlier than the Lucretia, used by other truckers in this section. We picked over 685 quarts from these original hundred vines, 103 to be exact, and sat on boxes while doing it. The beauty of this wire method over the ground method is that the vines fruit from both sides, thus doubling the yield of fruit, while the shaded sides come in a week later than the southern or sunny side, rows running about southeast by northwest. The pickers can also sit down on boxes or stools, while working, thus saving many a backache. More berries can be picked in less time than on the ground, besides at one-half cost, i. e., one cent a box instead of two cents. The size and flavor of the berries brought me nearly always from a cent to two cents a box more than the other truckers received for theirs. While the initial expense for the wire may seem a great deal, it will soon pay for itself in time and cost of picking berries. The first year I tried this system I was laughed at, as a city crank or book farmer, although the wire idea didn't come from any book."—[Rural Press.

A New Fruit.

A NEW fruit, the Hailshamberry, was exhibited at the fortnightly show of the Royal Horticultural Society in the Horticultural Hall yesterday.

This novelty has been produced by Mr. William Knight of Hailsham from the raspberry and the loganberry, the latter itself a hybrid. It is claimed that the new fruit is as sweet as the finest raspberry, and entirely free from the acidity of the loganberry. In appearance and color it resembles the raspberry.—[London Daily Graphic.

Care of the Body—Suggestions for Preserving Health.

CONDUCTED BY HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N.D., OF THE TIMES STAFF.

PRACTICAL HYGIENE.

[The Times does not undertake to answer inquiries on hygienic subjects that are merely of personal interest, or to give advice in individual cases. Those desiring personal advice should write to the editor of the department for particulars. General inquiries on hygienic subjects of public interest will receive attention in these columns. No inquiries are answered by mail. It should be remembered that matter for the Magazine Section of The Times is in the hands of the printer ten days before the day of publication. Correspondents should send their full names and addresses, which will not be published, or given to others, without the consent of the writers. Addresses of correspondents are not preserved, and consequently cannot be furnished to inquirers.]

Healing by Mental Suggestion.

THE power of the mind over the body, especially when utilized in the form of suggestion—either auto-suggestion or suggestion from the mind of another—has become a popular topic of investigation and discussion during the past few years. As usual, in such cases, most people are inclined to go to extremes. From ignoring the great power of the mind there is now an inclination on the part of some writers and teachers to belittle the importance of the body. What the editor of this department has always taught, and will continue to teach, is the ideal of the ancient Greeks—"a sound mind in a sound body."

Some people take their suggestion straight; others want it sugared—or seasoned—with religion, after the style of Christian Science or the Emmanuel Movement. It is all a matter of taste. Be sure of this, however. No amount of strenuous affirmations or denials will take the place of right living, especially right eating.

"Suggestion: Its Law and Application, or the Principle and Practice of Psycho-Therapeutics," is the title of a book of 472 pages, by Prof. Charles F. Winbigler, of Washington, D. C. (Published by the Spencer A. Lewis Co., Washington, D. C. For sale in Los Angeles by Fowler Brothers, 543 South Broadway.) This is one of the most complete hand-books on the subject that the editor of the Care of the Body has yet seen. The author discusses suggestion in its various forms, hypnotism, and how to use suggestion. He promises that in another book there will be discussed the spiritual phases of the utilization of these principles.

The author assumes throughout this book that there is a conscious and a "sub-conscious" mind. That is Hudson's "law," which is not a law, but merely an assumption—a plausible assumption. Of late there has been a tendency among writers on the subject to question this so-called law, and to assume that the "sub-conscious mind" is merely another form of the ordinary mind. Others of late have claimed that we possess thousands or millions of minds. After all, it is merely a distinction without a difference. All these people know just as much—and just as little— on the subject as you and I, dear reader.

Prof. Winbigler does not entirely ignore the physical. He writes:

"There are essentials of physical life which must be taken into consideration and used. Those essentials are sunshine, air, and water. These are God's gifts to man. There are also clothing, food, and shelter, which man must provide for himself. These six things are necessary to this present form of existence, and he who turns away from or does not use them will show not only lack of judgment, but will suffer. Let any man refuse to get the fresh air, the golden sunshine, refuse to sleep, eat pure food and drink pure water, and I care not how much mental power he may have, he will very soon be in a state of physical collapse."

Yet, a few pages further on he gives a formula of affirmation for the cure of constipation. That may be all right, so far as it goes, but it will not work if you live largely on white bread and cheese, and take little exercise.

Here is a statement in regard to prerequisites for successful suggestion:

"The effectiveness of suggestion depends on its nature, the manner in which it is given, and the mental condition of the recipient. Therefore, from an educational standpoint, the learner ought to be in good physical condition and the senses should be carefully guarded and the health maintained. The blood supply should be normal and the nerve force should be unhindered. There should be a knowledge of anatomy, physiology, and psychology on the part of the instructor, so that the suggestion may be made effectively and received."

The author thus pays his respects to fakers and frauds who flourish in these realms of investigation:

"The clever and the unscrupulous have from time immemorial gulled the simple and the credulous by intrigue, machinations, trickery and the manifestations of a semblance of psychic phenomena. All that is supernormal in those phenomena are a number of rudimentary psychological features which can be easily produced and understood, and which can explain all that is valuable in such mystifying manifestations. This is a day of frauds, imposters, and fakers, and it is time to put a lot of this tomfoolery out of the way of innocent gullibles. The fortune-teller, the spiritualistic medium, the palmist, the occultist, and some other nondescripts, ought to be arrested and put out of business by the law that convicts and imprisons people for getting money under false pretenses."

As to the marvelous cures credited to divine origin, the author writes:

"Many cures more marvelous than those which have been performed by Christian Scientists, faith healers, and other classes who have promulgated teachings that are unreasonable, unscientific and illogical, have been wrought by Charcot, Bernheim, Moll, Forel, Tuckey, Bramwell, and others. They did not teach heresy in order to effect these cures, but used scientific principles which have been discovered, and which are in perfect harmony with all that is true and real. They utilized the great principle of suggestion to cure disease, to change abnormal conditions, to modify mental processes, to bring relief to the afflicted and to the ailing."

"Some of the great revivals, like those in the early history of Methodism and some denominations in this country, and in England, can be explained by the power of suggestion through preaching which stirred the minds of the people. The success of Finney, Cartwright, Moody and Sankey, Evan Roberts, Torrey and Alexander, can thus very easily be understood. Some of these men and others have special hypnotic power over the minds of their hearers, and large numbers are converted and show much zeal and earnestness."

Of spiritualism the author says:

"The trickery of spiritism has been exposed many times, and that which is real phenomena can be explained by the application of phychic principles which have been discovered. Inside of the next twenty years the business financially of this cult will be dead."

In discussing the subject of hypnotism Prof. Winbigler writes: "No one can be successfully put into this condition against his will the first time. A willing subject is the first condition."

The editor of the Care of the Body has frequently asserted that hypnotism is a dangerous thing to "monkey with," because it gradually weakens the will of the subject. Note that the author says you cannot be successfully hypnotized against your will "the first time." How about the tenth and the twentieth and succeeding times?

Persistent auto-suggestion, or self-suggestion, the author regards as the most effective method of removing an abnormal condition and establishing a normal. He says:

"Let one who desires to secure the highest ideals in his life, spiritual, mental, and physical, devote an hour each day systematically to calling up pleasant ideas and memories; let him summon the finer feelings of love and unselfishness and meditate on them, and do this regularly, and he will find at the end of the month a change in himself which will be surprising. Healthful cells will be developed and poisoned cells will have shrunk and will have been eliminated from the system. He will be renewed. Many doubt if quiet talking to one's self, when relaxed and in a restful condition, will work any change in the nature. It has been proven many times that it will. A real desire and willingness to try this method of helpfulness is all that is required to prove the power of auto-suggestion."

The author endorses the extraordinary theory advanced by Hereward Carrington and a few others that heat and energy are not derived from food at all, but are stored up in the body from some mysterious outer source during sleep. As the editor of the department said in reviewing Carrington's book "Vitality, Fasting and Nutrition," this is a most absurd and illogical theory. It is true that a great majority of civilized people eat far too much and sleep too little. If they would eat less and sleep more they would be much healthier and live longer. It is also true that sleep has a wonderful recuperative power. This is due to the fact that during sleep elimination, assimilation, oxygenation and relaxation are greatly increased, and nervous stimulation decreased by darkness. No mystery here. If food were not necessary to sustain life, then the Creator, or nature, made a great mistake in placing these carbo-hydrates and fats and fruit sugars in our nourishment. If food is not necessary to maintain heat and energy, then all you would need would be about two ounces of pure albumen daily, to repair the small amount of waste in the body. Let Dr. Winbigler try this for a few months. He would not last that long, however. He would find that on such a diet he would die sooner than on a complete fast.

Men and brethren, let us try to be sane.

At the end of the volume the author devotes three pages to a list of helpful books, pertaining to the subject of suggestion.

Expensive Fruit

PASSING along Spring street a few days ago the editor of the Care of the Body saw a window full of apples marked "Six for twenty-five cents." No, not six pounds for twenty-five cents, but six apples for a quarter. How this must have astonished Eastern people, who buy their apples by the barrel. It is true they were exceptionally fine large bellefleurs, but think of the price. If the grower should get anything like his fair proportion of such a price an apple orchard would be better than an orange grove. That would be about a cent a bite, for a man with a large mouth. They probably came from Watsonville, in Santa Cruz county, which is as prominent an apple-growing center as Riverside is in orange growing.

Many Eastern people who come to California, the greatest fruit-growing State in the Union, expecting to find fruits of all kinds cheap, are greatly surprised and astonished when they note the prices charged here. Fruit, like everything else—except salaries—has "riz" amazingly. It is not that the producer receives enormous prices. The increase takes place

When you alight from a car before it has quite come to a stop—which you should not do unless you are an adept—you may avoid humiliation and sometimes injury by always getting off facing the direction in which the car is moving and leaning back slightly.

A few days ago, while riding down-town on a Hollywood car the editor of this department witnessed a sad accident. A Hollywood man tried to board the front platform of a car after it had started. He fell, and the car ran over him, crushing one leg and the other foot, and fracturing his skull. Some one has said that a good motto for the American people today would be "Take the next car." There is much truth in this. A majority of people will rush at break-neck speed to catch a car—perhaps an overcrowded one,—for the sake of getting somewhere a few minutes earlier, and then perhaps, when they arrive at their destination they sit down and pick their teeth and wonder what they are going to do next. "Take the next car" will save you much agitation and overstimulation of the heart. As it is, the American people nowadays appear to be hell-bent on the road to the "bug house."

A New Magazine.

"WEALTH and Success" is the title of a new illustrated sixteen-page magazine, although the copy received is marked "No. 3, Volume 12." The editor is Prof. Edward B. Warman, the well-known author and teacher of physical culture. It is published by the "Universal Health and Success Club" at No. 338½ S. Hill street, Los Angeles. This number contains an interesting account of Dr. H. S. Tanner's two fasts, undertaken in New York in 1877 and 1880, which may be said to have inaugurated the practice of fasting for the cure of disease, that has since become quite popular.

Filthy and Unwholesome Food.

THE everlasting question of how to dispose of the garbage has again been up for discussion in Los Angeles, and with it comes the allied subject of feeding this stinking garbage to hogs. As the editor of the Care of the Body has previously observed, a city of the wealth and intelligence of Los Angeles should be ashamed to permit this filthy, unwholesome, disease-breeding practice, for the sake of the dirty dollars that may in that manner be saved.

A great many hogs fed on garbage drop dead. They are so rotten that they are unable to live until they reach the slaughterer. These, however, are only a small proportion of the diseased animals than manage to keep alive until their throats are cut and they are dressed up for human food.

Fifty years ago a physician of the Middle West conducted a series of experiments, extending over six months, at an establishment where thousands of hogs were fed on swill and refuse. He found that at least nine-tenths of these hogs before they were killed contracted consumption of the bowels which is usually known as "hog cholera," making them utterly unfit for human food.

Moses knew what he was about when he forbade the children of Israel to consume the flesh of swine. That is one reason why the Jewish race has remained so vigorous, and is almost entirely free from several diseases that afflict the Gentiles.

Even when kept and fed in a cleanly manner, on alfalfa, and hardened on corn or acorns, the flesh of the hog is not a desirable article of food. The hog is a gross feeder, and to dispose of the surplus of waste matter nature has provided an extra outlet in the legs.

Some people describe the hog as the most useful to man of all animals. As a scavenger, yes, like the dogs of Constantinople and the buzzards of South America. Neither the Turks nor the South Americans are in the habit, however, of eating these scavengers.

The Medical Trust in Arizona.

THE new State of Arizona has been framing a constitution. An attempt has been made to incorporate a law "protecting" the Medical Association. The member who introduced the proposition says his bill "is only in the interest of better sanitary regulations." "That's what they all say." The Phoenix Democrat properly asks why the medical fraternity should need legislative protection any more than an editor, or a merchant, or any other business or professional man. The Democrat adds: "Let these pill men stand on their own records. The people are competent and capable to judge as to whom they wish to employ as their family physician.

The trouble is that the great American public has become sick and tired of medical follies anl failures, and is drifting away from the drug-dispensing school. Now the members of that school are asking the government of the country to help them rivet their medical chains on the rebellious public.

A Wonderful Fiber.

A FEW days ago the editor of the Care of the Body witnessed a demonstration of the new decorticating machine invented by G. W. Schlicten, of New York, importer and manufacturer of ramie. This machine, replacing tedious hand-labor, promises to bring ramie, the most hygienic of all materials for underwear, within the reach of many who cannot now afford it. The machine is almost as ingenious as a linotype. It took Mr. Schlicten ten years to perfect it, and caused him many sleepless nights.

RUPTURE AND UTERINE PROLAPSUS
POSITIVELY CURED NATURALLY

Including All Human Ills

Every animal obeys certain health rules, and man is but an animal subject to the same almighty natural law of health.

Watch how the tiger paces his cage, back and forth. Without that exercise he would die. Now the truth is, you don't give the right kind or proper amount of attention to your health. You eat too much, and do not eliminate sufficient waste. That goes without saying. Perhaps smoke a lot, and maybe drink alcoholic liquors, or eat sweets and pastries. Thus, since in all nature, like attracts like, the poisons in your body resulting from all the various causes above described induce you to continually send them more company down your gullet to breed uric acid poison, which is the forerunner of practically all diseases. And yet you wonder why you do not feel like capering around with the reckless abandon of your youth.

If you mean to keep that heart of your beating millions of times more, see that your three distinct, yet highly co-ordinating mental, structural and vital bodily organisms are kept in prime health—i.e., in perfect harmonious attune with the almighty natural law that governs nature, of which you are but an infinitesimal part.

Try Dr. (NaturAID) Petters-NaturAID—a clean, practical, enjoyable system of inducing a lovely face and form, vigorous mental, structural and vital bodily health, honorable, opulent success in all your undertakings, and the longest, happiest attainable life, adding sweet pleasure to your daily life with only a few moments of daily time spent upon the most precious thing in the world to you—your body—and they are the most pleasant moments in the day.

The machine, with a few alterations, handles not only ramie, but flax, hemp, and any other fiber. Machines will not be sold, but rented. Associations to handle the hemp business are now being formed in all the States of the Union.

Ramie is used not only for underwear, but for outer clothing, for twine and cordage, for furniture covering, and for a number of other purposes. Few people yet realize the great possibilities of this industry, which is particularly adapted to Southern California. An idea of what it means may be gathered from a statement made not long ago by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, who declared that before many years the American ramie industry would exceed in importance the cotton industry. At the request of the Department of Agriculture Mr. Schlichten is forwarding one of his machines to Washington.

The Schlichten company has a field of ramie plants growing below the Imperial Valley, just across the line. The roots raised there will be sufficient to plant about a thousand acres early next year. Ramie is a perennial plant, and from four to six crops can be grown yearly in Southern California, where the soil and climate are right. It looks as if before many years Los Angeles will become a great textile center, working up the cotton and ramie raised in the fertile valleys tributary to her on the north and south.

The Attainment of Efficiency.

DR. W. R. C. LATSON, editor of "Health Culture," is one of the sanest and most interesting writers on health topics. His latest book, "The Attainment of Efficiency," is not a large book, containing less than one hundred pages, but it is worth its weight in gold to any one who follows the author's suggestion. It consists of a number of short chapters. Among the subjects treated are "How to Live the Efficient Life," "Mental Habits," "The Conquest of Worry," "Firmness," "Calmness," "Self-Effacement," "The Attainment of Personal Power," "The Secret of Personal Magnetism," "Physical Endurance," "How to Live Long," "The Gospel of Rest," "Sleeping," "Common Sense Feeding," "How to Have a Fine Complexion," "The Secret of a Beautiful Voice."

In the introduction Dr. Latson says:

"As I define it, personal efficiency is the possession of such powers of body as will make the possessor strong, healthy, active and skillful at whatever task he may be employed; such powers of mind as will qualify him to think clearly, delicately, deeply and originally upon any subject under consideration; such powers of soul as will enable him to be always calm, kindly, thoughtful, controlled, even though the mountains of disaster seem about to topple over upon his head or the deeps of death yawn at his feet.

"The attainment of efficiency depends merely upon obedience to those laws which govern the action of body, mind and spirit—those laws so simple, yet so complex; so kindly, yet so cruel; so infinitesimal, yet so stupendous.

"Some of these laws are of the environment, the great physical and spiritual laws of the universe in which we live and move and have our being.

"Some of these laws are of ourselves, bodily and mental—if anyone desire to make the distinction.

"In themselves the laws are simple; in their application to the spoiled children of what we glibly designate 'civilization' they are infinitely complex—and perplexing."

Dr. Latson declares that the ultimate cause of all disease is faulty mental action. At the first glance this looks as if he leaned to the foolish "all is mind" theory. He goes on, however, to show that rheumatism arises from ignorance or carelessness, or lack of self-control, therefore it arises (indirectly) from faulty mental action. In every case of acute articular rheumatism the author declares we shall find overfeeding, too frequent feeding, improper food, insufficient exertion, over-work, worry, or exposure, or several of these conditions—conditions caused by lack of information, lack of refinement, lack of self-control, or a combination of these—that is to say, mental conditions. In this sense it is, of course, true that all disease is due to mental causes. On the other hand, it is also true, however, that these faulty mental conditions are often due to a foul condition of the body. A man with a colon full of filth cannot possibly think clean thoughts. So there you are again. It is an endless chain.

Continuing, Dr. Latson writes:

"Let us consider for a moment another cause, perhaps the second in importance, of rheumatism. This is sub-elimination or insufficient excretion of the body poisons. Sub-elimination means that the organs through which the waste matter formed in the body should be carried off—that these organs do not do their own work properly; and that, therefore, matter which should be thrown out of the body is retained.

"How can sub-elimination be traced to faulty mental habits? Because sub-elimination merely means that the skin is not properly cleansed, that matter is allowed to accumulate in the alimentary tube and that the lungs, because of indoor living and lack of proper exercise, do not have sufficient ventilation. The man or woman of refined, cleanly instincts will not omit frequent cleansing of the surface of the body, will not allow matter to accumulate in the alimentary tube, and will, in every case, have an appreciation of the charms of fresh air. These conditions are mental, not physical; and thus we trace another cause of rheumatism back to its origin in faulty mental states."

In the chapter on "Mental Supremacy," Dr. Latson denies the theory of "Duality of Mind"—the "objective" and "subjective" mind. He declares that the mind is not dual. It is infinitely multiplex. There are, he says, not two minds. There are millions. The keynote of mental supremacy, he declares, is attention, and he adds that mental power soon becomes a habit.

Writing on the subject of how to live long, Dr. Latson says that of the bodily characteristics of those who reach advanced age he has found three which are most striking and important—an erect carriage, a broad, full chest, and a habit of slow, easy movement. This he has found in every case examined. Another noticeable peculiarity of those who attain great age, he says, is that they are all light eaters. He declares he has never found an exception. This agrees with the experience of life insurance experts, who, among several hundreds of thousands of cases, have no record of a person greatly over-weight dying of old age.

On the subject of diet Dr. Latson writes:

"In diet there are three factors: First and most important is the mental condition under which the food is eaten; second, the condition of the organs into which the food is put; third (and least important,) the kind of food eaten."

This little book is highly recommended to readers of the Care of the Body.

Tomatoes and Tumors.

ABOUT twenty years ago or more some fool started a silly story to the effect that tomatoes cause cancer. For many years the story spread through the press of the country, and doubtless prevented thousands of unthinking people from using this wholesome medicinal food.

Tomatoes are more likely to cure cancer than to cause it. A person who has a cancer or a tumor should adopt a carefully selected diet, of which tomatoes and sub-acid fruits form a leading part.

tistics showing that a drunkard lives longer than a total abstainer if the former is not subject to any other 'disease.' The average age of a drunkard, he says, is fifty-three years; of an immoderate drinker, fifty-seven, and of a moderate drinker, sixty-three. The teetotaler, according to Dr. Isenbart, reaches the age of fifty with difficulty, and his average may be put down as fifty-one years, according to his experience."

Now listen for a loud howl from our friends the prohibitionists. Remember, however, that you must not always believe everything the eminent medical fraternity tells you. Only a few years ago Prof. Atwater, of the Department of Agriculture, declared that alcohol is a food, whereas now it is generally admitted by scientists that alcohol is no more a food than is the lash of a whip when applied to a tired horse.

It is, however, quite true that most people who use neither alcohol nor nicotine eat to excess. Also, most of them consume large quantities of coffee, a stimulant that is more harmful than light wine or beer. These people not only injure their own health, but they develop dyspepsia or other ailments, and make life a hell to all around them. For every person in the United States who suffers from the effects of over-indulgence in alcoholic beverages, a thousand suffer from the effects of over-eating. Yet this is a subject that is almost entirely ignored by our enthusiastic "reformers."

Recently a man of international reputation dropped down in a street car in New York and died a few minutes later on the floor of a drug store. The dispatch stated that he "ate a hearty meal and then went to the home of his brother-in-law where he ate a light luncheon. The physicians thought that the two meals brought on an attack of acute indigestion which was followed by cerebral hemorrhages." The physicians were probably right, in this case. Now, if this man had died from the effects of over-drinking of alcoholic beverages, it would have been regarded as a disgrace, but it seems that it is not considered a disgrace for people to make gluttons of themselves and die of apoplexy. Why?

Men who had never tasted alcoholic beverages have been found after death to possess a well-developed "drunkard's liver," due to the formation of alcohol in the fermenting tub of the stomach.

A man who all his life had been what is known as a "moderate drinker" was in the habit of boasting that he had never been drunk in his life. He gave up alcohol altogether and a few weeks later told a friend that he had been under a delusion—that he had never been sober in his life. This is as true of food drunkards as of liquor drunkards—of those who habitually over-eat, going to the table simply because they have paid their board, and of people who eat a variety of ill-assorted sloppy foods at a meal, turning their stomachs into fermenting vats. And this includes a large majority of men and women.

Such people pass through life after a fashion, but they don't really live. They only exist. They are never quite up to the mark, physically, mentally or morally—never capable of doing the very best that is in them. They suffer from a chronic form of more or less severe auto-intoxication, with partial paralysis of the internal organs from gas pressure.

Flesh Food Unnecessary and Undesirable.

THE eating of the flesh of animals, or birds, or fish, or any other living creature, is neither necessary nor desirable. The original diet of man was fruit and nuts. The killing of animals and the eating of their flesh was introduced following some great cataclysm of nature, which destroyed the vegetable products, just as nowadays we sometimes hear how ship-wrecked sailors are forced to slay and eat each other. A non-flesh diet greatly increases endurance. It also makes a person much less liable to disease. Some diseases, such as cancer, are almost entirely confined to those who consume flesh foods. A non-flesh diet also makes recovery from dangerous wounds marvelously rapid, as has frequently been shown in Japan and India.

All the above facts are now generally admitted by scientists. There are, however, still many people who take it as a matter of course that flesh food is necessary, because their parents and grandparents, for many generations, have been eating meat. Remember, however, that a few centuries counts for little in the history of the world, and of the human race. Besides, more than four-fifths of the population of the globe are and always have been vegetarians—entirely or mostly so either from necessity or from choice.

Where people say they have tried vegetarianism and that it proved a failure, it shows either that they did not give it a fair trial, or else—which is more likely—that they did not select proper substitutes for the flesh food which they abandoned. The mere dropping of flesh from the dietary may not be a step forward, but a step backward, from a hygienic point of view. In fact, the diet of many vegetarians in this country is far from hygienic, and this accounts for their frequent pallid and unwholesome appearance. Starch poisoning does more harm in this country than meat poisoning.

"A Fleshless Diet—Vegetarianism as a Rational Dietary" is the title of a recently published book of nearly 300 pages, by J. L. Buttner, M.D. (Frederick A. Stokes Company, Publishers, New York.) This book gives the results of a thorough investigation of the subject of diet by the author, who is a physician, a surgeon, and a professor at Yale University, where many interesting dietetic experiments have been conducted during the past few years. The author discusses the subject from the anatomical side, describes experiments made both with athletes and with those leading a sedentary life, gives tables of diets, and reproduces statistics bearing on the subject. There are chapters on vegetarianism in disease, and surgery; and diets for various diseases.

This book will be found interesting by those who are not thoroughly acquainted with the arguments in favor of a fleshless diet.

Republican Simplicity.

THE astounding news comes all the way from Chicago by telegraph, and was recently printed in The Times, telling how several swell society women of that city, attired in silks and satins, and wearing costly jewels, went to dine at the modest residence of a laundress who works for them, and that they actually admitted that the meal served them was an excellent one.

What astounding condescencion. One could understand such a thing as this happening in England, or France or Italy, where the higher-ups are in the habit of treating the "lower orders" with patronizing kindness, but to think of such as this happening in the United States in the Year of Our Lord 1910, reminds us that we are still living under a republican form of government.

By the way, it is quite possible that the mothers of some of these condescending ladies supported themselves by taking in washing.

Death Following Operations.

A BAKERSFIELD correspondent sends a clipping from a local paper, telling how a man charged with murder was acquitted, because the deceased did not die at the hospital until after a number of operations had been performed upon him, so that his death might have been a result of the operations. The correspondent asks: "Why don't they arrest the doctors?"

In England there is a growing demand for a coroner's inquest to be held upon those who die after a medical operation. It is a just demand, and should not be opposed by any honest and capable medical men.

Grace Before Meat.

A YOUNG lady who taught a class of small boys in the Sunday school desired to impress on them the meaning of returning thanks before a meal. Turning to one of the class, whose father was a deacon in the church, she asked him:

"William, what is the first thing your father says when he sits down to the table?"

"He says, 'Go slow with the butter, kids; it's forty cents a pound.'" replied the youngster.—[Everybody's.

For Rheumatism and Nervousness—No Cure, No Pay

Rheumatism---Cause and Cure

Too much uric acid in the system is the cause of Rheumatism, Nervousness, Kidney and Liver Troubles, Neuralgia, Backache, and many other complaints. This excess uric acid is a poison—which destroys tissue, retards circulation, and weakens the vital organs.

The only remedy is to eliminate this excess uric acid. The quickest, surest and best way to do this is by wearing Electropodes. These remarkable galvanic insoles remove all poisons and impurities from the entire system—leaving the blood, nerves and tissues in a strong, healthy condition—and every organ free and able to perform its functions properly.

One man in California writes: "I give Electropodes credit for curing my brother in two weeks, of a case of Rheumatism of long standing." Electropodes are sold under a positive binding contract to return your $1.00 if they prove unsatisfactory.

At druggists; or by mail, postpaid. If your druggist cannot furnish Electropodes, send us $1.00, and we will se that you are supplied immediately. State whether for man or woman.

Sold Under This Contract

The purchaser of Electropodes is granted the privilege of returning them within 30 days, and the purchase price ($1.00) is to be refunded upon the following conditions: They are to be worn according to directions for at least 25 consecutive days, and then if not satisfactory, to be returned in original box.

Good Sight

Good Health

Good health is so closely bound up with the possession of good eyesight that the two really go together. Good health is impossible with the nerve drain that comes from eyestrain. No highly nervous person enjoys good health. That happy condition must accompany good nerves.

Eyestrain is a nerve drain, many times a very serious one. It manifests itself with some people as Head aches, with others as Indigestion, with others as an Irritability of Temper. Stop the nerve drain at the right spot is the cure.

Seventy per cent. of nervousness comes from eye strain. In correcting the eyesight I correct this nerve drain. My glasses fit the eyes.

No extra charge for the examination.
